Mr. BAYARD. The honorable Senator has had full opportunity to be heard in this case, and he will have it again; but I make no complaint. I endeavor to recognize the courtesies of debate in the Senate.

Mr. LOGAN. I assure the Senator I meant no discourtesy; I thought it was perfectly satisfactory; and I certainly will not interrupt him again. I thought he would not object to having an understanding of what the Military Committee mean by framing a bill to allow the suspension of promotion in the Army.

Mr. BAYARD. It is very obvious that it is embarrassing to me if every time I make a point in reply to the argument of the honorable Senator or others, he is to rise and meet me upon it. I shall be obliged to him to point out to me any errors of fact I may state; but when it comes to the question of suggesting arguments founded upon the law, I submit it would be better for him to let me get through. But the case of Captain Armes was just this: He has been put out of the Army of the United States by the sentence of a court-martial, and according to the position of the honorable Senator from Illinois and the honorable Senator from Wisconsin that case could not be heard again after the finding had been approved, except before the bar of God. It is shown that Congress did undertake to have that case heard again and without any information save that which it derived through its committee and through an ex parte statement of Captain Armes. It did not simply reopen the case but wholly reversed it. Without the interposition of a court of review; without any interposition from the executive authority, Congress changed that sentence by an act of Congress and said to the man who had been dismissed in dishonor: "You shall be restored in honor and with pay." Is not that an exercise of power, clear, distinct, illustrative of the very power which I now wish to see exercised by the Congress of the United States to remedy a gross injustice.

Mr. President, I do not care to detain the Senate in arguing whether the action of the President of the United States in calling what may be known as the Schofield board of review into existence was warranted by the statute or not. In my judgment it was warranted by the statute. I do not believe that there can be found one line in the Articles of War that raises the bar of a statute of limitations upon the power of presidential pardon and the inquiry which he ought to make for the purpose of review preliminary to any attempt to compensate the party injured and to remedy the injustice to which he may have been subjected. Where is there such a law? Where is the statute that sets a limitation upon his power?

I have heard it said in the course of this debate that it must be exercised by the identical President who approved the finding. What is the result of that? It brings us to a government of men and not a government of law. It is by virtue of the office he can exercise his power of review and as Commander-in-Chief. In this very case is it possible that because the deplored death of Mr. Lincoln took place, all the powers of presidential examination in Porter's case died with him? Suppose the court closes its session on Wednesday and the finding is approved on Thursday, and the President dies on Friday, is it possible that the power of review dies with him? Is it that because the man is dead who at that time was the President and because he held that office had that power, the power is dead? It is not so. The power survives in the office, whoever may fill it. Where is the statute of limitation and who has a right to apply it, and say that mercy shall not be extended, and that justice shall not be done in the face of any subsequent disclosure of facts, because a certain period of time has elapsed?

But, sir, the power of the President to make rules and regulations for the government of the Army to amend and collate articles of war was questioned in 1853, and Mr. Cushing gave a very elaborate opinion to Mr. Dobbin, the then Secretary of the Navy, on the subject. It contains an historical review of the practice under the Constitution; Congress, and not the President, providing these rules and regulations. Mr. Cushing decides and so advises the Secretary of the Navy. I will read his opinion in the sixth volume of Opinions of Attorneys-General, page 15, and at page 18:

I am of opinion, therefore, that the "System of Orders and Instructions," under examination, being a code of laws, and an act of legislation, was in derogation as such of the constitutional powers of Congress, and, as the mere act of the President in a matter not within his executive jurisdiction, is destitute of legal validity or effect.

That was as to the attempt of the President to establish a code, articles of war, and procedure in cases in the naval service, ousting Congress from their confessed jurisdiction over the question.

In the views thus presented, it is not intended to say that the President, as commander-in-chief of the land and naval forces, has not some power to issue directions and orders. So has a commodore in command of a squadron, or a general in the field. But such orders and directions, when issued by the President, must be within the range of purely executive or administrative action.

The Supreme Court, in the case of The United States vs. Eliason, (16 Peters, 301,) declare:

The power of the Executive to establish rules and regulations for the government of the Army is undoubted.

They declare the power to be undoubted. There can be no doubt that, where Congress has occupied the ground, the President cannot transgress the limits marked out by their statute, but where Congress has not occupied the ground and where the act is a military act directly in the purview of the powers of the President as commander-in-chief, then, according to the language of Attorney-General Cushing, he has power to issue orders and directions "within the range of executive or administrative action."

Let us look at the act of Congress, article 115, providing for courts of inquiry:

ART. 115. A court of inquiry, to examine into the nature of any transaction of, or accusation or imputation against, any officer or soldier, may be ordered by the President or by any commanding officer; but, as courts of inquiry may be perverted to dishonorable purposes, and may be employed in the hands of weak and envious commandants, as engines for the destruction of military merit, they shall never be ordered by any commanding officer, except upon a demand by the officer or soldier whose conduct is to be inquired of.

Here then in this article there is a distinct recognition of the essential difference between the commander-in-chief of the Army and the mere commandants of forces under his control. There is a limitation upon the power of the latter, and there is no limitation upon the power of the former, but he may examine into the nature of any transaction or accusation or imputation against any officer or soldier. There is no limitation as to time, no statement of years. He is authorized in the most general way, upon the demand of any officer or soldier whose conduct is to be inquired of, and whenever there is any transaction of or accusation or imputation against him, then he is authorized to examine. What is the fair construction and meaning of that? Fitz-John Porter was in the Army. The transaction was a military one. There were imputations and accusations of the grossest kind; they were upon the record that this court approved; but what can be the acts of the power of review, and for what purpose is it intrusted to the President as broadly as here except for the purpose of being exercised by him? So under that statute, by the advice, with the approval of his constitutional advisers, a court of inquiry was regularly called. It was in accordance with article 116 as to numbers; it was provided with a recorder in accordance with article 117; and in article 118 the powers of that court are set forth:

ART. 118. A court of inquiry, and the recorder thereof, shall have the same power to summon and examine witnesses as is given to courts-martial and the judge-advocates thereof. Such witnesses shall take the same oath which is taken by witnesses before courts-martial, and the party accused shall be permitted to examine and cross-examine them, so as fully to investigate the circumstances in question.

It has been asked what authority had the President to summon this board. I say a fair and reasonable construction of the statute itself would give it; but may it not also reasonably be based upon his power as commander-in-chief of the Army and Navy? He has the inherent power, where not forbidden by statute, for the purpose of reaching justice and the proper control and regulation of the armies of the United States. He has the power to call courts of inquiry for his own information, and courts of review for the examination of past transactions.

I hold it, therefore, that the President of the United States had authority to call that board; that they were called regularly; that their proceedings were regular, and what has been the result? It lies before us in three volumes containing nearly two thousand pages of printed matter; it lies before us in a volume containing twenty-four elaborately and carefully executed military maps. A glance at those maps will show that they were executed by distinguished officers of the United States Engineers, under the direction of George W. McCrary, the Secretary of War. Here is a map called the Piatt map. Let me read:

Engineer Department, U. S. Army, Bvt. Maj. Gen. A. A. Humphreys, Brig. Gen. & Chief of Engineers. Map of Battle-Grounds of August 28th, 29th, & 30th, 1862, in the vicinity of Groveton, Prince William Co., Va. Made by the authority of the Hon. G. W. McCrary, Secretary of War. Surveyed in June, 1878, by Bvt. Maj. Gen. G. K. Warren, Major of Engineers, U. S. A., assisted by Capt. J. A. Judson, C. E., (A. A. Gen. "King's Division,") and H. D. Gurden, C. E., (late Capt. & A. A. Gen. Confed. Army.)

Sir, I do not believe in all the history of military proceedings that a more elaborate, careful, or more convincing mass of testimony was ever presented to the human mind.

Of the three officers composing the court or board I need not speak. They are men of national reputation, all skilled in the art of war, one of them especially skilled in the art of weighing testimony and conducting examination, and aided by the presence on the part of the United States of a vigilant, acute, most energetic recorder as prosecuting officer; the testimony was brought forth by able and accomplished counsel for the accused; so that even granting—which I do not grant—that there was a lack of technical authority for the summoning and constitution of that board, yet I do say that considering its composition, considering the methods pursued, considering the results brought before the country, no finding of any court was ever entitled to more moral weight before the world than the one which is now laid on the desks of every Senator. The mere, strict, technical, legal right to summon the board and to put it in operation, in my judgment, fades away before the enormous force, the moral force, of their findings and of their report to the President, all of which he has laid before us.

And what does this testimony establish? The statement is short. It establishes a complete reversal, a complete refutation, a complete denial, of every essential fact relied upon to justify the conviction of General Porter in 1863. The charges, in short, against General Porter, were, first, that being ordered on the night of the 27th of August, 1862, to move his army corps toward a certain point he neglected and disobeyed the order, to the violation of military discipline and the defeat of the plans of the commanding general. What is the answer to that, in proof? It is shown conclusively that the movement of his corps desired to be effected by the order given by General Pope was in fact accomplished by him more speedily, more effectually, more successfully than if he had commenced his movement at the identical hour at which he was ordered, to wit, one o'clock at night; that there is a reason in all things; that on a dark and rainy night, with roads encumbered with wagon-trains, his men fatigued and utterly worn-out, he believed and knew that an economy of their strength to be secured by a further rest of two hours and the approach of daylight would enable him to make progress to reach the point to which he had been ordered infinitely sooner than if he had started at the hour of one. So the proof is that he did in fact reach the point to which he had been ordered in full time for the accomplishment of everything that was designed by the order. So far from there being disobedience in spirit it is proven that there was a complete performance of the service designed for him, because he brought his army corps to the point at an earlier hour, and in better condition, than it would have reached had the letter and not the spirit of the order in question been followed by him.

He then was charged with having on the evening of the following day disobeyed the joint order issued to himself and General McDowell. For that he has been held responsible; of that he was found guilty and sentenced to be dismissed in disgrace. What are the facts as stated by General McDowell himself? In answer to that it is conclusively shown and proved now by General McDowell himself, that any departure from the joint order of General Pope issued to himself and Fitz-John Porter was owing to his own act as the ranking officer by virtue of seniority when he and Porter were together.

I read from page 751, in which General McDowell admits that the withdrawal of the division of General Ricketts from Porter's force was his own act, without the authority of General Pope and of course beyond the control of General Fitz-John Porter. At page 750 General McDowell testifies:

The ordering of Ricketts to Thoroughfare Gap was not in accordance with any plan of operations made with the consent of General Pope.

And at page 751:

I suppose that all the movements of the witness were under the direction of General Pope.

The WITNESS. All the operations of my corps were, in a general way, by direction of General Pope; but in carrying out those instructions I varied from them; and in this particular case I varied from them against his wish and not with his approval.

And see the same witness at pages 752 to 756.

What were those variations? Among them was included the withdrawal of the two divisions of Ricketts and King, which completely changed the face of the whole matter. The withdrawal of the division of General Ricketts from Thoroughfare Gap, and of King from Warrenton pike where it had been posted for the purpose of preventing the union of the forces of Jackson with those of Longstreet, enabled that union fatally to take place, and that was not done by order of Porter. The disobedience here designed to be expressed is the annulment of the joint order by General McDowell under the discretion given in that joint order. General McDowell says, (page 82, volume 1:)

When that joint order reached us we were doing what that joint order directed us to do. That joint order found the troops in the position in which it directed them to be.

And he then took King from Porter, and joining Ricketts to King, turned back and away from Porter, up the Sudley Spring road toward Groveton.

Not only that act, but all that resulted from that act and the charge that is based upon the supposition that this disobedience was the act of Porter, falls to the ground, for it is proven to be the act of McDowell, himself confessing that it was he who violated the joint order of Pope to himself and Fitz-John Porter, of which General Pope accuses Porter.

What was the next charge? I have referred to the charge that he did not obey Pope's joint order of August 29 to McDowell and himself to move toward Gainesville. The answer to that is shown by McDowell himself, that by virtue of seniority he was the officer in command, and that it was under his orders that Porter acted, under his orders that the division of Ricketts was moved back from Thoroughfare Gap and King's division diverted from joining Porter's forces, and Porter thus deprived of the forces necessary to carry out the joint order issued to him and McDowell.

The next charge is that on the 29th of August, being with his army corps between Manassas Station and the field of battle then pending, "and within sound of the guns, and in the presence of the enemy, and knowing that a severe action of great consequence was being fought, and that the aid of his corps was greatly needed, did fail all day to bring it on to the field, and did shamefully fall back and retreat from the advance of the enemy, without any attempt to give them battle, and without knowing the forces from which he shamefully retreated."

This is alleged on the 29th of August, 1862. Now, there comes a frightful fact. After that charge was not only made but sustained by the deposition of General McDowell himself, based upon I know not what, the fact is disclosed by his last examination that he was dealing with the events of a totally different day. It is proven beyond all doubt that there was no such general battle raging on the 29th, and that which General Pope and General McDowell had alleged to be this great and severe battle, which Fitz-John Porter heard and shamefully retreated from, or heartlessly listened to without moving, did not take place on the day he alleged it to have taken place. In other words, the fatal, the vital mistake was made in the mind of General McDowell, of confusing the 30th with the 29th day of August. Turn to his testimony on that subject on pages 734, 735, 736, 737, and 738. He had quoted the extract of the report of General Stonewall Jackson, showing that his forces had been placed in great jeopardy by the impetuous and fierce attacks of the United States forces on a given day, and but for the timely approach of re-enforcements from Longstreet, Jackson would have been overcome. The mistake of General McDowell was in reading the report of General Jackson, that he thought Jackson was alluding to the affair of the 29th, when upon examination it turns out that Jackson was alluding to the 30th, of which I shall presently speak. He is asked:

If you had observed that, you would have seen that the extract which you quoted as relating to the 29th was intended to set forth in the report what related to the 30th.

A. If you have read it correctly, I would.

Q. Well, look and see. [Book handed to witness.]

The RECORDER. I object to that book being put in the hands of the witness for any such purpose.

The PRESIDENT OF THE BOARD. This book has been admitted for the purposes of this cross-examination. The objection made by the Recorder has been ruled upon.

The WITNESS. From reading this I am entirely satisfied that I was in error in supposing that report to refer to the 29th.

Q. It did in fact refer to the 30th, and was so given by General Jackson?

A. Yes. It was a mistake that I made.

On page 738, after a good deal of fencing with the witness, who seemed very much and naturally embarrassed by this testimony, the question is asked:

How long did you remain of the impression that this extract printed by you from General Jackson's report did refer to the 29th?

A. Until about fifteen minutes ago.

So that by the testimony of this distinguished officer upon whose averments and knowledge the conviction of 1863 was chiefly found, he was trying this man upon the wrong state of facts; he was trying him for the events of the 30th on the 29th. But there is much more in that mistake than I have yet adverted to. It shows that the whole fabric of General McDowell's testimony as to this man's conduct on the 29th falls to the ground, and he is compelled to admit that he had wholly mistaken the report of General Jackson upon which he based his joint publications with Pope that this man was guilty of cowardly, inhuman dereliction of duty on the 29th.

But more, sir, another charge against General Porter to be considered in relation to the charge that on the 29th of August he was guilty of this great wickedness, is that he disobeyed the order of 4.30 p. m. on the 29th to attack the enemy and retreated from the advancing forces of the enemy without any attempt to engage them or to aid the troops who were already fighting against greatly superior numbers and were relying on the flank attack he was ordered to make to secure a decisive victory, and to capture the enemy's army, results which must have followed from such flank attack had it been made by General Porter in compliance with said order.

Here comes another answer disclosed at last by the mercy and justice which ordered this rehearing of the case. The fact appears, that the order of four o'clock and thirty minutes p. m. of the 29th did not reach General Porter until after six o'clock, and the proof of that is found in page 769, in the testimony of General McDowell. I will read from his testimony on page 771 first:

Q. Three dispatches from General Porter to yourself have been read here by the recorder. You, I suppose, furnished him with those dispatches?

A. I was called upon by the board to do so, and I furnished them to him.

Q. How long have you had those?

A. About sixteen years.

Q. Have you had them ever since you received them from General Porter that day?

A. I suppose so. I didn't know I had them.

The RECORDER. I will state here that I omitted, inadvertently, to produce those by the witness, and mentioned the fact to the examining counsel that I intended to produce them.

Mr. CHOATE. They are considered as introduced.

Q. You have had them in your possession ever since they were received?

A. I found them when the request was made to me by the board. I looked among my old papers and found those dispatches.

Q. Will you tell me why they were not produced on the trial of General Porter by court-martial?

A. I could not.

Q. Why did not you produce them?

A. I was not aware that I had them. I was surprised to find them. If I had immediately answered the request of the board, I should have said I had not any thing of General Porter's in my possession.

Q. Have you not the habit of preserving the papers which you receive?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it not a particular habit with you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Don't you make it a rule to preserve all the official papers that you receive?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then you knew that whatever you received from General Porter you still had, did you, when you went to testify on the court-martial and to make an examination to see what papers or dispatches you had from him that would tend to show the truth of these events?

A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Why not?

A. Because my attention was not drawn to it. I tell you now, I did not know I had those dispatches.

Q. Did not you think it your duty, in giving testimony against a brother officer, to make an examination of the dispatches you had received from him in order that full justice should be done him?

A. I was brought before the court not knowing what questions would be asked me. I answered such questions as were asked me. At the time I was before that court I did not know that I had those dispatches. I could have just as well brought them then as now. If you want to imply that I suppressed those dispatches, I say to you I could as well suppress them now as then.

The questions asked at the former trial were then read to him:

Q. Can you recollect whether on that day you received any message or order at all from General Porter?

A. Yes, sir; I received messages from him on that day.

Q. Can you tell the court particularly about any of those messages?

A. I answered one of his messages in writing, but I have no copy of that note. I do not know whether I wrote it or whether it was written by another and signed by me. I think his notes were asking how the battle was going on or what was the condition of things with us, so far as I can recollect.—G. C. M. Rec., page 220.

Now, as you state that you had a fixed habit of preserving all official papers that you received, did not you regard it as your duty, when the question was put to you so pointedly on the trial of General Porter, to look for those dispatches, that the truth might be known?

A. I have answered your question once before. I had no memory of having received those dispatches at the time of General Porter's trial. I wish I had had those dispatches then. They would have established a point.

Q. You need not argue.

A. You imply that I suppressed those dispatches. There is an implication of that in your question which I wish to resent.

Q. You will answer first and then resent.

A. My answer was that when I went before that court I did not know as to what I was to be interrogated. I did not know at that time that those dispatches were in my possession; and that I was surprised the other day to find them there; that I wished that I had known of them. I wished I had produced them at the time, because they established a point I should like very much to have established.

Q. Against General Porter?

A. In my favor.

Q. And against General Porter?

A. Not as I view it. This dispatch, "I failed to get Morell over to you." I should like to have had that point come up on the trial.

Q. Now will you please answer the question whether, when the matter was so pointedly brought to your attention, and messages were inquired for, you did not regard it as your duty to find and produce them, that the truth might be known?

A. I told you that I did not know that I had those dispatches.

Q. You knew it was your fixed habit to preserve all dispatches, and those dispatches were called for by the board?

A. No, sir; they didn't know that such dispatches were in existence.

Q. The question was whether you had received dispatches, and you said you had several, and you gave all that you thought were from General Porter. Didn't it occur to you that it was your duty to produce them, that the truth might be known?

A. I tell you over and over again that I did not know I had them. How could I, therefore, have failed to produce them?

What were those dispatches? The first dispatch was as follows:

GENERAL McDOWELL: The firing on my right has so far retired that, as I cannot advance, and have failed to get over to you except by the route taken by King, I shall withdraw to Manassas. If you have anything to communicate please do so. I have sent many messengers to you and General Sigel and get nothing.

F. J. PORTER, Major-General.

An artillery duel is going on now—been skirmishing for a long time.

F. J. P.

The second dispatch:

GENERAL McDOWELL or KING: I have been wandering over the woods and failed to get a communication to you. Tell how matters go with you. The enemy is in strong force in front of me, and I wish to know your designs for to-night. If left to me I shall have to retire for food and water, which I cannot get here. How goes the battle? It seems to go to our rear. The enemy are getting to our left.

F. J. PORTER, M. G. Vols.

The third dispatch:

GENERAL McDOWELL: Failed in getting Morell over to you. After wandering about the woods for a time I withdrew him, and while doing so artillery opened on us. My scouts could not get through. Each one found the enemy between us, and I believe some have been captured. Infantry are also in front. I am trying to get a battery, but have not succeeded as yet. From the masses of dust on our left, and from reports of scouts, think the enemy are moving largely in that way. Please communicate the way this messenger came. I have no cavalry or messengers now. Please let me know your designs; whether you retire or not. I cannot get water and am out of provision. Have lost a few men from infantry firing.

F. J. PORTER, Maj. Gen. Vols.

AUG. 29—6 p. m.

That order, worth a thousand men's memories, that written paper, after sixteen years—I will not say of seclusion or suppression, but sixteen years of non-production, appears here to give the lie to this charge against this brave man. It is a complete refutation that he ever received that order of half past four o'clock of that afternoon in time to make the attack which he was directed to make. In fact, the time had passed, and not only the time but the power of making such an attack practicable at all had passed, because orders of Pope and McDowell had withdrawn from him the very troops, Ricketts' and King's divisions, whose place was supplied by the armed forces of the enemy.

Now, of the 30th of August. They all declare that after six o'clock on the 29th military operations for that night had ended. I mean the operations intended of an attack in force. There necessarily was skirmishing, but the battle no longer partook or was proposed to partake of a general or serious character. Then comes Thursday, the 30th. Was that day the day of this man's glory or was it the day of his shame? Who can speak so well as the man he met? Who is there North or South, East or West, to decry the judgment of Stonewall Jackson as to a soldier's capacity for fighting? None could be called who would attest it more freely than those who opposed him in battle. What did he say? What was his report on that 30th day of August? It was that such attacks were made with such fury and gallantry upon the part of the United States forces that nothing but the fortunate re-enforcement by General Longstreet prevented his overthrow.

Read the words of Jackson's own report to Lee, at page 733:

In a few moments our entire line was engaged in a fierce and sanguinary struggle with the enemy. As one line was repulsed another took its place, and pressed forward, as if determined by force of numbers and fury of assault to drive us from our position. So impetuous and well sustained were these onsets as to induce me to send to the commanding general for re-enforcements, but the timely and gallant advance of General Longstreet on the right relieved my troops from the pressure of overwhelming numbers, and gave to those brave men the chances of a more equal conflict.

And now Senators, ask yourselves, ask General McDowell, ask the American people whose heart and brain directed the attack, and whose splendid courage came very near overwhelming the forces of Stonewall Jackson? Whose troops were then in front of Jackson and Longstreet? Whose valor caused Jackson to be grateful that re-enforcements had reached him just in time for his safety? It was Fitz-John Porter; it was the valor of the troops he commanded. Sir, that which was published by Pope and McDowell for his shame will stand forever the monument of his honor and fidelity. The facts are there; they cannot be erased; they cannot be gainsaid; they stand to-day and they will burn themselves into the consciences of the American people so long as memory shall last. [Applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. GARLAND in the chair.) Silence in the galleries.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I have read with interest and feeling the whole of the testimony in this case. Originally a distinguished man, with whom my relations were those of friendly confidence, sent me his arguments and the papers connected with the case of Porter at the time of the original trial—I refer to Hon. Reverdy Johnson—and he and I had some correspondence upon the subject. After that, from his judgment, from the opinions published at that time, I am frank to confess that I was a believer in the injustice of the finding of that court-martial. I thought that Fitz-John Porter had been tried in a time when reason slept and when passion raged; that he was the victim of a heated, unwholesome atmosphere; that the report of the Senate in Hammond's case might have applied to him. I may read it. It seems a little florid in style, but it is true:

The period when the difficulties originated between Secretary Stanton and Surgeon-General Hammond was one replete with perplexities and troubles. A great civil war was in progress, large armies were arrayed in active hostilities, and the issue of events was uncertain and indeterminate. There were, of necessity, antagonisms, ambitions, and jealousies without number, embarrassing and hampering the authorities. Chaos reigned supreme, and the untoward fate of a single person, just or unjust, merited or unmerited, whether in exalted or humble station, weighed not a feather in the momentous balance. Men of elevated rank and reputation were cast from their high estates to give place to others, in some cases the experiment utterly failing and the speculation proving valueless, while in others yielding good return. Success was the touchstone, and to the Moloch of its attributes, or what was conceived to be its necessities, victims were daily, nay hourly, sacrificed. Into this whirlpool of events Dr. Hammond was drawn and carried down. The history of that era is an open book, known to and read by all the world.

Sir, it is a true picture of the excited condition of feeling at that time. But still there were minds competent to judge. If the Senate were passing upon the question of a pension, in the case of a man who died of wounds received in service or in consequence of his exposure in the public behalf, whether the symptoms of the petitioner were such as entitled him to relief according to the well-known rules of granting pensions, would not the Senate feel itself bound in great degree by the opinion of eminent physicians and surgeons? Would not the opinion of men especially skilled in that art be relied upon then to form their judgment as to the granting of the pension? So I take it in regard to the weight of testimony. Weighing testimony is a thing of skill. Men's minds must be trained to adjust fact to fact in order to obtain a fair proportion out of which truth arises, and upon men who have made the study of testimony and its laws the work of their lives the greatest reliance must be placed. What names are here? What a catalogue can I find of the men who not in case, not in passion, not in envy, and surely not in malice, took this case into their calm and careful consideration. At page 528 will be found the honored names of Benjamin R. Curtis, of Daniel Lord, of Sidney Bartlett, of Judge Abbott, of William C. Shipman, of Charles O'Connor, of Reverdy Johnson—all agreeing in opinion that the testimony before the court of January, 1863, did not convict Fitz-John Porter, but that it did acquit him. Read their letters to be found at pages 535, 536, and so on to page 540. What shall I say as the weight of testimony to guide me in my vote contained in the report of the Schofield board? Who shall better inform us of military facts than a board of skillful soldiers? Who can better instruct us in the canons of military duty and soldierly fidelity in all these transactions so fully placed in evidence, than three distinguished military men, whose honor is without stain? It would be a grateful task to supply my poor words by theirs, to choose extracts from this report to show how overwhelming and conclusive in their minds has been this testimony, and how entirely this suspected and condemned man has been exonerated, how he who was charged with being a traitor is a hero and a patriot. Let me read one sentence. Speaking of the fight of the 29th of August, after the order of half past four might have reached, and probably had reached General Porter, it then being after six—

Any attack which Porter could have made at any time that afternoon must necessarily have been fruitless of any good results. Porter's faithful, subordinate, and intelligent conduct that afternoon saved the Union Army from defeat which would otherwise have resulted that day from the enemy's more speedy concentration. The only seriously critical period of that campaign, viz, between eleven a. m. and sunset of August 29, was thus safely passed. Porter had understood and appreciated the military situation, and, so far as he had acted upon his own judgment, his action had been wise and judicious. For the disaster of the succeeding day he was in no degree responsible. Whoever else may have been responsible, it did not flow from any action or inaction of his.

Closing the history of this terrible battle. They show what they term the fierce and gallant struggle of Porter's own troops on the 30th which had been used to sustain the original error, which was that the fight that occurred was on the 29th, under which he was condemned. General Porter was in effect condemned for not having taken any part in his own battle.

Such was the error upon which General Porter was pronounced guilty of the most shameful crime known among soldiers. We believe not one among all the gallant soldiers on that bloody field was less deserving of such condemnation than he.

Mr. President, there is a key-note to the animus of Fitz-John Porter at that time, and through those dreadful scenes which I will read. It is to be found at page 25. General McClellan in his testimony avers that he sent a dispatch to General Porter exhorting him in the strongest words to give to Pope every aid and every succor that he could have accorded to him. He testifies that he wrote that dispatch not that he had the faintest doubt that General Porter would give every aid in his power to sustain his commander, General Pope, not that he doubted for one moment the fealty of his brave companion in arms and true friend, but it was written at the suggestion of President Lincoln, who said that there were rumors of sore feelings between the officers and against General Pope upon the part of his subordinates, which made him think it perhaps would be wise if General McClellan sent this exhortation, this message from his heart to those who knew and loved him so well. At page 25 is the response of Fitz-John Porter to that dispatch of General McClellan, and this dispatch I say strikes the key-note of that man's heart through the whole of these transactions:

FAIRFAX C. H., 10 a. m., September 2, 1862.

You may rest assured that all your friends, as well as every lover of his country, will ever give, as they have given, to General Pope their cordial co-operation and constant support in the execution of all orders and plans. Our killed, wounded, and enfeebled troops attest our devoted duty.

F. J. PORTER,
Major-General Commanding.

General GEORGE B. MCCLELLAN, Washington.

Yes, sir, those killed, wounded, enfeebled troops did attest their devotion to duty. It was that devotion to duty of Fitz-John Porter and the brave men under his command that saved what was saved of the Army of the United States on the 30th day of August, 1862. If men wish to understand how he felt on that day, let them read the unconscious testimony of the man when he sent to McClellan this response to his telegram. General Pope testifies that he would not allow this telegram to be forwarded, and says he was forbidden to send that dispatch to General McClellan by orders of his superior officer, but it would have told McClellan no more than he well knew before. It tells the American people that which they knew before, which they only will believe in the more as time rolls on—that Porter was ever faithful and true.

Mr. President, I must apologize to the Senate for the length of time and the very imperfect manner in which I have discussed this case. It after all rests with the care and the patience of Senators themselves to make that examination of the testimony should they have doubt of the testimony, or of the law should they have doubt of the law, of the power of Congress to assist the President in every way in having justice done to this officer.

Something has been said about his receiving the pay and allowances of his rank. Upon my soul, I think it is scarcely worth mentioning. It seems to me that the great act is the act of restoration, and that this incident, the payment of money that was due to him fairly under law, should go with it. If it be true, and who can doubt it is true, that for fifteen years this man has sat with a crushed and aching heart asking for justice at the hands of his Government, what money can compensate him? Who among us would for money's sake stand for one week with that dreadful, slow, unmoving finger of scorn pointed at us, conscious all the while of its cruel and bitter injustice? If you unbolted your Treasury and poured its contents at his feet it would be nothing to him as compared to that which he has suffered. It really seems to me this point is insignificant and small beyond notice.

In the course of this debate I have heard it said, "Wait until you hear from the people on this subject." Well, Mr. President, I hope we will hear from the people; but before we hear from the people I want them to hear from me. I am not waiting for the echo of popular applause or condemnation. I think no greater insult can be offered to the people of America than to tell them that you suppose they will condemn a public man who tells the truth, and endeavors to do justice. [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.] Is it service to the people to distrust them and conceal from them your real judgments? Oh, sir, there rang out in the ages long ago from the lips of the aged patriarch in the depth of his sorrows, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him;" and shall not we trust in those we profess to serve? Shall we not trust in those who we say are virtuous, honest, and intelligent? Shall we not vote and speak according to the conscience that has been placed in the breast of every man among us? This country of ours is one of the leading nations of the world, and little minds are not fit to govern it. If this Government should fall and go down amid the tears of those who love constitutional liberty and republican freedom, close to the root of its cause of failure will be found the fact that her representative and public men disguised their honest opinions and failed to tell the people the truth, as they knew it to exist. [Applause in the galleries.]

Mr. McDONALD. Mr. President—

Mr. WHYTE. Will the Senator from Indiana give way that I may move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business?

Mr. McDONALD. I understand that the Senator from Illinois wishes to say something now.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I desire just about five minutes on one proposition, if the Senator from Indiana will allow me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. WALLACE in the chair.) Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. LOGAN. I understand the Senator from Indiana yields to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will be in order.

Mr. LOGAN. Of course, I do not intend to detain the Senate, and I would not rise were it not for the fact that I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] to one of his propositions in regard to the law concerning courts of inquiry. He read the statute in reference to courts of inquiry, which applies to officers of the Army, and then stated to the Senate that this board, called the Schofield board, was authorized by that provision of the statute. I am certainly very much astonished that so good a lawyer as the Senator from Delaware should say that that was a board organized under this provision of the statute, when the statute provides expressly that a court of inquiry shall be called on the request of an officer of the Army to inquire into his own conduct.

Mr. BAYARD. I beg the Senator's pardon, the law requires that where such courts of inquiry are called by a commanding officer they shall be called at the request of the officer whose conduct is complained of, but it does not require a court of inquiry to be called at the request of an officer where the President orders it.

Mr. LOGAN. A court of inquiry is in reference to the conduct of an officer in the Army, not in reference to the conduct of a citizen.

Mr. BAYARD. May I read the section to the honorable Senator?

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. BAYARD. I will read it:

ART. 115. A court of inquiry, to examine into the nature of any transaction of, or accusation or imputation against, any officer or soldier, may be ordered by the President or by any commanding officer; but as courts of inquiry may be perverted to dishonorable purposes, and may be employed, in the hands of weak and envious commandants, as engines for the destruction of military merit, they shall never be ordered by any commanding officer, except upon a demand by the officer or soldier whose conduct is to be inquired of.

Mr. LOGAN. Exactly. Now, Mr. President, the Senator totally misapprehends me. That law applies in no sense whatever to a citizen; it applies to an officer or a soldier in the Army. A court of inquiry may be called on the request of an officer or soldier in the Army by a commanding officer; but for the purpose of preventing what is stated there the President himself may call it. Now, will any Senator, I care not who he may be, pretend for one moment that a court of inquiry as known in military parlance, under the military law, can be called for the purpose of inquiring into the conduct of a citizen? No man has ever made such an assertion that I have ever heard of prior to this day. Fitz-John Porter was a citizen of the United States when this board was called, and not an officer of the Army, not a soldier in the Army, and it was called by the President, not under this section, but outside of any law whatever.

Mr. BAYARD. May I say this to the Senator: Fitz-John Porter's conduct which was under investigation was when he was a soldier in the Army; therefore it was a military question which was under consideration. This board of review never asked a question as to what Fitz-John Porter had done since 1862. They were not called for the purpose of asking what Porter had done since 1862; they were not called to consider Fitz-John Porter as a private citizen. The matter they inquired of was the action of Fitz-John Porter when a major-general of the Army, and what he did,—what were the accusations against him, the imputations upon him, not when he was a private citizen, but when he was a soldier in the Army. It is begging the whole question to say that you cannot inquire into acts performed at a period when he was distinctly within the letter of the statute.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, the proposition I make is this: not that the President may not ask a board of officers to give him information, as I said the other day, for the purpose of ascertaining the propriety of a pardon; but that under this section of the law the President of the United States has no right to call a board of officers to examine into the conduct of a citizen as a citizen or as a soldier or as an officer when that officer or soldier no longer belongs to the Army.

Now let us see what a court of inquiry is constituted for. A court of inquiry in the Army is constituted to ascertain what? To ascertain whether or not the conduct of the officer to be inquired into has been such as to authorize the preferring of articles against him to bring him before a court-martial. That is the object and intention of it, and it always has been so understood. No lawyer in this country before has ever pretended that a court of inquiry of Army officers could be organized for any other purpose, and I must say that I was astounded at the statement of the Senator from Delaware in reference to the proposition.

Mr. BAYARD. May I ask the honorable Senator from Illinois a question—

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir. I will be more generous with the Senator than he was inclined to be with me toward the last.

Mr. BAYARD. Suppose the court-martial has been held and the finding has been approved and the officer is dismissed from the Army, he then ceases to be a soldier.

Mr. LOGAN. I say he does.

Mr. BAYARD. I am speaking of your reasoning now. Let me ask what is the purpose of this board of inquiry or review but to open those very proceedings?

Mr. LOGAN. This is not a board of inquiry at all. There is no such thing as a board of inquiry.

Mr. BAYARD. I am speaking of the board authorized by the section of the statute I have just read.

Mr. LOGAN. That is a court of inquiry to inquire into the conduct of an officer in the Army, to see whether or not he shall be put before a court-martial for trial, and that is the purpose and object of it, and it has always been so understood.

Now, sir, the Senator will agree that when the judgment of a court-martial, approved by the President, dismisses an officer from the Army he is out of the Army and becomes a citizen. Does he not agree to that?

Mr. BAYARD. And I do also say that the power of review for the purpose of restoring him does not cease, that courts of inquiry for the purpose of establishing a review may be called, and that we over and over again in the history of our legislation have approved them and have ratified the restoration of a man.

Mr. LOGAN. No matter what the history has been, it has been done by law. The President has no law, the Secretary of War has no lawful authority, you can find it nowhere, to call a court of inquiry to examine into the conduct of a citizen, no matter how long ago or how short ago he may have been in the Army. That is not the purpose. It never was intended and never has been done. I asserted that this board was without authority of law. The Senator undertakes to meet that by talking about a court of inquiry that may be called by the President, or by the officer asking it of his commanding general. What officer can ask for it? An officer in the Army asking of his commanding general to organize a court of inquiry to inquire into his conduct so that he may exculpate himself, or for the purpose of preventing certain oppressions, the President may do it himself. Do it for what? To examine the conduct of the officer to see whether he will put him before a court-martial or not.

That is the object; but what was done in this case? When the information came to the President of the United States in reference to this man's conduct, he called a court-martial, as he had a right to do under the law, without a court of inquiry; and he having been court-martialed, that is the end of the law, so far as it applies to him as a military officer, and no court of inquiry can take jurisdiction of him under military law.

Now, one other point I wish to call the Senator's attention to, and it is in reference to the evidence. I beg pardon of the Senate for again taking the floor, but I will not, while this question is being discussed, sit here and allow a perversion of the testimony or the law, if I can prevent it. The Senator says that McDowell's testimony before this board shows that he made a mistake before the court-martial—I so understood the Senator—that he testified before this board that he was mistaken in reference to General Jackson's report, and used the 30th for the 29th.

Mr. BAYARD. In his reports and also in his written statement.

Mr. LOGAN. Whose written statement?

Mr. BAYARD. General McDowell's.

Mr. LOGAN. I am coming to that, and I will answer it. The Senator left the impression before the Senate that General McDowell had sworn before the court-martial to that effect.

Mr. BAYARD. I meant to give this view to the Senate—

Mr. LOGAN. Whatever you meant to give, I am speaking of the impression left—

Mr. BAYARD. I cannot speak as to that.

Mr. LOGAN. Let me answer if the Senator will allow me. I will not misrepresent him at all.

Mr. BAYARD. Not willingly I am sure.

Mr. LOGAN. What do you mean by it?

Mr. BAYARD. I mean to say this: General McDowell had made statements, written statements and oral statements—I do not know whether they were in his prior testimony or not—but he had circulated freely his account of the transactions of the 29th and 30th of August, which convicted Porter of standing by cruelly and allowing his associates to be massacred and making no attempt to relieve them, which he bases on the report of Stonewall Jackson, and that he was not aware of his error until fifteen minutes before the time he was examined last by the board at West Point.

Mr. LOGAN. I understand that.

Mr. BAYARD. So that the very fact of Porter's gallantry on the 30th of August, 1862, was used for the purpose of condemning his conduct on the 29th.

Mr. LOGAN. Now I will show the Senator exactly where he misunderstands this statement. I have read the testimony, I think about as often as any other Senator. The evidence that he refers to is a statement that General McDowell made in answer to General Porter's application to the President for a rehearing. He made a written statement, written after the court-martial, years afterward, in which he quoted from General Jackson's report and quoted one paragraph as relating to one day, when it should have been quoted as relating to another day. But let us see what effect that had on the court-martial.

There was no such testimony before the court-martial; no such statement was made; no reference was made to General Jackson's report before the court-martial. General Jackson's report had not been seen at that time. And let me call the Senator's attention to the fact that General Jackson's report of the battle of the 29th and 30th was found among his papers after he was dead. Hence McDowell could not have known anything about it at the time of the court-martial. It would be very well for the Senator to state these things as he goes along. It was found among General Jackson's papers, found by his adjutant-general, referring to these battles. I read from it myself right here from this desk, reviewing the paragraph where he speaks of the 30th, and without that, General Jackson's report shows that the battle of the 29th was a severe battle, and so does all the evidence.

The object of the Senator by making this statement and seeking to put General McDowell in a false position was to try to prove that there was no battle on the 29th. That was his object, for he so stated. Now I state, and he knows it to be the fact if he has read this testimony, that in the battle of the 29th King's division and Reynolds's division of General McDowell's corps were both engaged in that battle from five up to eight o'clock, and lost over fifteen hundred men on the 29th. The testimony of Stuart, of the confederate cavalry, of General Lee, the commander of the confederate army, of General Longstreet, of Rosser, of every one of those men, shows that a battle was fought on the 29th and a severe battle, and as I said the other day the only battle of Porter that day was with the dust and the brush that was in his front.

Now one other point—

Mr. McDONALD. I think I have yielded long enough.

Mr. LOGAN. Just one moment in answer to one other proposition of the Senator from Delaware, for as I said I want this thing to be fair and honest on both sides, no misrepresentation. The testimony of General McDowell cannot be twisted in this way for the purpose of trying to exculpate this man from the verdict of the court-martial.

No such testimony was before the court-martial as that paragraph of General Jackson's report; it was not known at the time.

Mr. BURNSIDE. The report was dated after the court.

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly, it was long after the court, and it was only shown before this board, as they call it, for the purpose by the lawyers of trying to get General McDowell to say that he had made a mistake in a letter he had written in quoting that report, and that is all there was of it. Like a frank and honest man he said he had been mistaken, but not in his evidence before the court-martial. The Senator would have us understand that General McDowell confessed to a mistake in his testimony before the court-martial. That is not true. There is no such thing in this evidence, and no such inference can be drawn for one moment.

Next, the Senator says that the order of his of six o'clock that McDowell produced before the board of investigation, an order dated by Fitz-John Porter at six o'clock, proves conclusively that he did not receive the order of 4.30, known as the Pope order of 4.30. On that let me call the Senator's attention to the facts. Colonel Locke, Fitz-John Porter's own staff officer, swears before this board that he was present when the order was received; that at once an order was sent to Morell to attack, and Morell swears that he got the order to attack, and the sun was then up to the tops of the trees; and immediately after he got the order to attack he received another order in writing to remain where he was all night and not attack. General Morell, one of his own division commanders, Colonel Locke, one of his own staff officers, General Butterfield, one of his own brigade commanders, and two captains, all swear to the same thing, and two of these officers swear they were present when Porter received the order. There is the testimony, and you pretend that this 6.30 note to McDowell does away with the order of 4.30. No such thing.

More than that, General Heintzelman swears, and there is the evidence in the very book you were reading if you turn to it, that at five o'clock in the afternoon, at Pope's headquarters, they received a note from General Fitz-John Porter saying he was going to retreat to Manassas. Do you say that this shows that Porter received no such order. There is the evidence right before you, of Heintzelman. General Heintzelman, in this city now, swears before your board that the note spoken of was read at Pope's headquarters at five o'clock in the afternoon, and that was some three miles from where Fitz-John Porter was, and McDowell's troops went into the fight after five o'clock with two divisions; and this was at the time they received this news that Porter had been attacked and was retreating on Manassas. I read Heintzelman's testimony the other day, and yet you pretend that no such order was issued. Sir, you cannot do it, and shall not dodge this question.

Mr. EATON. Nobody wants to dodge it.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well, sir. I did not address my remarks to the Senator.

Mr. EATON. You said nobody should dodge it.

Mr. LOGAN. I do say so. What I mean is that nobody ought to dodge it. If there is no one here that wishes to dodge the main question, let us have the facts as they are and not as they are not.

Further than this, if this note was sent by Fitz-John Porter, what does it prove? It proves if he even sent it at six o'clock, as he said he did, that at six o'clock, when the evidence all shows that there was no enemy in his front, he intended to retreat to Manassas. It proves that, does it not? Then I ask how does it leave him, in what way does it make his case any better? In what way does it clear it up? In what way does it show that he was obeying orders when the Senator from Delaware says if this order had been produced before the court it would have wiped away all the accusations against him? Why, sir, it would only have made firmer in the minds of men that he was not doing his duty; for he says in the very note you expect to exculpate him by: "I want to know how you are getting along; troops seem to be retiring; I shall retire on Manassas;" and you claim that exculpates him! Now, sir, I cannot understand it so, and I say to the Senator from Connecticut that I meant no offense by saying that men should not dodge it. I did not mean that I had the power to keep them from doing so. I only meant they ought not to dodge it. I mean no offense to any one. I have tried to discuss this question fairly, justly, and honestly on both sides. I only mean that I desire it shall be presented honestly and fairly, and if I can prevent it, I will prevent its being presented in any other way. That is all that I mean.

Mr. McDONALD. Mr. President—

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator from Indiana yielding, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. PENDLETON. Let us adjourn.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate do now adjourn. ["Oh, no."]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee insist on his motion?

Mr. HARRIS. No, sir. It seems to be the desire of the Senate to have an executive session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at four o'clock and twenty-five minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, March 8, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. DAVID WILLS, D. D.

The Journal of Friday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DIBRELL. On the 20th of February last, the papers called for by House resolution from the Committee on Military Affairs were referred by mistake—

The SPEAKER. That is not a correction of the Journal, and the Chair will have to recognize the gentleman later in the day.

NEW RULES.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to announce that, under the order of the House, the new rules go into operation to-day. The Chair will state to members they can procure cards of admission for the members' gallery and for the visitors' gallery, provided for under the new rules, by applying to the Doorkeeper. The regular order under the rules is—

Mr. GARFIELD. Is this which I hold in my hand the order of business?

The SPEAKER. That the Chair supposes to be the Calendar made by the journal clerk of the House in accordance with the resolution of the House. The Chair is advised it is incorrect in one or two particulars, which will be made correct in future publications.

Mr. GARFIELD. There appears to be here but one calendar, namely, the House Calendar, whereas we have two calendars in the Committee of the Whole and a Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Calendar for Friday will be printed on Friday. The House Calendar is printed to-day.

Mr. GARFIELD. But there are two calendars which ought to be printed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes that there are two calendars printed, that which relates to business in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union and the House Calendar. The remaining calendar will be made up on Friday.

Mr. GARFIELD. Where is the calendar of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. The Chair finds that it has not yet been printed, but will be, as the Chair is advised.

Mr. GARFIELD. What is presented this morning is the House Calendar alone, and the other two calendars are to be printed hereafter?

The SPEAKER. That seems to be correct.

Mr. GARFIELD. In order to facilitate business I suggest, during the day at any time, in order to avoid reading this, that any member may move to correct anything which he may find incorrectly recorded here, so that after to-day this shall be understood, if no criticism or change be made, to be the fixed House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be glad to hear any correction, and will see it is made.

Mr. GARFIELD. I suggest it be open to everybody during the day—that it shall be in order for anybody to propose corrections to this calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks he would have the power himself to make any such correction, and if any member will indicate now or during the day where an error occurs, he will have it corrected in the Calendar for the future.

Mr. GARFIELD. What I wish to suggest is, we should have the power of correction barred, so that if correction is not made on this House Calendar to-day, then it is to be understood it shall stand as it is now printed.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to say that I do not know any authority there was for taking from the public Calendar any bill, or for discharging the Committee of the Whole from the consideration of any bill on the public Calendar and putting it upon the House Calendar without the action of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not advised that that has been done.

Mr. CONGER. I find bills on the House Calendar which were on the public Calendar under the old rule.

The SPEAKER. Indicate which one.

Mr. CONGER. The first one on the Calendar.

The SPEAKER. State which one by title.

Mr. CONGER. The first one, and I think the third.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman refer to the bill reported from the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service?

Mr. CONGER. No, sir; but to contributions for political purposes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair and the gentleman allude to the same bill.

Mr. CONGER. That was in the Committee of the Whole on the Public Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the order of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HOSTETLER. Reform in Civil Service: A bill to prohibit Federal officers, claimants, and contractors from making contributions for political purposes. Pending when the morning hour expired. June 14.—Morning hour expired. June 17.—Pending the demand for the previous question the morning hour expired. December 10.—Made a special order for January 7, 1880, in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and from day to day thereafter until disposed of.

The SPEAKER. That bill is in the right place.

Mr. CONGER. It seems to be so; but by what authority does it go on the House Calendar?

The SPEAKER. Because it is in the House as a public bill, and should go to the House Calendar.

Mr. CONGER. But the rule says when reported by a committee it goes to the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. It was reported by a committee.

Mr. CONGER. But when reported? Immediately on its being reported.

The SPEAKER. The business in the House had to go to the public Calendar in the House.

Mr. CONGER. Any matter under consideration, under new rule and under order made by the House, unfinished business in the House. Does that go to the House Calendar?

The SPEAKER. It is not unfinished business, it has the special characteristic for such consideration, and it is not displaced.

Mr. CONGER. I mean by what authority is any business put on the House Calendar, except at the time it is reported from a committee under the rules?

The SPEAKER. This business was in the House, and it is placed there on the House Calendar for the consideration of the House, according to the rule and in order of date of House order.

Mr. CONGER. That must be by the order of the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Authority was given by the House to the journal clerk to do it. Where else would the gentleman have it go?

Mr. CONGER. It is not for me to determine how the rules should be executed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman would not surely mean to intimate that that bill should lose its place.

Mr. CONGER. That is a matter which belongs to the House.

The SPEAKER. It is exactly in the position in which the House placed it.

Mr. GARFIELD. It was of course the intention of the House that under the new rules all existing business should be put in place according to the old order, and having its old rights; only that it should be distributed on these different calendars. The new rule could not be otherwise executed. This is an order to be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and it is accordingly placed on the House Calendar and will have to be considered in that way. We have to execute the old order as made by the House; and I think the Speaker is right in putting this order where it is.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not do it. It was done under a resolution of the House by the journal clerk. But the Chair agrees with the gentleman from Ohio that it is the place where the order intended it should come in. If not put there it is without a position. The Clerk will read the resolution under which these calendars were prepared.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the foregoing rules, just adopted as a substitute for all existing rules of the House, shall take effect and be in force from and after the hour of noon on Monday next, on which day, after the reading of the Journal, the Speaker shall present to the House the calendars provided for in these rules, on which shall be entered in proper order all the measures now pending before the House or the Committee of the Whole: Provided, That, in carrying these rules into effect no standing committee shall be abolished, nor the number of the same decreased, during the present Congress; nor shall any existing special order be set aside.

The SPEAKER. It will be seen that the latter clause states that special orders shall not be set aside. There has been a strict adherence to the order of the House in the arrangement which has been made of the business on the calendars thus far printed.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I find on the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union bills that in my judgment belong to the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. Do they appropriate money or property?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. No, sir; they do not appropriate money.

The SPEAKER. To what bills does the gentleman refer?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I refer, for instance, to the bill reported from the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, in regard to the judiciary, and the bill in regard to the repeal of the tax upon leaf-tobacco.

The SPEAKER. The latter bill would be subject to the point of order that it is a bill in relation to raising revenue, and would go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The judicial bill would properly go to the House Calendar. It has nothing to do with tariff or the raising of revenue.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised that the bill to which the gentleman from Illinois alludes went to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union by the action of the House, and it will be the second bill in order for action on that calendar. This is the reason why the journal clerk has assigned it as he has done.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business to-day is the call of States and Territories for bills and joint resolutions for printing and for appropriate reference; and under this call joint and concurrent resolutions and memorials of State Legislatures may be presented for reference; resolutions of inquiry calling for departmental information are also in order for reference. Under the new rule instead of commencing the call with the State of Maine the Chair will call the States and Territories in alphabetical order, beginning with the State of Alabama.

REDUCTION OF TARIFF.

Mr. SAMFORD introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4925) to reduce the tariff on certain articles; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. SAMFORD. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws.

The SPEAKER. The rules provide that bills relating to the tariff should go to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. SAMFORD. Cannot a majority of the House decide the question of reference?

The SPEAKER. To refer it to any other committee might be considered to change the rule.

Mr. SAMFORD. I understood, Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot debate the question. The rule is explicit, and a rule cannot be changed except by a suspension of the rules.

Mr. SAMFORD. If the Chair will permit me, I desire merely to say that I understood when a bill was introduced it was in the power of a majority to send it to any committee it might desire.

The SPEAKER. Heretofore it has been so held. The Chair will cause to be read the new rule, which is the first clause of Rule XXVIII.

The Clerk read as follows:

No standing rule or order of the House shall be rescinded or changed without one day's notice of the motion therefor, and no rule shall be suspended except by a vote of two-thirds of the members present, nor shall the Speaker entertain a motion to suspend the rules except on the first and third Mondays of each month after the call of States and Territories shall have been completed, preference being given on the first Monday to individuals and on the third Monday to committees, and during the last six days of a session.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now read the second clause of Rule XI.

Mr. GARFIELD. What is the question?

The SPEAKER. The question is whether the gentleman from Alabama has a right to move to refer a bill relating to the revenue to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws. The Chair has caused to be read, first, the rule in relation to a suspension of the rules; and, secondly, he will again cause to be read what is contained in the first clause of Rule XI as to the reference of subjects relating to the revenue.

The Clerk read as follows:

RULE XI.

POWERS AND DUTIES OF COMMITTEES.

All proposed legislation shall be referred to the committees named in the preceding rule, as follows, namely, subjects relating—

1. To the election of members: to the Committee on Elections.
2. To the revenue and the bonded debt of the United States: to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. The rule provides that all subjects relating to the revenue and the bonded debt of the United States shall be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. SAMFORD. Is not that exactly the same as the old rule?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is not; the new rule is more distinct and specific than the old rule.

Mr. SAMFORD. Is not the purport of it the same?

The SPEAKER. The new rules being just about to go into operation, the Chair desires to submit the question to the House and let the House give an interpretation to the rule.

Mr. COX. In case of a doubt, would not the Chair, as usual, submit the question to the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has just stated that he proposes to submit this question to the House for its determination.

Mr. MORRISON. I move to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. SAMFORD. I am quite willing that the bill shall have that reference.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I understood the Chair to say that to change the order of reference required by the rule necessitated the changing or suspension of the rules. Now, I want the Chair to determine at once, here at the beginning of the operation of these new rules, whether it is in the power of the House, by a mere majority vote, to change the rule and practice in regard to the reference of bills, and, without any notice whatever, to make a reference contrary to the rule.

Mr. MORRISON. Allow me a word in reply. The old rule number 43 provided that—

When a resolution shall be offered, or a motion made, to refer any subject, and different committees shall be proposed, the question shall be taken in the following order:

The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union; the Committee of the Whole House; a standing committee; a select committee.

The Committee on Rules making the revision of rules reported to the House that Rule 43, which I have just read, was transferred to the new rules and appeared as clause 2 of Rule XIII. Now unless it means the same thing in clause 2 of Rule XIII as in old Rule 43, then the Committee on Rules has practiced something not much different from a fraud upon the House in reporting to the House that it had transferred Rule 43 to Rule XIII of the new rules, where it appeared as the second clause of that rule. I thought I saw something of the kind; I thought the committee had made some mistake or omitted something, and had not done what it reported it had done; and therefore I voted against this rule and all the new rules as they appear in the new revision. It is, I think, to be regretted that the House did not reject them.

THE SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the second clause of Rule XIII.

The Clerk read as follows:

2. The question of reference of any proposition, other than that reported from a committee, shall be decided without debate, in the following order, namely: a standing committee, a select committee; but the reference of a proposition reported by a committee, when demanded, shall be decided according to its character without debate, in the following order, namely: House Calendar; Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union; Committee of the Whole House; a standing committee; a select committee.

THE SPEAKER. It is clear that the majority of the House can reach a report of a committee, and send it wherever it sees fit under the rule.

Mr. SAMTORD. Can they reach a bill introduced on Monday?

Mr. MORRISON. Not if this rule provides that it shall go to the Committee on Ways and Means; the rule must be suspended in order to send the bill elsewhere. What I desire to know is whether the rule does send it to the Committee on Ways and Means, and whether it is true or not, as the Committee on Rules reported to the House, that this Rule 43 was to be found in the second clause of Rule XIII.

THE SPEAKER. The Chair is not called upon to answer what the Committee on Rules meant. The Chair takes the rules as he finds them, and is disposed to submit this question to the House for its decision. When a bill is introduced by a member in his place, the second clause of Rule XIII would imply that the question of its reference shall be taken first to a standing committee, and next to a select committee.

Mr. MORRISON. Under Rule 43, which the Committee on Rules said was transferred to clause 2 of Rule XIII, the first question was upon reference to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

THE SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the Clerk to read that portion of the report of the Committee on Rules which relates to the introduction of bills.

The Clerk read as follows:

The principal changes recommended by the committee with respect to the foregoing rules are as follows:

1. The order of motions has been changed by making the motion to fix the day to which the House shall adjourn first in order, thereby conforming to the practice of the House since the Twenty-ninth Congress, by the addition of a motion for a recess next in order to a motion to adjourn, and by making the demand for the previous question non-debatable, which is a transfer of the first clause of Rule 133.

The order of reference of a subject has been changed so as to provide that the question of reference of any proposition offered by a member shall be put first to a standing committee, and second to a select committee, while the order of reference of a proposition reported by a committee shall be put in the same order as now provided in Rule 43.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I desire, speaking for myself as a member of the Committee on Rules, to say that, so far as I know and believe, it never was intended by the Committee on Rules to change in any wise the last paragraph of Rule 43 in the old system of rules, which has stood here in this House adopted and in operation since 1825. I do not believe there is anything in the present system of rules as adopted and as it goes into operation to-day that warrants any change of practice from that which has heretofore been followed under the last paragraph of the forty-third rule of the old system. I am sure it was never proposed by the Committee on Rules to adopt with regard to this subject any practice which would in the least contravene the right of the House to determine by a majority vote the reference of any bill according to the order named in the forty-third rule. There was but one thing unknown to the old system introduced by the new rule; I mean the creation of what is termed the "House Calendar," as distinguished from the calendar of bills raising revenue, general appropriation bills, &c., and the calendar for bills of a private character. I deny that there is anything in the revised rules which contemplates or results in the establishment of any rule warranting any practice upon this subject different from that provided for in the last paragraph of the forty-third rule of the old code.

Mr. GARFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I do not see that there is any necessary collision upon this point between the eleventh and thirteenth rules lately adopted. We have undoubtedly made one decided change from the old rule, of which I think the House will see the importance. The old rule contained merely the declaration of the names of committees, with the number of members of which they should be constituted. There was nothing in the rule which prescribed how bills introduced by individual members should be referred. On the contrary the new rule number XI provides that "all proposed legislation shall be referred to the committee named in the preceding rules, as follows." Then the name of each committee with the business appropriate to it is mentioned. Now, to whom is that rule a command? In the first instance, to the Speaker. A member sends to the desk a bill about taxation which he proposes to have referred to the Committee on Elections. The Speaker, in obedience to Rule XI, says, "This bill goes to the Committee on Ways and Means."

THE SPEAKER. Just as he did to-day.

Mr. GARFIELD. Just as he did to-day. In other words, the Speaker enforces the clause of the rule which I have just read. If no question is raised this act of the Speaker is final. But it may be that the House does not concur with the Speaker and wish to make a different reference, and some member raises the question. New Rule XIII, paragraph 2, comes in play—which specially provides that the House shall decide the "question of reference," and prescribes the order in which questions of reference shall be decided.

Mr. MORRISON. What order?

Mr. GARFIELD. I will state in a moment. Who raises the question as to the order of reference? On the motion of any member the question is raised and the House decides the question. The Speaker obeys the rule by saying, "This goes to the Committee on Ways and Means." Although the member offering the bill may wish to send it to some other committee, the Speaker, seeing what the subject-matter is, obeys the rule.

THE SPEAKER. As a ministerial duty.

Mr. GARFIELD. And the bill is referred under the direction of the Speaker unless some member raises the question of reference to another committee.

Mr. ROBESON. Moves to suspend the rule.

Mr. GARFIELD. No; the Speaker's decision stands unless some member raises the question, as he has a right to, under Rule XIII.

THE SPEAKER. The Chair concurs in the view of the gentleman from Ohio that there was no attempt in Rule XIII to take from the House any power which it has heretofore exercised as to references on Monday.

Mr. GARFIELD. In reply to the suggestion of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] I will say that I do not think a suspension of the rules is necessary in order to provide for a different reference from that contemplated by Rule XI. When, as in this case, a bill is presented to the House by any member, he may under this thirteenth rule do just what has hitherto been done in the matter of reference, except this: it is not in order for a member when introducing a bill to move to refer to the Committee of the Whole. It must go to a standing or a select committee, and the rule provides the order in which the Speaker shall entertain those motions; that is all. Now in this case there is no motion to refer to the Committee of the Whole; there is no motion to send the bill to a select committee; there is only one motion—that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws.

Mr. MORRISON. Will the gentleman allow me—

Mr. McLANE. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question. I wish to know from him whether Rule XIII does not separate reports from committees and reports from individuals.

Mr. GARFIELD. There are no reports from individuals.

Mr. McLANE. Bills, I mean.

Mr. GARFIELD. Yes. The first paragraph of the second clause refers to propositions by individual members, and these must be referred to standing or select committees. The second paragraph refers to reports from committees, which may be referred to the Committee of the Whole, to a standing or a select committee, in the order named.

Mr. McLANE. I ask my question for information. As I understand, Rule XIII provides for two classes of reports. The word "proposition" involves a bill; and we to-day or on any Monday proceed under a rule which enables individuals to report bills. Of course those bills are "propositions." Now the thirteenth rule prescribes the mode of referring propositions which come from individuals; and that is not at all like the mode prescribed for referring propositions coming from a committee. The gentleman from Illinois calls attention to the fact that when we deal with propositions coming from an individual only two references are provided for. This is the point of the gentleman; and it is manifest that there is an omission in this respect, or that the rule differs from the old forty-third rule. When the proposition comes from a committee, then the reference to the Committee of the Whole is provided for, but when a proposition comes from an individual no provision is made except for reference to a standing committee or to a select committee. That is the question asked by the gentleman from Illinois, and that question is not answered. That is the question I address to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GARFIELD. I did not hear the last part of the gentleman's question.

Mr. COX. I rise to a parliamentary question.

THE SPEAKER. There is so much confusion in the House the Chair cannot hear what is being said by members.

Mr. McLANE. I want the gentleman from Ohio to answer me.

Mr. COX. What is the proposition before the House?

THE SPEAKER. A bill has been introduced by the gentleman from Alabama. He asks the same be referred to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws. Under the old practice which the committee never designed to vary—

Mr. COX. Is there a motion pending to refer it to the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. MORRISON. I made that motion.

THE SPEAKER. That was done subsequently.

Mr. COX. Which takes precedence?

THE SPEAKER. Under the second clause of Rule XIII, the House possibly might reach it, if that be the will of the House, by voting down, first the reference to a standing committee, then the motion to a select committee, when in the order of precedence the motion to refer to the Committee of the Whole might be reached if entertained.

Mr. COX. The House, then, can reach it by a majority?

The SPEAKER. If reached it would be by a majority.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Under the construction the Chair gives to that clause of the thirteenth rule do I understand it requires more than a majority vote to determine which of these two references shall be had?

The SPEAKER. The Chair states where a proposition is introduced, the interpretation he thinks should be put on this rule is this: On propositions other than those reported from a committee the first vote is on reference to a standing committee, then on reference to a select committee, and then in the order of motions, if the House shall put such construction on rules, to refer it as proposed by the gentleman from Illinois. They would have to vote down the reference to a standing committee and then to a special committee, and next comes the reference to the Committee of the Whole, if the House puts such construction on the rule.

Mr. GARFIELD. I understand the Speaker has ruled under the second clause of Rule XIII the question of reference as between two standing committees of the House stands just where it stood under the forty-third rule of the old series.

The SPEAKER. The Chair so wishes to be understood.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. Under the practice formerly. The Chair knows it was not the intention to change that practice.

Mr. CARLISLE. The forty-third rule of the old series provided, when a proposition was introduced by an individual member, the question of reference should be first taken on the reference to the Committee of the Whole, then to a standing committee, and then to a select committee. On page 5 of the report made by the Committee on Rules to the House it is stated this forty-third rule had been transferred to the second clause of Rule XIII in the revision; but when we look to the second clause of Rule XIII of the revision we find omitted the provision which allowed the motion to be made to refer the proposition offered by an individual member to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The report goes a little further than the gentleman states, and sets forth wherein there is a change.

Mr. CARLISLE. On the next page. What I wish to ascertain is this: whether the Chair has ruled, the motion to refer to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws being voted down, the question can then be taken on the motion to refer to the Committee of the Whole House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will entertain that motion, because he does not believe the Committee on Rules ever intended to change that right or to take it from a majority of this House, provided the House puts such construction on the rule in question.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Before determining that question, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to this construction of Rule XIII in its connection with the second clause of Rule XI. I premise by saying I do not think it material what the rules were before today or what was the practice under those old rules; we have to deal with the rules as they are now here before us. I hold that clause 2 of Rule XIII does not apply to the distribution of bills as to what standing committees they shall be referred, but the question is whether they shall be referred to a standing committee or to some other committee. That is the question presented in that rule. But Rule XI is peremptory—that it shall be referred—that all revenue bills shall be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means. And there is nothing in the thirteenth rule which contravenes the peremptory and arbitrary rule for the appropriate reference of bills.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the spirit of the rule is that the majority of the House shall control its deliberations.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. The majority of the House cannot change a rule. If it be true that the rule makes a disposition of the question a majority of the House cannot change it, but two-thirds can change it after one day's notice.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows perfectly well, because he deliberated with the Committee on Rules, that it was not intended in any way to prevent a majority of the House from making any such assignment or reference of business as it might see fit.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. With all respect to the Committee on Rules, they should have so reported to the House, but they have not done it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair therefore thinks that the question shall be taken first for reference to a standing committee, next to a special committee, and then, if the House puts construction as indicated, it must of necessity be within the range of the authority and the power of the House to refer the matter somewhere else.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. What does it mean in Rule XI, which determines the character of questions to be referred?

The SPEAKER. It means that the Speaker, performing a ministerial duty, shall direct the attention of the House, when a subject comes up under that clause, that the proposition should go, if there be no dissent on the part of the majority, to the appropriate committee according to Rule XI. The Chair did that ministerial duty.

Mr. ROBESON. I should like to ask a parliamentary question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROBESON. Suppose I rise and offer a proposition making an appropriation for the benefit of the Army, and the Speaker should refer it to the Committee on Appropriations, could I, by asking a majority of the House to second me, refer it to the Military Committee under that rule?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the Committee on Rules never intended to abridge the right of the majority of the House to refer business.

Mr. ROBESON. Let me say further that if I understand Rule XI, it says all business with regard to revenue shall go to the Committee on Ways and Means. Rule XXVIII says that no standing rule shall be altered except by a two-third vote under certain conditions. Rule XI says questions of reference shall be taken according to their character, in a certain order; and when they are taken, are not their results governed by the rule which requires two-thirds? And is not this a proposition to suspend the rule which requires two-thirds?

Mr. COX. Will the Chair allow me a word?

The SPEAKER. One moment.

Mr. PAGE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HASKELL. I desire to say one word in response to the remarks made by the gentleman from New Jersey which will, I think, explain precisely the ruling of the Chair here.

Under Rule XI it is entirely possible that a member of this House may introduce a bill which shall be a revenue bill, which shall be an appropriation bill, and which shall be a bill for the revision of the statutes of the United States. All three of these committees may be interested in the bill. Under Rule XI the Speaker is charged to use his discretion and send it where it properly belongs. Does any man in this House pretend to say that a bill which may have in it three characteristics—belonging to three different committees—that this House cannot determine to which committee it shall go? Any other ruling than the Speaker has made would bar you from that absolutely. This is an every-day occurrence. The Speaker looks at a bill, he sees it is a public bill on one side and it is a private bill on the other, and he thinks it should go to the calendar of public bills, but the House thinks it belongs to the calendar of private bills. Who is to tell?

The SPEAKER. The House, in case of dispute.

Mr. HASKELL. The House, of course. Here is a bill which comes in; one man says it is a revenue bill, another that it is an appropriation bill, and the Committee on the Revision of the Laws says: "You are tinkering with a matter we have under consideration." Will you make the Speaker decide beyond the will of the House which of these three committees shall have it, there being three quarreling for it, as two are this morning? I never saw or heard of a legislative body which did not have the power finally to direct its own legislation.

Mr. ROBESON. If that proposition be true, every bill can be referred to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws.

The SPEAKER. If the House so directs.

Mr. ROBESON. But every bill has a distinct, direct, substantive subject-matter and purpose which it seeks to accomplish, and when it does that it changes the law; and I say that that committee which has that subject under consideration, according to all good organization and correct procedure of business, should have referred to it that subject-matter with all its ramifications.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] is recognized.

Mr. HASKELL. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for one question. Suppose we have a bill appropriating $8,000,000 for the support of the Army; and suppose one-half of the bill is an appropriation for the support of the Army and the other half for the reorganization of the Army; who can tell which is the leading feature of the bill? Who decide, if not the House?

Mr. ROBESON. That is a matter which would be governed by the rule which says laws shall not be changed by appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that he exercises a ministerial duty merely when he calls the attention of the House to the fact on the introduction of a bill that it relates to revenue and belongs to the Committee on Ways and Means. The House has then the power to direct the reference. It has always had the power; it never has been intended it should be deprived of the power; and if the Speaker had the power to refer a bill differently from what was desired by a majority of the House, it would be a tyrannical exercise of power.

Mr. COX. I desire to say one word, Mr. Speaker, in reply to my honorable colleague, [Mr. FERNANDO WOOD.] He thinks that under Rule XXVIII it requires a suspension of the rules to effectuate an object which the majority of the House desires. It requires no such thing. That never was required under the old rule, and, as we have been told by the gentleman from Kentucky and the Speaker, it is not required by the revision. What then? Suppose a bill comes up about which there is a doubt as to its reference—whether it should go to the Committee on Ways and Means, or to the Committee on Banking and Currency, or to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, or to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Will my colleague permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. COX. Yes, sir.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I ask him whether in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union in the consideration of an appropriation bill, when a question of order is raised as to an amendment, if it is not competent for the Chair to decide whether the amendment is in order or not? Now, it is competent for the Speaker and is his incumbent duty when a bill is introduced for reference to look at that bill and determine what reference under the rule it shall have. If it is a question of doubt, if there is anything in the bill making it susceptible of being referred to different standing committees, it will be for the Speaker to submit the question to the House to determine to which committee it shall be referred. But it is for the Speaker in regard to every bill presented under this call to-day, and on every other Monday, to determine where, under the rule, that bill should go.

Mr. COX. That has been determined by the Speaker. He has said this bill goes to the Committee on Ways and Means, under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair in so determining exercised a ministerial duty merely.

Mr. COX. A ministerial duty no doubt. But further than that he says, "I will give effect to the will of the majority." The House may think this bill properly belongs to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws. My colleague and I know that the tariff was raised by the Committee on the Revision of the Laws; and it may be this very question of the tariff concerns that committee more than it does the committee of which my colleague is chairman. Hence, if the majority of the House says it shall not go to the Committee on Ways and Means it will be because of some reason why it should not go there. Perhaps they wish to take such action as will secure that this bill will be reported and placed on the Calendar for the action, not of the Committee on Ways and Means, but of the representatives of the people. And therefore the gentleman who introduced the bill very properly says let the action of the House be taken on this bill as to its reference. There is no difficulty about this. The rules have not been substantially changed. There is no analogy between the point made by my colleague in regard to the position of this bill before the House and a point of order which the Speaker or the chairman of the Committee of the Whole might decide. Under the old rules it has been left to the will of the majority to determine where a bill should go, and I hope the new rules at their initiation now will be so construed as to carry out the will of this House and not the will of a few men who stop the will of this House by their proceedings as a committee.

Mr. SAMFORD rose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has decided it is for the House to determine the question of reference between committees.

Mr. SAMFORD. I understand that, and now I desire to ask the Chair a question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear it.

Mr. SAMFORD. I wish to ask whether my motion to refer the bill to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws will in any way prejudice a motion hereafter to refer it to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the order in which the question will be submitted. The gentleman from Alabama moves that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws. That may be amended by a motion to refer it to the Committee on Ways and Means. And the Chair will first submit the motions for reference to standing committees of the House before submitting the motion for the reference of the bill to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, even if the House should put such construction on the rule.

Mr. SAMFORD. Would the Chair entertain a motion made by any member on behalf of the Committee on Ways and Means before the question is put upon the reference to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would entertain such a motion as an amendment to the original proposition.

Mr. SAMFORD. I believe I will take my chances and stand on my motion.

Mr. WHITE. Let the bill be read.

The Clerk read the title of the bill as follows:

A bill to reduce the tariff on certain articles.

Mr. SAMFORD. I have introduced two bills; let the other bill be read first.

The SPEAKER. This is the bill which is now before the House.

Mr. SAMFORD. The Clerk has put the wrong bill first. The bill I wanted first introduced is the bill to repeal the tariff on printing type and paper and the materials entering into their composition.

The SPEAKER. That bill is not yet before the House. The Clerk will read the pending bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after July 1, 1880, no duty shall be levied, assessed, or collected in excess of 50 per cent. of the present rate of import duties on merchandise imported into the United States, in the composition of which any or either of the following-named articles form the principal material, to wit: hemp, metals, wool, wood, and cotton.

Mr. CONGER. I ask that clause 31 of Rule XI be read.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Under the rule debate is not in order.

The SPEAKER. Debate is in order on a question of order, but not upon the question of reference.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The Chair has decided the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read clause 31 of Rule XI.

The Clerk read as follows:

All proposed legislation shall be referred to the committees named in the preceding rule, as follows, namely: Subjects relating—

31. To the revision and codification of the statutes of the United States: to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws.

Mr. CONGER. According to that rule, a bill in order to be properly referred to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws must relate to the revision or codification of the statutes.

Mr. ROBESON. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROBESON. I understand the Chair to say that he will submit this question of reference to the House. I desire to know whether it will require a two-thirds vote to change the reference prescribed by Rule XI?

The SPEAKER. When that point of order shall be made on a decision by the House the Chair will rule upon it.

Mr. ROBESON. I find that Rule XI provides that subjects relating to the revenue shall be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means. By another rule it is provided that no rule shall be suspended except by a two-thirds vote. Now, I want the Chair to decide whether a motion to suspend this Rule XI so as to refer this bill to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws will require a two-thirds vote or not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will decide that question when it shall arise.

Many MEMBERS. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded, and it is the question of reference, which is not debatable.

Mr. KNOTT. Is it in order to amend the motion to refer this bill to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws so that it shall be sent to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will not entertain that motion, because it is clear that under the rule the question must be first taken upon referring the bill to a standing committee of the House, so that such issue is not now presented.

Mr. FRYE. Is an amendment now in order?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. FRYE. Then I move to amend by substituting the Committee on Ways and Means for the Committee on the Revision of the Laws.

The SPEAKER. That motion is in order.

Mr. MILLS. That I understood to be the original motion, to refer to the Committee on Ways and Means; and the second motion was to refer to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws.

The SPEAKER. No; just the opposite. The motion of the gentleman who introduced the bill [Mr. SAMFORD] was to refer it to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. FRYE] now moves to amend that motion by substituting the Committee on Ways and Means for the Committee on the Revision of the Laws. Both being standing committees they come within the rule, and the question will be first taken on the amendment to refer the bill to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. GARFIELD, Mr. BREWER, and others called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question will be first taken upon the motion of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. FRYE] to refer the bill to the Committee on Ways and Means. The Chair desires to state that under the new rules the roll will be first called over, and then the Clerk will call the names of those who do not respond upon the first call. If any gentleman shall not vote on either of those calls he will be prevented from voting at all on this question. The Chair will also state that announcements of pairs must be sent to the Clerk's desk, in writing, and signed, the announcements to be read by the Clerk at the conclusion of the roll-call.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 143, nays 88, not voting 61; as follows:

So the amendment of Mr. FRYE to refer the bill to the Committee on Ways and Means was agreed to.

When the roll-call was concluded,

Mr. ROBERTSON said: I ask to have my vote recorded.

Mr. BURROWS. I object. It is not in order under the new rule.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the rule on the subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

ON CALLS OF THE ROLL AND HOUSE.

1. Upon every roll-call, the names of the members shall be called alphabetically by surname, except when two or more have the same surname, then the whole name shall be called; and after the roll has been once called, the Clerk shall call in their alphabetical order the names of those not voting; and thereafter the Speaker shall not entertain a request to record a vote or announce a pair.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I was present during the roll-call and responded, but I suppose the Clerk failed to catch my response, because perhaps I did not answer promptly enough.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks he cannot entertain the request. The Clerk will announce the pairs, memoranda of which have been handed in at the desk, in accordance with the new rule.

The following pairs were announced:

Mr. COX with Mr. ROBESON.

Mr. WARD with Mr. AIKEN.

Mr. HARMER with Mr. ELLIS.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts, with Mr. LEWIS.

Mr. LORING with Mr. KING.

Mr. AIKEN with Mr. WARD.

Mr. MONEY with Mr. STONE.

Mr. STEELE with Mr. BOYD.

Mr. HENKLE with Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa, with Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina.

Mr. HAMMOND, of New York, with Mr. O'BRIEN.

Mr. BRIGHAM with Mr. TAYLOR.

Mr. BELFORD with Mr. SPRINGER.

Mr. ELAM with Mr. DICK.

Mr. LOUNSBURY with Mr. BAILEY.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, with Mr. PRESCOTT.

Mr. CHALMERS with Mr. VAN VOORHIS.

Mr. CASWELL with Mr. BRAGG.

Mr. SMITH, of Georgia, with Mr. WILBER.

Mr. ARMFIELD with Mr. RUSSELL, of North Carolina.

Mr. KITCHIN with Mr. MARTIN, of North Carolina.

The SPEAKER. The Chair finds among the papers sent to the desk an announcement by the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. PHILIPS, that his colleague, Mr. CLARK, is detained from the House on account of sickness.

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish to make a suggestion at this point. It will save a great deal of trouble if gentlemen on the other side will, by mutual consent, agree upon some member who shall have charge of the pairs; and we will do the same on this side. In that way two members can make all these reports; otherwise there may be confusion; we shall have pairs twice reported or irregularly reported. If an arrangement of the sort I suggest can be quietly made, it will greatly facilitate calls of the roll. On our side of the House the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. HARMER, is already appointed to take charge of the announcement of the pairs.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Illinois. I have been selected for that duty on this side of the House; but I cannot announce pairs unless they are reported to me. If my friends on this side will report their pairs to me I am perfectly willing to announce them.

Mr. WRIGHT. Inasmuch as the gentleman from Louisiana, Mr. ROBERTSON, was present but did not hear his name called, I move that he have the privilege of recording his vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not allowed under the rules to entertain a request to record a vote after the two roll-calls.

Mr. WRIGHT. I raise the question whether even under the new rules the House cannot by unanimous consent allow a gentleman to record his vote when he was present during the roll-call and did not hear his name called.

The SPEAKER. There is objection in this case; therefore the point does not arise.

Mr. SCALES. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. When these pairs, the statement of which is furnished by members, are announced, does that announcement hold good for the day?

The SPEAKER. Where a pair continues during the day it need not be again announced.

Mr. SCALES. I think that will save much trouble.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has been asked by several gentlemen that his decision on the second clause of Rule XIII shall not be final and conclusive, and to that end the Chair asks the privilege to modify his language in this particular, and in accordance with request he will hold that clause under advisement; and furthermore he would wish, if possible, to have in some way the instruction of the House as to the interpretation of that rule. Of course the Chair will be submissive in every particular to the will of the House.

Mr. GARFIELD. I have no doubt the decision which the Chair has made, and from which no appeal has been taken, becomes the decision of the House until reversed.

Mr. CONGER. It is in order that this may not be considered final the Chair has made the statement which we have just heard.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wishes to say that he is not clear in reference to this matter and desires to have further study upon the whole of the second clause of Rule XIII, that clause which relates to the power of the individual to move to refer. The Chair impliedly said he would entertain a motion to refer to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and thus get a construction of the House in that particular.

Mr. GARFIELD. That was not the ruling of the Chair, as that point really had not arisen, but was an incidental remark. It is clear to my mind—

The SPEAKER. The Chair will now announce the vote.

Mr. CONGER. Before the vote is announced, I desire to say the rule which precludes a member, who inadvertently did not respond to the call of his name on either call, from recording his vote, is, I think, a violation of the rights of members, a violation of the constitutional privileges of members of this House, and I protest against any decision which will prevent a man sitting here from asking to be recorded, who was present in the House and who had a right to vote.

The SPEAKER. There is no power to make a member vote. The Chair has learned that. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman said he did not hear his name and sat in his seat all the time, and now desires to vote. I say no rule of the House can prevent a member from recording his vote.

The SPEAKER. The fault is with the member, the Chair thinks, and not with the rule.

The Chair then announced the vote.

Mr. FRYE. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. ROBERTSON. As my vote cannot change the result I ask it be recorded.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the rule is explicit, but there are peculiar circumstances in this case. The gentleman states he was in his seat, but did not hear his name called.

Mr. PAGE. He may be a little deaf and did not hear his name.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the question to the House whether a member under such circumstances shall have the right to vote.

Mr. BURROWS. Can the Speaker entertain a request for unanimous consent under the new rules?

Mr. DUNNELL. These proceedings to-day will go into the RECORD and I hope there will be no departure from a strict interpretation of the rules.

Mr. BURROWS. The Speaker cannot entertain a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. DUNNELL. I hope the Chair will not entertain the motion, nor put it to the House.

Mr. PHELPS. The gentleman from Louisiana did vote after his name was called; I was sitting near him and heard him, but his vote was not heard at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. CONGER. Has not the gentleman the right to vote?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman now states he did vote.

Mr. CONGER. I understood the gentleman to state publicly he desired to vote.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I did not vote promptly on the call of my name, but I did vote before the call was finished.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman is entitled to be recorded under such circumstances.

The SPEAKER. How did the gentleman vote?

Mr. ROBERTSON. In the affirmative.

The SPEAKER. It will be so recorded.

Mr. DUNNELL. I did not understand the situation when I made my remark.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

PRINTING TYPE AND PAPER FREE OF DUTY.

Mr. SAMFORD also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4926) to repeal the tariff on printing type and paper and the materials entering into their composition; which was read a first and second time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks this bill under the rule should be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. SAMFORD. I demand the yeas and nays on that vote.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 135, nays 89, not voting 68; as follows:

Mr. DUNNELL. I move to dispense with the reading of the names.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

On the motion to refer to the Committee on Ways and Means the yeas were 135, the nays 89.

Mr. SAMFORD. Mr. Speaker, before the Chair announces the vote I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SAMFORD. I understand the amendment to my motion has been adopted. Does not the question now recur on the original motion as amended?

The SPEAKER. It would if desired by the gentleman or any member.

Mr. SAMFORD. Then I desire to offer an amendment to refer to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not now entertain such motion.

Mr. SAMFORD. Is it in order to offer it as a substitute for the motion as amended?

The SPEAKER. It is not. That is exactly the point the Chair wished to have reserved.

Mr. SAMFORD. I ask pardon of the Chair. My object is to keep it away from the Committee on Ways and Means if possible.

The SPEAKER. The House by a vote has determined to refer it there.

The bill was accordingly referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. FRYE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following pairs:

Mr. ELAM, of Louisiana, with Mr. DICK, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. O'CONNOR, of South Carolina, with Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island.

Mr. MCKINLEY, of Ohio, with Mr. BOUCK, of Wisconsin.

Mr. MONEY, of Mississippi, with Mr. MASON, of New York.

Mr. DUNNELL. I hope the second announcement of pairs will not be accepted as an interpretation of the rule. I understand there is to be but one announcement during the day.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has so stated. This is only an announcement of pairs not included in the former announcement.

Mr. BLOUNT. My pair with my colleague, Mr. STEPHENS, ought to be announced; and for this that I am opposed to the reference to the Ways and Means Committee, and Mr. STEPHENS is in favor of it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the Clerk has not announced all the pairs. I send up a certificate of pairs not heretofore announced.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk has just read the pairs not before announced on to-day.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I sent up the names of Mr. STEPHENS and Mr. BLOUNT as being paired.

The SPEAKER. Did those gentlemen vote on the former question?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Yes, sir; and they are now paired, and the pair has not been read.

The SPEAKER. The object of the rule is that the same pair shall not be twice announced in the same day; but pairs which have not been announced heretofore of course should properly be announced at this time.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BLOUNT and Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia, are paired.

PURCHASERS OF WESTERN PACIFIC RAILROAD LANDS.

Mr. PAGE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4927) for the relief of purchasers of lands from the Western Pacific Railroad Company and its successors; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

SURVEY OF PUEBLO OF SAN FRANCISCO.

Mr. PAGE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4928) to confirm the survey of the pueblo of San Francisco; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ABOLITION OF DUTY ON PRINTING-TYPE.

Mr. PAGE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4929) to abolish the duty on printing-type; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

POSTAL TELEGRAPH SYSTEM.

Mr. PAGE also introduced concurrent resolution of the Legislature of California, asking for the establishment of a postal telegraph system throughout the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

SACRAMENTO RIVER.

Mr. BERRY submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to furnish this House, for the use of the Committee on Commerce and the Committee on Mines and Mining, the report of Colonel G. H. Mendal, United States engineer in California, relating to the effect of mining in the Sacramento River and its tributaries.

MESSRS. McCLELLAN AND SPOTSWOOD.

Mr. BELFORD introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4930) for the relief of Messrs. McClellan and Spotswood, of Colorado; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

DANIEL CONNOLLY.

Mr. MILES introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4931) granting a pension to Daniel Connolly, of Marbledale, county of Litchfield, State of Connecticut; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

LUCY C. RAYMOND.

Mr. WAIT introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4932) to place on the pension-rolls the name of Lucy C. Raymond, widow of Edmund A. Raymond, late quartermaster United States steamship Constitution; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

DUTY ON PAPER PULP, ETC.

Mr. NICHOLLS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4933) to remove the duty on wood and straw pulp and soda-ash and other chemicals used in the manufacture of paper, and to reduce the duty on unsized paper to 5 per cent. ad valorem; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. NICHOLLS. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

Mr. DUNNELL. I move to amend so as to refer the bill to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The question being put, the Speaker stated that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. NICHOLLS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the amendment was agreed to; and the bill was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. DUNNELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MILITARY EXERCISES ON THE SABBATH.

Mr. SPEER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4934) to exempt the officers and soldiers of the regular Army of the United States from certain military exercises on the Sabbath day; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. SPEER. I ask that the bill be read in full.

The bill was read in full, and was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

E. J. CHRISTY.

Mr. SPEER also introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 231) for the relief of E. J. Christy, administrator of John H. Christy, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Elections, and ordered to be printed.

PROPOSED HARBOR AT KEWAUNEE, WISCONSIN.

Mr. SPEER also (by request of Mr. DEUSTER) presented a memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, relative to an appropriation for the proposed harbor at Keweenaw, Wisconsin; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. SPEER also (by request of Mr. DEUSTER) presented joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, asking such legislation as will place interstate commerce under the control of a board of commissioners; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

JAMES M. AKIN.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4935) granting a pension to James M. Akin; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

LUCY ANN ELDER.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4936) granting a pension to Lucy Ann Elder; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

REDUCTION OF DUTIES.

Mr. MORRISON. I introduce a bill to reduce duties in excess of 50 per cent. ad valorem on articles embraced in schedules A, B, C, E, G, K, L, and M of section 2504 of the Revised Statutes and not subject to internal-revenue tax; and I send to the desk a motion in reference thereto, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the bill be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means with instructions to report the same back with its judgment thereon favorably or adversely within twenty days.

The SPEAKER. Under what rule does the gentleman from Illinois say the right exists to submit this instruction?

Mr. MORRISON. I expected the Speaker to find the rule by which the House could express its judgment on a proposition like this.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was asking for information.

Mr. MORRISON. I do not know any rule; but I know it has been the practice of the House under the old rules to instruct committees.

The SPEAKER. Not during this hour. The Chair under the old rule has held that it was not in the power of a member to ask even for the printing of a bill in the RECORD.

Mr. CONGER. I make the point of order that the motion is not in order at this time.

Mr. MORRISON. Then I move that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. KELLEY. I move to amend that motion so that the bill shall be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has heretofore stated he did not wish to make a decision as to the admissibility of the motion to refer to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union a bill introduced by an individual member, until further reflection.

Mr. MORRISON. I have no objection to the bill lying on the table for the present till the Speaker sees fit to decide that question.

A MEMBER. Let it be withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois can withdraw the bill for the present, and introduce it next Monday, when the Chair will be prepared to rule upon the question. The Chair does not wish to make a hasty decision.

Mr. MORRISON. I withdraw the bill.

LOUIS J. SACRISTE.

Mr. FORT introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4937) to reinstate Louis J. Sacriste to the United States Army with the rank held by him when honorably discharged, and to place him on the retired list; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PENSIONS TO DISABLED SOLDIERS.

Mr. FORT also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4938) to grant pensions to all soldiers and sailors of all wars of the United States, who from any reason other than by their own wrong acts have become physically disabled or mentally incapacitated to labor or to gain a livelihood for themselves, and who have no means of support; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

LUCRETIA M. LARKIN.

Mr. FORT also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4939) for the relief of Lucretia M. Larkin, of Chebanse, county of Iroquois, State of Illinois; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

TAXATION OF PROPERTY HELD FOR CHARITABLE PURPOSES.

Mr. MYERS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4940) for the relief from taxation of certain property in the District of Columbia actually held and used for charitable and benevolent purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

LAWRENCE C. SHULER.

Mr. MYERS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4941) granting an increase of pension to Lawrence C. Shuler, late colonel Fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Cavalry; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

CAUSES IN UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURTS.

Mr. BAKER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4942) to amend section 968 of the Revised Statutes so as to require the plaintiff to pay costs when he recovers a less sum than the amount fixed as the sum necessary to give jurisdiction to United States circuit courts; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. BAKER. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, and printed.

Mr. CONGER. That bill should go to the Committee on the Judiciary. I make that point because the Committee on the Revision of the Laws has no right to consider any bill except for the revision or codification of the statutes, not for the change of any particular law.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire the Chair to rule upon that point, or will he submit an amendment?

Mr. CONGER. I ask the Chair to rule on the point.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the bill should be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BAKER. I think it should go to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, for the reason that it only proposes the change of a single section by the omission of three or four words.

Mr. CONGER. That may result in a very important change.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BAKER] insists upon the reference which he has indicated.

Mr. CONGER. I move to amend so that the bill shall be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The amendment was agreed to; and accordingly the bill was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CONGER moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BARNARD McNALLY.

Mr. PRICE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4943) to authorize payment of the claim of Barnard McNally, of Sabula, Iowa; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

AUGUSTA L. REED.

Mr. PRICE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4944) for the relief of Augusta L. Reed; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

R. H. SHROPSHIRE.

Mr. PRICE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4945) for the relief of R. H. Shropshire; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MEANDERED LAKES IN IOWA.

Mr. PRICE also presented a joint resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Iowa, asking for the relinquishment by the United States to the State of Iowa of the meandered lakes in that State; which was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. SAPP presented a joint resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Iowa, in regard to meandered lakes in that State.

Mr. DEERING. I would like to have that joint resolution read.

The joint resolution was read at length, and referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

CORN-STALK AND SORGHUM SUGAR.

Mr. GILLETTE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4946) in regard to the manufacture of sugar from corn-stalks and sorghum; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. CONGER. Let that bill be read at length, or so much of it as will indicate its scope.

The bill was read at length, referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and ordered to be printed.

J. J. MERRICK.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4947) providing for the repayment of J. J. Merrick, of Harper County, Kansas, of the purchase-money paid for the southeast quarter of section 1, township 32 south, of range 7 west; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

HOLDEN COOK.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4948) granting a pension to Holden Cook; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

H. E. VAN TREES.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4949) granting a pension to H. E. Van Trees; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

CHARLES C. LEWIS.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4950) granting a pension to Charles C. Lewis; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

REUBEN MARSHALL.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4951) granting a pension to Reuben Marshall; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

M. H. CLEMENTS.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4952) granting a pension to M. H. Clements; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

RETIRED ARMY OFFICERS.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4953) to fix the rank of certain retired officers of the Army; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CAPTAIN W. J. LYSTER.

Mr. ANDERSON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4954) for the relief of Captain W. J. Lyster, Nineteenth Infantry, United States Army; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

HARRY J. TODD.

Mr. BLACKBURN introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4955) for the relief of Harry J. Todd; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN W. M'CLANAHAN.

Mr. MCKENZIE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4956) granting a pension to John W. McClanahan, of Henderson County, Kentucky; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

DUTIES ON AGRICULTURAL MACHINERY.

Mr. MCKENZIE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4957) abolishing all duties upon agricultural machinery and implements; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

COURTS IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. PHISTER (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4959) further to amend the act entitled "An act to reorganize the courts of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1863, and to repeal section 861, chapter 24, of the Revised Statutes of the District of Columbia, and to re-enact the same as amended; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

HON. JOHN D. YOUNG.

Mr. PHISTER also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4958) for the benefit of Hon. John D. Young, of Bath County, Kentucky; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. PHISTER. I move the reference of this bill to the Committee on Elections.

Mr. CONGER. I ask that the bill be read.

The bill was read.

Mr. CONGER. What reference is it proposed to give this bill?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman introducing it asks to have it referred to the Committee on Elections.

Mr. CONGER. It should go to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DUNNELL. Should it not go to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. PHISTER. It involves a question in reference to elections. I suppose it properly goes to the Committee on Elections.

Mr. ATKINS. It should go to the Committee on Claims.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands this to be a proposition to pay compensation to an applicant for a seat in a former House. In the opinion of the Chair it should go to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. KEIFER. Does it not involve a question of membership?

The SPEAKER. Not membership of this House.

Mr. KEIFER. But of a former House.

The SPEAKER. If it involves a question as to membership of a former House, that question has passed beyond reach.

Mr. KEIFER. But the question whether the man was elected must be decided before the claim can be paid.

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair this is a claim for compensation.

Mr. KEIFER. It has been usual to refer everything of this kind to the Committee on Elections.

The SPEAKER. It is not competent for this House to review the action of a former House as to the right of an individual to a seat in a former Congress.

Mr. KEIFER. But if this House is to pass upon the question of compensation, it involves the question of election.

Mr. COX. I think it has been the practice to refer all cases of this kind to the Committee on Elections in the first instance at least.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no choice as to the committee to which the bill shall go. The Committee on Accounts of this House have held that bills to pay compensation to an employé of a former Congress should go to the Committee on Claims; that the Committee on Accounts has cognizance only of matters relating to employés of present House. The analogy would apply to the case of a person claiming compensation as having been elected to a former Congress.

Mr. CARLISLE. Can the gentleman from Michigan inform the House what committee reported upon the claim of Hon. John Young Brown, which was allowed? That involved, I believe, a claim to a seat in the same Congress.

Mr. CONGER. The rule provides that there shall be referred to the Committee on Claims all papers relating to "private and domestic claims and demands, other than war claims, against the United States." This is a claim for compensation. It may be a very just one; I do not know anything about it; but it is a matter that comes properly within the province of that committee.

Mr. PHISTER. If the Chair thinks that the Committee on Claims is the proper committee, I am satisfied.

The SPEAKER. Under the new rules there can be no difficulty about having the bill reported, because almost every committee will be called each week, perhaps oftener.

Mr. PHISTER. Does the Chair think this bill ought to go to the Committee on Claims?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks bills of this character have heretofore gone to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PHISTER. Then let it be so referred.

The SPEAKER. But the Chair has no wish to control the House in the least degree, and is quite willing to submit the question of reference to a vote.

Mr. KEIFER. I will say that we have pending in the Committee on Elections a number of such claims.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Ohio prefers that the bill should go to the Committee on Elections, the Chair will of course submit the question to the House.

Mr. KEIFER. That committee has before it a number of claims similar to this, involving the question of the election of an individual to a former House.

The SPEAKER. So far as the right of an individual to a seat in a former House is involved, that question is one beyond recall.

Mr. KEIFER. But so far as the compensation claimed depends upon the right to a seat that question is involved.

The SPEAKER. It might be considered as a matter of equity in determining the amount of compensation.

Mr. KEIFER. If there was no election at all, the person would be entitled to no compensation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is without any wish on the subject.

Mr. BLOUNT. Have the Committee on Elections been reporting such cases?

Mr. KEIFER. We have a number of them.

Mr. BLOUNT. What is the number before that committee? The gentleman from Kentucky referred to the case of Mr. Young Brown, but it is the only one I have ever known.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit this to the House.

Mr. CONGER. I move to amend by referring to the Committee on Claims.

The amendment was adopted; and the motion, as amended, was agreed to.

So the bill was referred to the Committee on Claims.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, announced the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the House of Representatives be respectfully requested to transmit to the Senate for examination in reference to the claims therein mentioned, now pending before the Senate, certain letters from the Secretary of the Interior, addressed to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and by him submitted to the House on the 13th day of May, 1874, and described in the House Journal of that day as "letters in relation to the private land claims of Jacques Clamorgan and Peter Provenchere."

It further announced the passage of a bill (H. R. No. 2004) to confirm the title of Charles Olivier Duclouzel to certain lands in the State of Louisiana, with an amendment in which concurrence was requested.

It further announced the passage of the following bills; in which concurrence was requested:

An act (S. No. 217) to introduce moral and social science into the public schools of the District of Columbia;

An act (S. No. 316) for the relief of homestead settlers on the public lands;

An act (S. No. 370) granting a pension to Phoebe C. Doxsie;

An act (S. No. 392) to remove the political disabilities of John R. F. Tatnall, of Georgia;

An act (S. No. 474) for the relief of William McGovern;

An act (S. No. 526) granting a pension to Esther E. Lieurance;

An act (S. No. 939) to amend the law relative to the seizure and forfeiture of vessels for breach of the revenue laws;

An act (S. No. 982) granting a pension to Spencer W. Tryon;

An act (S. No. 1049) to amend section 2447 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in relation to the issue of patents for private land claims confirmed by act of Congress;

An act (S. No. 1051) granting an increase of pension to Stephen D. Smith;

An act (S. No. 1097) granting a pension to Susan Fox;

An act (S. No. 1229) to authorize and direct the Commissioner of Agriculture to attend in person or by deputy, the international sheep and wool show to be held in the Centennial buildings, Fairmount Park, Philadelphia, September, A. D. 1880, and to make a full and complete report of the same, and for other purposes;

An act (S. No. 1231) granting a pension to Charlotte T. Alderman; and

An act (S. No. 1233) granting a pension to Frederick Weller.

WOODEN STILL.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4960) to amend section 3244 of the Revised Statutes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

BEN T. PERKINS, SR.

Mr. CALDWELL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4961) for the relief of Ben T. Perkins, sr., of Todd County, Kentucky; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

EQUALIZATION OF PENSIONS.

Mr. CALDWELL also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4962) to equalize all pensions for total disability under section 4695 of the Revised Statutes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

CHROMATE AND BICHROMATE OF POTASH.

Mr. CARLISLE (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4963) to amend the existing customs-revenue laws; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

UNITED STATES COURT, FRANKFORT, KENTUCKY.

Mr. WILLIS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4964) appropriating $1,500 for relabeling and restoring public documents in United States court at Frankfort, Kentucky; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC EXPENDITURE FOR GAS.

Mr. ACKLEN (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4965) to provide for greater economy in the public expenditure for gas; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

CALCASIEU RIVER, LOUISIANA.

Mr. ACKLEN also presented a joint resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Louisiana, asking an appropriation for Calcasieu River, Louisiana; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

TARIFF.

Mr. KING introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4966) to amend section 2505 of the Revised Statutes; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. KING. I move its reference to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws.

Mr. KEIFER. I move to amend by referring it to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill was accordingly referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CONGER moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. DUNNELL. I wish to ask a parliamentary question, whether it is necessary to make these motions to reconsider in such cases?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The rule provides that bills so introduced and referred shall not come back under a motion to reconsider. The motion to reconsider, therefore, is superfluous.

LOUISIANA NATIONAL GUARDS.

Mr. KING also introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 232) authorizing the Secretary of War to send camp equipage to the Louisiana National Guards; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CHARLES K. RAMSBURG.

Mr. URNER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4967) for the relief of Charles K. Ramsburg; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

DUTIES ON IMPORTS.

Mr. MORSE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4968) to amend the laws relating to the duties on imports; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. MORSE. I ask its reference to the Committee on Revision of the Laws.

Mr. DUNNELL. I move to amend by referring it to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. MORSE. Let the bill be read. I think the gentleman will see clearly that this should go to the Committee on Revision of the Laws.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. KELLEY. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. MORSE. Under the rules of the House if it be proper that this should go to the Committee on Ways and Means, I shall offer no objection.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORSE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4969) to amend the laws relating to the duties on imports; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. MORSE. This bill, I should think, ought to go to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws; and I ask its reference to that committee.

Mr. KELLEY. I move its reference to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. MORSE. If there be objection, I will not insist on my motion. Let it go to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORSE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4970) to amend section 2501 of the Revised Statutes; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. MORSE. I hope there will be no objection to the reference of this bill to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws.

Mr. KELLEY. I move its reference to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. MORSE. I shall not object to that reference.

The bill was accordingly referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

PROCEEDINGS IN ADMIRALTY.

Mr. CRAPO introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4971) to regulate proceedings in admiralty causes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

STEAMER T. U. BRADBURY.

Mr. NEWBERRY introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4972) to change the name of the steam-propeller T. U. Bradbury; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM G. GARRISON.

Mr. BREWER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4973) granting a pension to William G. Garrison, late of Company K, Fourteenth Michigan Infantry; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

CONSTRUCTION OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. BREWER also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4974) for the construction of public buildings by contract; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. BREWER. Let the bill be read in full.

The bill was read in full; and was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

GEORGE W. TOWLE.

Mr. WASHBURN introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4975) for the relief of George W. Towle; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PRICE OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. DUNNELL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4976) to reduce the price of public lands within railroad limits; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

BOOKS FOR MEMBERS AND SENATORS.

Mr. HOOKER introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 233) for supplying the members of the Senate and House of Representatives with such books as have heretofore been supplied to former members of the Senate and House; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

FRED HESS.

Mr. PHILIPS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4977) for the relief of Fred Hess of Jefferson City, Missouri; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that the President had approved bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 2804) for the relief of the administrator of John D. McGill;

An act (H. R. No. 3288) for the relief of colored emigrants; and

An act (H. R. No. 4903) to provide for the purchase of a site for a post-office and other Government buildings in the city of Baltimore, Maryland.

DUTY ON SALT.

Mr. HATCH introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4978) to provide for the importation of salt free of duty; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. KELLEY. I move to amend the motion so that the bill shall be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The question being put on Mr. KELLEY's amendment, the Speaker stated that the "ayes" appeared to have it.

Mr. HATCH. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 49 members voting therefor.

Mr. WHITE. What is the bill? Let it be read.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

Mr. CONGER. I call for the regular order. The morning hour has expired.

The SPEAKER. This is not the morning hour. This is the call of States and Territories under the new rule for bills and resolutions for reference.

Mr. CONGER. Does not the call cease at the termination of one hour?

The SPEAKER. There is no such provision in the new rule. After the States and Territories are called, there will be to-day a morning hour for reports of committees. The reading of the bill has been called for. It will be read.

The bill was read.

The question was taken on Mr. KELLEY's amendment; and there were—yeas 129, nays 93, not voting 70; as follows:

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin, with Mr. MCKENZIE, of Kentucky.

Mr. KITCHIN, of North Carolina, with Mr. MARTIN, of North Carolina.

Mr. DAVIS, of California, with Mr. PERRY, of California.

MILITIA OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. HATCH also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4979) to organize and discipline the militia of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Militia, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN J. KEY AND W. G. M. DAVIS.

Mr. VALENTINE (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4980) for the relief of John J. Key and W. G. M. Davis; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

NET-FISHING ON ATLANTIC COAST.

Mr. ROSS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4981) to prevent fishing along the Atlantic coast with purse or shirr nets, by smack vessels, steam-boats, steam-tugs, or any boat or boats of any description; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

POSTMASTER AT OCEAN GROVE.

Mr. ROSS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4982) for the relief of the postmaster at Ocean Grove, New Jersey; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

REPEAL OF TAX ON BANK CHECKS, MATCHES, ETC.

Mr. COX introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4983) to repeal the tax on bank checks, matches, legacies, and successions, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

CARRIAGE OF PASSENGERS AT SEA.

Mr. COX also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4984) relating to the carriage of passengers by sea; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

COMMERCIAL RELATIONS WITH ARGENTINE REPUBLIC.

Mr. MORTON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4985) to aid in increasing commercial relations with the Argentine Republic; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

JAPANESE INDEMNITY FUND.

Mr. MORTON also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4986) relating to the Japanese indemnity fund; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CHROMATE OF IRON.

Mr. COVERT introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4987) to admit chrome ore, known in chemistry as chromate of iron, free of duty; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

EXTORTION AND BLACK-MAILING IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. COVERT also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4988) to provide for the punishment of extortion and black-mailing in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

SUB-TREASURY BUILDING, NEW YORK.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4989) granting permission for the erection of certain statuary upon the buttresses in front of the sub-treasury building in the city of New York; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

SECTION 2505 OF REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4990) to amend section 2505 of the Revised Statutes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS EAST RIVER, NEW YORK.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD submitted the following resolution; which was read, and, under the rule, referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to transmit to this House any information in his Department in relation to the bridge now being erected over the East River at New York, and his opinion as to whether the said bridge is or is not an obstruction to commerce.

BENNETT J. DENSON.

Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4991) granting a pension to Bennett J. Denson, of Millport, Chemung County, New York; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

CHARLES A. DANOLDS.

Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4992) for the relief of Charles A. Danolds; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

COAST DEFENSE ASSOCIATION.

Mr. FERDON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4993) to incorporate the Coast Defense Association; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

LOAN OF TENTS FOR NORTH CAROLINA MILITIA.

Mr. SCALES introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 234) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan to the governor of North Carolina one hundred and forty-five tents for use of the State Guards, to enable them to participate in the centennial celebration at King's Mountain in October next; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. SCALES. I move the reference of this joint resolution to the Committee on the Militia.

Mr. WHITE. It should go to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania raise that question?

Mr. WHITE. Yes, sir; the resolution relates to the military establishment.

Mr. SCALES. I do not know that I have any preference as to where the resolution should go; but it is for the benefit of the militia of North Carolina.

Mr. WHITE. The subject relates to the military establishment.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read.

The joint resolution was read.

Mr. SCALES. I am entirely willing to be governed as to the reference of the resolution by the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not made any decision.

Mr. SCALES. I know that; but I am satisfied to submit to his decision, whatever it may be. I will only state again that the resolution is entirely for the benefit of the North Carolina militia.

Mr. WHITE. It properly belongs to the Committee on Military Affairs. It relates to some of the equipments of the United States Army.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that if the resolution relates to the militia of the United States it should go to the Committee on Militia; otherwise the Chair cannot imagine why there should be a Committee on the Militia.

Mr. SCALES. It relates to the militia of North Carolina, and nothing else.

The SPEAKER. But the Chair does not interpose his own view as against the wish of the House.

Mr. SCALES. If the Chair thinks the resolution should go to the Committee on the Militia, I hope it will be so referred.

Mr. WHITE. I raise the question that the proper reference is to the Committee on Military Affairs. I move that the resolution be so referred.

Mr. SPARKS. Let it go to the Committee on the Militia.

Mr. WHITE. Well, if you do not care, I do not.

Mr. SPARKS. The Committee on Military Affairs does not want it. The bill was referred to the Committee on the Militia, and ordered to be printed.

NANCY S. LEDFORD.

Mr. VANCE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4994) to restore Nancy S. Ledford to the pension-rolls; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

MINERVA E. SWEENEY.

ALLOWANCES OF ARMY OFFICERS.

Mr. YOUNG, of Ohio, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4996) defining the laws in relation to the allowances of certain officers of the Army for length of service; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

LANDS FOR OFFICERS AND SOLDIERS IN LATE WAR.

Mr. WARNER (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4997) granting lands to officers and enlisted men who served in the Army or Navy during the late war and were honorably discharged, to be in lieu of all other claims; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. WARNER. I move the reference of the bill to the Committee on Public Lands, though I am in doubt whether it should go to that committee or the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. Does it grant public lands?

Mr. WARNER. It relates to public lands.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that it proposes to give public lands to officers and soldiers of the United States who served in the late war.

Mr. CONGER. That would be a part of the bounty or payment of these officers or soldiers, and the bill should be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The question is for the House to decide; but the Chair thinks that all subjects in regard to the public lands belong to the Committee on Public Lands. He has, however, no wish about the matter. The gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. WARNER,] who introduced the bill, has suggested the Committee on Public Lands; and the bill will be so referred unless there be objection.

The bill was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

MRS. ELIZABETH B. CUSTER.

Mr. CLYMER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4998) granting a pension to Mrs. Elizabeth B. Custer, widow of General George A. Custer; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES H. CONLEY.

Mr. WHITE (by request) also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5012) for the relief of James H. Conley, of Pennsylvania; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PROMOTIONS ON THE ARMY RETIRED LIST.

Mr. OVERTON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5013) to provide for promotions on the retired list of the Army; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF PENSION LAWS.

Mr. BINGHAM introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5014) to amend the pension laws; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

EMMA A. RAMSEY.

Mr. WARD introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5015) granting a pension to Emma A. Ramsey and infant son, widow and heir of J. Allen Ramsey, surgeon of the One hundred and twenty-first Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

PROTECTION OF ORIGINAL INVENTORS.

Mr. WARD (by request) also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5016) to protect original inventors and promote the progress of the useful arts; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Patents, and ordered to be printed.

JETTIES, CHARLESTON BAR.

Mr. O'CONNOR introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5017) making an appropriation for the continuation of the work on the jetties now in course of construction for the deepening of Charleston Bar, and for the improvement of the harbor of Charleston, South Carolina; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

SCHOOL-FARM LAND, SOUTH CAROLINA.

Mr. O'CONNOR also introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 235) to provide for the redemption and sale of school-farm lands in South Carolina; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM H. BROWN.

Mr. WHITTHORNE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5018) for the relief of William H. Brown, of Wayne County, Tennessee, to be enrolled as a pensioner; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

TARIFF.

Mr. WHITTHORNE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5019) to amend section 2504 of the Revised Statutes; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I move its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CONGER. Let the bill be read.

The bill was read.

Mr. CONGER. I move the reference of the bill to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. CONGER's motion was agreed to; and the bill was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

DR. A. H. BROWN.

Mr. WHITTHORNE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5020) for the relief of Dr. A. H. Brown, of Maury County, Tennessee, for services rendered as surgeon; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

LUTHER M. BLACKMAN.

Mr. HOUK introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5021) for the relief of Luther M. Blackman; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ATTACHMENT OF PROPERTY, ETC.

Mr. CULBERSON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5022) to amend section 915 of the Revised Statutes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

TEXAS CENTRAL RAILWAY.

Mr. MILLS (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5023) to constitute the Texas Central Railway a military, commercial, and postal highway, and to aid in its extension from the meridian of one hundred degrees of west longitude to the western boundary of Texas; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN AVERILL.

Mr. JOYCE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5024) granting a pension to John Averill, a soldier of the war of 1812; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

REPEAL OF SECTION 641 OF REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. TUCKER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5025) to repeal section 641 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

CIVIL RIGHTS OF CITIZENS.

Mr. TUCKER also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5026) to repeal the fourth section of the act entitled "An act to protect all citizens in their civil and legal rights," approved March 1, 1875; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

BOUNTY LANDS.

Mr. HUNTON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5027) to repeal section 3480 of the Revised Statutes so far as bounty lands are concerned; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

DR. A. S. TEBBS.

Mr. HUNTON also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5028) for the relief of Dr. A. S. Tebbs from the operation of section 1218 of the Revised Statutes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

REGISTER TO FOREIGN-BUILT SHIP.

Mr. KENNA (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5029) to grant an American register to a foreign-built ship for purposes of scientific exploration; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

UNITED STATES ARMORY, HARPER'S FERRY, WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. MARTIN, of West Virginia, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5030) appropriating $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, out of the moneys collected from the abated prices paid and sales of the United States armory at Harper's Ferry, West Virginia, to pay for necessary surveying, repairs, costs of sale of said property, &c.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

HARBOR AT KEWAUNEE, LAKE MICHIGAN.

Mr. BOUCK presented the memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, for the construction of a harbor at Keweenaw, on Lake Michigan, Wisconsin; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

REGULATION OF FREIGHTS.

Mr. BOUCK also presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Wisconsin, for the passage of a law regulating freights and to establish maximum rates; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

JURORS AND WITNESSES IN TERRITORIES.

RIGHT OF WAY TO THE BEAR BUTTE RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. BENNETT also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5035) granting the right of way to the Bear Butte and Deadwood Railway Company through Fort Meade military reservation; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MONROE DOCTRINE.

Mr. KING. I rise to a privileged question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KING. The Committee on the Inter-oceanic Ship-Canal, which has the right to report at any time, have instructed me unanimously to report the following joint resolution (H. R. No. 236) reaffirming the Monroe doctrine, and request that it may be read for the information of the House.

The SPEAKER. The committee to which the gentleman refers has the right under the resolution creating the same to report at any time. The Clerk will read the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the establishment of any form of protectorate by any one of the powers of Europe over any of the independent states of this continent, or the introduction from any quarter of a scheme or policy which would carry with it a right to any European power to interfere with their concerns, or to control in any other manner their destiny, or the transfer to any such power, by conquest, cession, or acquisition in any other way of any of those states, or any portion thereof, is a measure to which this Government has, in the declaration of President Monroe in his message of December 2, 1823, and known as the Monroe doctrine, avowed its opposition, and which, should the attempt be made, it will regard and treat as dangerous to our peace, prosperity, and safety.

2. Resolved, That it is the interest and right of the United States to have the possession, direction, control, and government of any canal, railroad, or other artificial communication to be constructed across the isthmus connecting the American continents for the transfer of vessels and cargoes from the Caribbean Sea to the Pacific Ocean, whether the same be built or constructed at Panama, Nicaragua, or elsewhere; and in view of the magnitude of this interest it is the duty of the United States to insist that if built, and by whomsoever the same may be commenced, prosecuted, or completed, and whatever the nationality of its corporators or the source of their capital, that the interest of the United States and their right to possess and control the said canal or other artificial communication will be asserted and maintained whenever in their opinion it shall become necessary.

3. And be it further resolved, That the President be requested to take steps necessary and proper for the abrogation of any existing treaties whose terms are in conflict with this declaration of principles.

Mr. KING. I am directed by the Committee on the Inter-oceanic Canal unanimously to report that resolution and to move its adoption. I move the previous question.

Mr. REAGAN. That is a very important measure, and ought not to be passed thus hastily.

Mr. GARFIELD. I would suggest to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. KING] to allow the resolution to be printed, so that members of the House may see it before being required to vote on the resolution. It would be far better, in case it approves itself to the mind of the House, to have a unanimous vote in its favor than to push it to a vote now when it has never been seen in print. If it is urged at this time many gentlemen doubtless would be exceedingly sorry to have to vote against a measure which they might support if they had an opportunity of seeing it in print and knowing what it is. I suggest that the committee have the right to call it up at any time, and nothing will be lost by its going over now.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I will state to the gentleman from Ohio that the resolution has been printed in the morning papers.

Mr. GARFIELD. The resolution has no official print. It has never been printed by this House. I have never seen it in print anywhere.

Mr. WEAVER. Neither have I.

The SPEAKER. If the House gives its consent to the resolution being called up at any time the gentleman from Louisiana can move that it be printed, and allow it to go over.

Mr. REAGAN. I will say to the gentleman from Louisiana that I think that is the course he ought to take.

Mr. KING. Very well.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks that the resolution be printed, and also that it be printed in the RECORD, reserving the privilege of calling it up at any time for action. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

JOHN R. PERRINE.

Mr. HAWK introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5036) granting arrears of pension to John R. Perrine; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JUSTUS C. BOWLES.

Mr. HAWK also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5037) granting a pension to Justus C. Bowles; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

GEORGE WILLIAMS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DIBRELL] to ask that the reference of certain papers made by mistake be corrected, and that the papers be sent to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DIBRELL. On the 20th February the Speaker laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, in reply to resolutions of the House of January 14 and 20, 1880, transmitting papers in the case of George Williams. These were referred by mistake to the Committee on Claims. I ask that that committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that they be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and be printed.

Mr. CONGER. I ask that all the papers may be printed, and then the House can dispose of the question of reference.

Mr. DIBRELL. My request is that they be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and that an order be made to print them.

Mr. CONGER. I have no objection to the printing. I ask that all the papers, and not merely a part of them, be printed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] does not object to these papers being taken from the Committee on Claims and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs provided an order be at the same time made that all the papers shall be printed, and not merely a part of them.

Mr. DIBRELL. I agree to that.

The SPEAKER. Upon that understanding, which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DIBRELL] will see executed, there is no further objection.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to say one word further. That order to print includes all papers called for from the Department and furnished by the Department.

Mr. DIBRELL. Yes; letters and all.

There being no further objection, the papers were transferred from the Committee on Claims to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CONTESTED ELECTION OF BRADLEY VS. SLEMONS.

Mr. SAWYER. I rise to a privileged question. I am instructed by a majority of the Committee on Elections to present a report in the contested-election case of John M. Bradley vs. William F. Slemmons from the second congressional district of Arkansas, accompanied by a resolution which has the concurrence of every member of the committee except one. I move that the report be laid upon the table and printed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri makes a privileged report from the Committee on Elections in relation to the contested-election case from the second congressional district of Arkansas. The Clerk will read the resolution.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That William F. Slemmons is entitled to retain the seat he now occupies as Representative from the second congressional district in the State of Arkansas in the Forty-sixth Congress.

Mr. WEAVER. I ask leave to present the views of the minority of the Committee on Elections in this case, and I ask that the resolution accompanying them be read and that they be printed with the report of the majority of the committee.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the seat now occupied by William F. Slemmons as a member of Congress from the second congressional district of the State of Arkansas in the Forty-sixth Congress be, and the same hereby is, declared vacant.

The report of the majority of the Committee on Elections, together with the views of the minority, was ordered to be printed.

Mr. SAWYER. I give notice that at an early day I will call up this case for consideration.

Mr. WEAVER. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WEAVER. It is the desire of the contestant that he be allowed the floor for one hour to present his side of the case. In view of that request, to which I believe the Committee on Elections will urge no objections, I will state to the House that no further time will be occupied on behalf of the contestant.

The SPEAKER. It is usual to present such a request when the case comes up; such a privilege has generally been allowed a contestant when the request is made.

Mr. WEAVER. Very well; with that understanding I have nothing further to offer.

POLICE FORCE OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, ETC.

Mr. HUNTON. I ask consent to present at this time for reference to the Committee on the District of Columbia a petition signed by some twenty-five thousand citizens of the District of Columbia, asking that the police force of the District be increased to three hundred men, and that the criminal law be so amended as to make the crime of rape a capital offense. And I ask that the body of the petition be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The petition was as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

GENTLEMEN: Your petitioners, male and female residents of the District of Columbia, beg leave to call your attention to the apparent inability of our present police force to restrain the terrible increase of crime in our midst; and we earnestly and urgently request that you immediately raise the effective force of the Metropolitan police to three hundred privates, besides officers, and that you amend the criminal code of the District of Columbia by making the crime of rape a capital offense.

And we will ever respectfully pray, &c.

This memorial is signed by a majority of the representative men and by many estimable ladies, residents and property-holders in the city of Washington, representing every department of the General and District governments, every business pursuit, every profession and trade, and every class of citizens without regard to race, religious belief, or political affiliation.

The citizens' committee would respectfully represent that our best citizens are decidedly in favor of a larger increase of the police force than has been suggested in any bill heretofore presented to Congress, and trust that it may please the legislative department of our National Government to give additional security to life, property, and virtue in our capital city by suitable and speedy legislation.

Respectfully submitted.

SAML. H. WALKER,
Chairman Citizens' Committee.

The petition was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

WILLIAM MCGOVERN.

Mr. COX. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for consideration at this time a private bill, which has just come over from the Senate, for the relief of William McGovern. During the last session of Congress the papers in this case were lost. They have now been found and the bill has passed the Senate and come over to the House, and I ask that it may now be taken up and considered at this time.

There was no objection, and the bill (S. No. 474) for the relief of William McGovern was taken from the Speaker's table and read a first and second time.

The bill directs the Secretary of War to cause to be issued to William McGovern, late of Company C of the late First Regiment of the New York Volunteers, an honorable discharge from the service, to date from September 9, 1861.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be read a third time.

Mr. COX. I have here the report made by Senator COCKRELL from the Senate Committee on Military Affairs. I will not ask to have it read, but I will ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The report is as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 474) for the relief of William McGovern, have carefully considered the same, and submit the following report:

This bill directs the Secretary of War to cause William McGovern, of Company C of the First Regiment New York Volunteers, to be mustered out and honorably discharged from the service, to date from September 9, 1861. In the Forty-fifth Congress a similar bill, dating, however, the discharge from April 1, 1864, was passed by the House of Representatives, and was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs in the Senate, where no further action was taken. The Committee on Military Affairs in the Senate in the Forty-fifth Congress applied to the Secretary of War for information, and received from him the military record of said McGovern, taken from the records in his office. From the records in the War Department it appears "that William McGovern was enrolled and mustered into service as a sergeant on the 3d day of May, 1861, at New York, in Company G, First Regiment of New York Volunteers, for two years. On muster-roll of Company C of that regiment, to which transferred, months of — to June 30, 1861, he is reported present; July and August, 1861, absent, sick in New York; September and October, 1861, absent, sick in New York; wounded at Big Bethel June 10, 1861. He was admitted to New York hospital, New York City, August 28, 1861, with lumbago, and discharged from treatment September 9, 1861. He having failed to return to the service is considered a deserter from that date. Dishonorably discharged to date September 9, 1861, by reason of desertion."

This dishonorable discharge was furnished in 1876.

The Adjutant-General, under date of February 11, 1879, in answer to an inquiry for the rules and regulations existing at that time touching his duties about reporting, &c., when in hospital and leaving it, says:

"I beg leave to remark that no special rules or regulations exist as to the duties of a soldier while in hospital, inasmuch as his status at such time has no variance from that of a soldier serving with his command in the field. His duties in either case are prescribed by the rules and regulations of war, which forbid him to leave his command without proper authority, upon the penalty of being considered a deserter and treated accordingly. This man was discharged from the hospital at New York City on the 9th of September, 1861, his duty being to rejoin his command without delay, applying to the military authorities for transportation in the event of being unable to travel at his own expense, or if his illness still continued, to have entered some United States hospital within the limits of the city of New York or elsewhere, or to have reported his case to his company or any other military authority, and have awaited instructions. Failing in any manner to perform such duty or duties, there remains no alternative but to consider him a deserter."

The foregoing shows the actual record in the War Department and the rules and regulations governing in such cases. Do these records show all the facts touching the actual condition and actions of William McGovern from September 9, 1861, when removed from hospital, to the expiration of his term? William McGovern under oath states that he "received a wound in his left side near the spine from a fragment of shell at the battle of Big Bethel, in Virginia, June 10, 1861, and was treated in the field hospital in the Sinclair House, near Fortress Monroe, till July 3, 1861, when he was sent to Newport News, and thence to New York, July 13, 1861, by proper military authority, and that he was under treatment in the New York City hospital for some time, when he was removed to his own home in said city of New York, under proper military authority; and that as soon as he was able to move about he went to the headquarters of Surgeon Alexander B. Mott, in said city, and reported, and was examined; and said surgeon made out a certificate in his presence, and assured him that he would forward the same to the proper parties; and that he did all he could to conform to the regulations; and that he has remained disabled ever since the receipt of said wounds and was wholly unable to perform any military duty during the entire term of his enlistment."

Joseph Burke and Bernard McDonald, in 1876, state under oath that for fifteen years then past they had been intimately acquainted with William McGovern, and that his reputation for truth and veracity is good. Dr. Franklin Smith, a regular physician in good standing, testifies under date September 30, 1876, that he was well acquainted with William McGovern, and had been for upwards of twenty years past, and "that said William McGovern came home on furlough on or about July 16, 1861, and was suffering from a severe contusion of his spine just at the small of his back, and also from severe internal injuries, caused, as deponent was informed, by a wound from a fragment of shell; that deponent treated said McGovern professionally for said injuries as soon as he so arrived home, and for several years afterward, and knows personally that said McGovern was so disabled through the effects of such injuries during the entire month of August, 1861, and for a long time afterward as to render it impossible for him to proceed to his regiment, or to the hospital from which he had received his furlough, and said McGovern still remains very seriously affected from said injuries."

Dr. John J. Connell, late assistant surgeon Third United States Colored Heavy Artillery, under date March 27, 1879, testifies that "during the latter part of the year 1861, and at intervals during the year 1862, up to the month of May, 1863, he several times examined Sergeant William McGovern, late of Company C, First New York Volunteers, and found him suffering from gunshot wounds, one in left thigh and two in right leg, one above the knee and one below; also, a severe contusion in right lumbar region caused by a fragment of shell; said wounds having been received at the battle of Big Bethel, Virginia, June 10, 1861, and that in his opinion Sergeant McGovern was utterly unable to do military duty or to report in person to his regiment, and that Sergeant McGovern is permanently disabled by reason of said wounds."

Farrel McGovern, a resident of New York, under date of March 9, 1878, testifies that he was in the same regiment with said William; saw him wounded at Big Bethel; was discharged by reason of natural disability, and went home with the said William McGovern on the steamer Stars and Stripes; saw him in the field hospital, and subsequently in the New York hospital, and also at his own residence in said city; and that the said William went from the hospital to his own home by permission of his military superiors, and that said William has ever since remained unable to travel by reason of said wounds.

Martin Riley, a resident of New York, under date of May 4, 1878, testifies that he was in the same company of said regiment (Company C) with William McGovern; saw him wounded at Big Bethel; saw him in the field hospital at Fortress Monroe, and subsequently in a New York hospital, in a disabled condition, the effects of said wounds; and that afterward, in company with Colonel Garrett Dyckman, of the same regiment, saw said McGovern lying sick at his own residence in New York, still suffering from the effects of said wound, about October 30, 1861, and heard Colonel Dyckman tell said McGovern he was totally unfit for further service, and was entitled to his discharge and pension certificate, and that he would send them to him; and that he again saw said McGovern when the First Regiment was mustered out of the service, and he was then suffering from the effects of said wound, and unable to walk without aid of a crutch.

James Sheehan and Thomas McCauley, of New York, under date April 24, 1878, testify that to their personal knowledge William McGovern was so badly wounded and disabled when he came home, in July, 1861, that he was totally disabled and got permission to leave the hospital, and was attended at his home for several years thereafter; and that from September, 1861, to the date of the discharge of his regiment, in May, 1863, he was never able to go out of the house without assistance, and only then with a cane and crutch, and having the help of another party, and that they frequently called upon him during the years 1861, 1862, and 1863.

The Adjutant-General United States Army, under date of January 6, 1880, in answer to a letter from Mr. COCKRELL to him, in relation to the removal of the charge of desertion, says:

"The War Department has ample power now 'to do equal and exact justice to every applicant for such relief.' There are a few cases of one class in which the action of Congress would be beneficent and not injurious to military discipline as an example or precedent. When a soldier, having become disabled by wounds from any future service, leaves a hospital without permission, and is reported a deserter, the charge is technically true; but the rule which would oblige the man to stay in hospital until freed by regular discharge is made in the interest of humanity and to enable the Government to fulfill its contract to nurse and heal its sick and wounded. That the man has become weary of restraint and longs for his home is no great offense under such circumstances. It is thought, however, that such rare instances would be better met by special acts for the benefit of individuals, since a general law could not be framed that would discriminate between cases of actual merit and of malingering. It would be difficult to frame a law that would not place many men actually at fault upon the same footing with those whose unblemished service it was intended to reward by bounties or pensions."

The evidence in this case does not contradict the record, but explains the same and accounts for the absence of McGovern, and shows the cause thereof, which the record does not. Is McGovern guilty of desertion according to his record and the evidence? Did he leave his command or the hospital with the intent—the animus—not to return? The evidence clearly shows that he left his command by reason of severe wounds and with leave and went to the New York hospital. His muster-rolls, his record up to and including the month of October, 1861, show the same facts. The evidence further shows that being wholly unfit for duty by reason of his injuries he left the hospital with permission and went to his own home in the same city, and there remained, wholly unfit for duty, until his regiment was discharged.

Your committee find that this case is an exceptional one, and comes clearly within the class of cases referred to in the foregoing quotation from the letter of the Adjutant-General, and should be met by special legislation.

Your committee, therefore, recommend the insertion of the words "to be issued to," just before "William McGovern," and the word "late" just after, in line 4, and the striking out of the words "to be mustered out" and the letter "d," in line 5, and the letters "y" and "d," in line 6, and the substitution of the letter "e" for said "y," and, as thus amended, recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COX moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INTEROCEANIC CANAL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith the report of the Secretary of State, and the accompanying papers, in response to the resolution adopted by the House of Representatives on the 10th of February last, requesting "copies of all correspondence in relation to the interoceanic canal which may have passed between this Government and foreign governments; also between this Government and its own representatives in other countries, and between this Government and individuals interested in, or proposing to be interested in, negotiations for the construction of such a canal; and that he communicate to this House what, if any, treaty obligations with other governments rest upon this Government."

In further compliance with the resolution of the House, I deem it proper to state briefly my opinion as to the policy of the United States with respect to the construction of an interoceanic canal by any route across the American Isthmus.

The policy of this country is a canal under American control. The United States cannot consent to the surrender of this control to any European power or to any combination of European powers. If existing treaties between the United States and other nations, or if the rights of sovereignty or property of other nations, stand in the way of this policy—a contingency which is not apprehended—suitable steps should be taken by just and liberal negotiations to promote and establish the American policy on this subject, consistently with the rights of the nations to be affected by it.

The capital invested by corporations or citizens of other countries in such an enterprise must in a great degree look for protection to one or more of the great powers of the world. No European power can intervene for such protection without adopting measures on this continent which the United States would deem wholly inadmissible. If the protection of the United States is relied upon, the United States must exercise such control as will enable this country to protect its national interests and maintain the rights of those whose private capital is embarked in the work.

An interoceanic canal across the American isthmus will essentially change the geographical relations between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts of the United States, and between the United States and the rest of the world. It will be the great ocean thoroughfare between our Atlantic and our Pacific shores, and virtually a part of the coast line of the United States. Our merely commercial interest in it is greater than that of all other countries, while its relations to our power and prosperity as a nation, to our means of defense, our unity, peace, and safety, are matters of paramount concern to the people of the United States. No other great power would, under similar circumstances, fail to assert a rightful control over a work so closely and vitally affecting its interest and welfare.

Without urging further the grounds of my opinion, I repeat, in conclusion, that it is the right and the duty of the United States to assert and maintain such supervision and authority over any interoceanic canal across the Isthmus that connects North and South America, as will protect our national interests. This I am quite sure will be found not only compatible with, but promotive of the widest and most permanent advantage to commerce and civilization.

RUTHERFORD B. HAYES.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, March 8, 1880.

NOTE.—The documents referred to in this message accompany a message of the President on the same subject, sent this day to the Senate.

Mr. WHITTHORNE moved that the message just read be referred to the Select Committee on Interoceanic Canal and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

ARMY AND NAVY PENSIONS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a revised estimate of deficiencies for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, in the appropriations for Army and Navy pensions; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

TRANSPORTATION OF SILVER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, recommending an appropriation of $67,000 for the transportation of silver; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

LIGHT-SHIP IN DELAWARE BAY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, in reply to a resolution of the House calling for the views of the Department on the proposition to establish a light-ship in Delaware Bay; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

GEORGE WILLIAMS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, renewing his recommendation that the papers in the claim of George Williams be printed; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SURVEYS OF VERMILION RIVER, ETC., LOUISIANA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report of surveys of Vermilion River and other waters in Louisiana; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

EDUCATION OF COLORED YOUTH.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a memorial of the trustees of the Peabody education fund, praying Congress to grant such aid as may be required to secure to the colored population of the Southern States the education necessary to fit them for the discharge of their duties as citizens of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. WARD, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 3968) for the relief of certain actual settlers on the Kansas trust and diminished-reserve lands, in the State of Kansas.

ILLINOIS AND MICHIGAN CANAL.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

With a view to the improvement of the water communication between the Mississippi River and Lake Michigan by the Illinois River, Illinois and Michigan Canal, and Chicago River.

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring), That a committee, consisting of two Senators and three members of the House, be appointed, authorized, and empowered to ascertain upon what terms the State of Illinois will relinquish and transfer to the United States all and singular its property and rights of property in and to the line of water communication known as the Illinois and Michigan Canal, between Chicago, Illinois, and the Illinois River, at La Salle, Illinois, including its locks and dams, canal franchises, and rights of way, or so much of the same as shall in the judgment of the said committee be needed for such purpose, and report its findings to this House on or before the 1st day of February, 1881.

LANDS IN SEVERALTY FOR INDIANS.

Mr. SCALES, by unanimous consent, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 354, a bill (H. R. No. 5038) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to allot lands in severalty to Indians; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. PRICE. I ask leave to withdraw from the files of the House papers in the case of Alexander C. Crawford, of Texas, whose claim is now pending.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, this request will be granted, in accordance with the new rule on the subject, upon leaving certified copies with the clerk.

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. KITCHIN, for one day.

FREDERICK FREDLEY.

Mr. PACHECO, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5039) for the relief of Frederick Fredley, of Yuma, Arizona Territory; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

FORT RIPLEY MILITARY RESERVATION, MINNESOTA.

Mr. WASHBURN. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table, for concurrence in the amendments of the Senate, the bill (H. R. No. 1153) to restore to the public domain a part of the military reservation known as the Fort Ripley reservation, in the State of Minnesota, and for other purposes.

Mr. WHITE. I reserve the right to object until the bill and amendments are read.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I object.

Mr. WHITE. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and thirty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, March 9, 1880.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.
The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

INTEROCEANIC CANAL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate:

I transmit herewith the report of the Secretary of State and the accompanying papers, in response to the resolution adopted by the Senate on the 11th day of February last, requesting copies of all correspondence between this Government and any foreign government since February, 1869, respecting a ship-canal across the Isthmus, between North America and South America, together with copies of any project of treaties respecting the same which the Department of State may have proposed or submitted since that date to any foreign power or its diplomatic representative.

In further compliance with the resolution of the Senate, I deem it proper to state briefly my opinion as to the policy of the United States with respect to the construction of an interoceanic canal by any route across the American isthmus.

The policy of this country is a canal under American control. The United States cannot consent to the surrender of this control to any European power or to any combination of European powers. If existing treaties between the United States and other nations, or if the rights of sovereignty or property of other nations stand in the way of this policy—a contingency which is not apprehended—suitable steps should be taken by just and liberal negotiations to promote and establish the American policy on this subject consistently with the rights of the nations to be affected by it.

The capital invested by corporations or citizens of other countries in such an enterprise must, in a great degree, look for protection to one or more of the great powers of the world. No European power can intervene for such protection without adopting measures on this continent which the United States would deem wholly inadmissible. If the protection of the United States is relied upon the United States must exercise such control as will enable this country to protect its national interests and maintain the rights of those whose private capital is embarked in the work.

An interoceanic canal across the American isthmus will essentially change the geographical relations between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts of the United States, and between the United States and the rest of the world. It would be the great ocean thoroughfare between our Atlantic and our Pacific shores, and virtually a part of the coast line of the United States. Our merely commercial interest in it is greater than that of all other countries, while its relations to our power and prosperity as a nation, to our means of defense, our unity, peace, and safety, are matters of paramount concern to the people of the United States. No other great power would, under similar circumstances, fail to assert a rightful control over a work so closely and vitally affecting its interest and welfare.

Without urging further the grounds of my opinion, I repeat, in conclusion, that it is the right and the duty of the United States to assert and maintain such supervision and authority over any interoceanic canal across the isthmus that connects North and South America as will protect our national interests. This, I am quite sure, will be found not only compatible with but promotive of the widest and most permanent advantage to commerce and civilization.

RUTHERFORD B. HAYES.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, March 8, 1880.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. This message, with the accompanying documents, will be printed.

Mr. PENDLETON. I move its reference to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. And when printed, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 18th ultimo, a report of the acting commissioner of the General Land Office as to the amount in gross of unsold public lands in the counties of Chippewa and Schoolcraft, in the State of Michigan, and the length of time such lands have been in market; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with the requirements of the joint resolution of June 28, 1879, copy of a report from Major W. H. H. Benyard, Corps of Engineers, of a survey of the Mississippi River near Lake Concordia, Louisiana, and Cowpen Bend, Mississippi, looking to the protection of the harbors of Natchez and Vidalia; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of December 2, 1879, information concerning located but unimproved private land claims in the State of Louisiana, and transmitting a copy of a report of the surveyor-general of Louisiana on the subject, to whom the matter was referred by the Commissioner of the General Land Office; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, in answer to a resolution of the Senate relative to the number of paymasters in the Navy, and stating under what circumstances the name of Edward Bellows was dropped from the roll of paymasters; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, dated the 5th instant, and accompanying copy of a report of Major J. A. Smith, Corps of Engineers, of an examination and survey made, in compliance with the river and harbor act of March 3, 1879, of Kankakee River, in Indiana and Illinois; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a copy of a report of Major J. W. Wilson, Corps of Engineers, in regard to the improvement of Sandusky River at Fremont, Ohio, and giving an estimate of the cost of the improvement; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

COURT IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. THURMAN. I hold in my hand a paper which I have been requested to present to the Senate. It is a memorial of delegates of certain of the Indian tribes in the Indian Territory, of W. P. Adair, assistant principal chief, John L. Adair, R. M. Wolf and R. Bunch of the Cherokee delegation, P. Porter and D. M. Hodge, of the Creek delegation, P. P. Pitchlynn, Choctaw delegate, John F. Brown, Seminole delegate, Charles Bluejacket and Charles Tucker, Shawnee representatives, and J. M. Bryan, old settler Shawnee commissioner. The object of the memorial is to remonstrate against the passage of Senate bill No. 416, to establish a United States court in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes, reported by the Committee on Territories.

I am aware, Mr. President, that it has been said the absolute right of petition to Congress belongs to citizens of the United States alone; but I believe no one will question the right or propriety of either branch of Congress receiving a petition from other persons, couched in respectful language and upon a subject that the Senate or the House thinks ought to be considered, especially when the memorialists are inhabitants of the United States and are, as the Indians have been called, wards of the nation. I believe that in no instance has a memorial from the representatives of the Indian tribes been refused to be received by either House of Congress. I therefore have no doubt of the propriety of presenting this memorial. But I am further requested, in view of the legal questions presented by the bill referred to, in view of the fact that it establishes a court, and that the establishment of courts has usually, and, perhaps, universally been passed upon by the Judiciary Committee, and in view of the further fact that the bill is said to interfere with treaty obligations of the Government to destroy vested rights, and to raise a very serious question as to what will be the status of these Indians under the fourteenth article of amendments of the Constitution, should the bill become a law—in view of these considerations I have been asked to move that the memorial (not the bill, but the memorial) be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary for the opinion of that committee upon these legal questions.

I have almost constantly opposed the reference of a bill reported from one committee to the Judiciary Committee because there were legal questions involved in it, inasmuch as every committee of this body, I believe without an exception, contains some able lawyer or lawyers; but the Senate have again and again overruled me, and even have gone so far as to take a bill reported by some other committee and refer it to the Judiciary Committee for an opinion upon the legal questions involved in the bill.

Under these circumstances and in view of the legal questions and their great importance involved in the bill, and especially in view of the fact that it creates a court, which comes more properly within the jurisdiction of the Judiciary Committee, I move that this memorial be received, and that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President, there can be no question of the propriety and of the absolute right of receiving the memorial. Petitions have been received repeatedly from these people, and will continue to be, and no one objects to their reception. A very serious objection, however, arises to the reference of the memorial to the Judiciary Committee at present, which I wish the Senate to consider and dispose of as it may see proper.

The Senator from Missouri, [Mr. VEST,] who is not now in his seat, reported some days since a bill from the Committee on Territories, in which this subject is sought to be disposed of. The bill is upon the Calendar, and is printed. Early in the session of the Senate, when the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] introduced a bill looking to the establishment of courts in that country, the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] who is not now in his seat, objected to its reference to the Committee on Territories, and asked that it should go to the Committee on the Judiciary. It took that direction, but on the next day the Senator from Vermont withdrew his objection, and the reference was changed to the Committee on Territories.

The Committee on Territories have had this subject under consideration almost ever since the present session began, and not only this particular question but the whole territorial relations of that country to the United States.

If the position of the Senator from Ohio is correct, that because there is an establishment of a court in this matter therefore it should go to the Judiciary Committee, you can abolish at once the Committee on Territories and let it be absorbed by the Committee on the Judiciary, because there is no bill which organizes or seeks to organize a Territory that does not at the same time establish a court for that Territory. If the Senator's position be correct, you can abolish all the other committees, because there is a law question in every solitary bill or every solitary resolution that comes up for the consideration of the Senate, and you will have no use then for any other committee but that on the judiciary.

This question has already been passed upon by a reference of the matter to the Committee on Territories. I have no preference as to which committee shall take it; indeed I should be glad to be freed of the subject altogether, but I am upon both these committees, so that there is no escape for me to that extent.

The proper course, it seems to me, is for the memorial to be printed and lie upon the table. Every member of the Judiciary Committee can express his views when the bill comes up, as every other Senator can. But a few days ago the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CARPENTER] offered a resolution on the subject of this same matter and asked that it go to the Judiciary Committee. I objected to it at the time, and the resolution went over. Now, if the Senate refers the memorial to the Judiciary Committee, I shall in course ask that the resolution of the Senator from Wisconsin be referred to that committee, and then I shall ask that the bill reported by the Senator from Missouri be committed to the Committee on the Judiciary for them to dispose of it.

Mr. THURMAN. I intended to say, but forgot to do it, that in presenting the memorial and moving its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary, it was not my purpose to express any opinion whatever upon the bill or any one of its provisions. It is a subject of vast importance as a matter of public policy, as a question of justice to these Indians, as a question of the observance of our treaty stipulations, and especially in regard to the establishment of a court, whether we shall go beyond the treaty which provides for a court of criminal jurisdiction in the Territory, and give to a court to be there established an entire and full civil jurisdiction. These are certainly grave and important questions, upon which I do not, without great care and consideration, desire to express any opinion.

I concur in a great deal that has been said by the Senator from Arkansas, and have in my feeble way said the same things to the Senate more than once and tried to restrict the jurisdiction of the Judiciary Committee to matters connected with the judicial system of the United States. I have never been successful; I have been voted down again and again, and the Senate has taken a bill bodily, reported by some other committee, and sent it to the Committee on the Judiciary in order to have the opinion of the law committee of the body.

I do not crave jurisdiction over this subject, I am sure, for the committee to which I belong; but I feel it my duty to let the Senate decide it and say whether under all the circumstances of this case the memorial should go to that committee in order that they may consider the legal questions. Certainly the questions of public policy which are concerned do not belong to that committee; they belong to the Committee on Territories or to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I do not suppose that the Judiciary Committee would attempt to exercise any jurisdiction over those questions of mere public policy. I suppose that if the memorial shall go to that committee it will confine itself to the consideration of the legal questions.

However, I have no feeling about it one way or the other, no particular wish about it; but if there ever was a case in which it is proper to refer a bill reported from one committee to the Law Committee of the Senate in order to obtain its legal opinion, this might be said to be such a case.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Shall the memorial be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. GARLAND. I wish to make a suggestion to the Senator from Ohio. The Senate may dispose of the question of reference as it sees proper so far as I am concerned; but the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] who reported the bill is out of his seat. Will the Senator from Ohio consent to let the question lie over until he comes in? I prefer it, as the Senator from Missouri reported the bill.

Mr. THURMAN. I have no objection. The memorial is received, and the motion to refer is pending.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The motion to refer should hardly lie on the table, because that is a final disposition of it practically. I suggest that the matter go over until to-morrow, and come up again in the morning hour, by unanimous consent.

Mr. GARLAND. I have no objection whatever.

Mr. THURMAN. That is what I mean,—let the motion to refer lie over.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, sir.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection; and the further consideration of the motion to refer the memorial to the Committee on the Judiciary is postponed until to-morrow.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented the memorial of several citizens of Pleasant Point, Ohio, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. No. 496) providing for the examination and adjudication of pension claims; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of several citizens of Pleasant Point, Ohio, praying for the passage of a law providing for the equalization of bounties; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented the petition of several citizens of Pleasant Point, Ohio, praying for the passage of the Weaver bill, for the relief of soldiers and sailors of the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SAUNDERS presented the petition of J. W. Dean, Isaac Hart, E. H. Wilcox, and 27 others, citizens of Nebraska, who served in the late war, praying for the passage of a bill for the equalization of bounties; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, presented the memorial of Harrison, Havemeyer & Co., of Philadelphia, and others, importers, refiners, and dealers in sugars, remonstrating against changing the present classification of raw sugars; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of J. M. Rockwell and 13 others, citizens of West Burlington Township, Bradford County, Pennsylvania, praying for such legislation as will prevent fluctuations in freights and unjust discriminations in charges for transportation; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented the petition of Ezra Loomis, and 13 others, citizens of West Burlington Township, Bradford County, Pennsylvania, praying for the establishment of a Department of Agriculture; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

He also presented the petition of citizens of West Burlington, Bradford County, Pennsylvania, praying such an amendment of the patent laws as will protect innocent users of patented articles from prosecution as infringers; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. SLATER presented memorials of citizens of Benton County, Wayne County, Marion County, Polk County, Wasco County, Douglas County, Multnomah County, Clackamas County, Yamhill County, and Linn County, in the State of Oregon, praying an appropriation by Congress for the improvement of Yaquina Bay; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SLATER. I present a similar memorial, signed by the officers of the State of Oregon, the governor, the judges of the supreme court, and other State officers. I may say that the number of signers of these various memorials aggregate over three thousand. They include all classes of our citizens, bankers, merchants, farmers, mechanics, and laborers, and as there are some important statements in the body of the memorial, and it being short, I ask that it be read and printed in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there is no objection to the request of the Senator from Oregon, the memorial will be reported at length.

The memorial was read, as follows:

Memorial of the undersigned, officials of the State of Oregon, sheweth:

1. That the population of the State is increasing at a very rapid rate, an immigration of upward of twenty thousand persons having been received in the year 1878, as proved by the statistics of the Portland Board of Trade.

2. That the principal towns of the State being situated, and the larger portion of the population settled in the Willamette Valley, the exports and imports from that country are being so largely increased that the need of additional outlets for the traffic of the State is severely felt, practically passengers and goods having now to pass both inward and outward through the port of Portland, situated on the Willamette River, only twelve miles from the northern boundary of the State.

3. That by the opening of the harbor called Yaquina Bay, a port will be provided only sixty miles from the center of the Willamette Valley, never closed by ice or rendered inaccessible by stormy weather, and offering natural facilities by safe deep-water channel, commodious anchorage, and abundant space for all the shipping that will resort there.

4. That a railroad is already in progress connecting the port of Yaquina Bay with the town of Corvallis, on the Willamette River; that by the use of this route a saving will be effected of two hundred and twenty-one miles in actual distance, and of the tedious, costly, and occasionally dangerous railroad or river journey down the Willamette Valley to Portland, and the voyage down the Willamette and Columbia Rivers to the ocean, the crossing of the Columbia Bar, and the ocean voyage down the coast of Oregon past the point in question.

5. That the survey of Yaquina Bay recently made under the instructions of the board of engineers intrusted with the selection of the point on the Pacific coast best adapted for a harbor of refuge, has proved that the obstruction to the entrance of the harbor only consists of a reef of sandstone rock, easily removable by blasting, while there are no shifting sand-banks to contend with, and the entrance is covered by a reef about a mile off at sea affording the protection of a natural breakwater.

6. That the same survey has proved the present boundaries of the channel, giving a depth of twelve feet of water at low tide, with an average rise of seven feet eight inches to high tide, which channel has not changed in position or depth since the coast survey in 1868, and has been and is now in constant use by coasting schooners and small steamships.

7. That the opening of Yaquina Bay, by the removal of the obstructing reef, will not only develop the resources of the bay district in lumber, coal, oyster and salmon fisheries, grain, wool, fruit, butter, and agricultural produce generally, but will open up the tract of fertile country between the Willamette Valley and the bay, exceeding five hundred thousand acres in extent.

8. That your memorialists pray that Congress, in its wisdom, will now devote a sum of $240,000 to be expended in blasting operations on the reef now obstructing the entrance to Yaquina Bay, the operations to be carried out under the superintendence of the United States engineers in charge of the district. And your memorialists will ever pray.

Mr. SLATER. I move the reference of the memorial to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Before the memorial is referred I wish to say that I did not object to its reading and its printing, because such is coming to be the practice, but I think it an injurious practice. It is against the rule of the Senate, which requires a Senator to state briefly the substance of a memorial. It is very expensive; and, besides the expense, it incumbers the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, when you put them all together, enormously, and makes the book vastly more inconvenient for the purposes for which it was designed. Therefore, hereafter, when I happen to be present I shall insist upon the rule and object to the reading of all memorials.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The memorial will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HARRIS. I present the memorial of 96 citizens of the District of Columbia, praying that a tax bill may be passed for the District of Columbia in harmony with the wishes of the people and in accordance with the humane spirit of modern civilization. I move its reference to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSTON presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Virginia, in favor of the appointment of a national commission to investigate diseases among domestic animals; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, presented a petition of 42 citizens of Decatur, Illinois, praying the passage of an act granting an increase of pension to William Young, of that city; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I present the petition of sundry colored people of Charlestown, West Virginia, asking that certain provision be made for what is known as the Storer College, at Harper's Ferry; I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor; and as I understand that committee is considering the subject at this time, I hope the petition will receive proper attention.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia, presented the petition of Cincinnati W. Harper and Clarence C. Harper, praying that their right to certain land claimed by them, and in possession of the United States, may be determined by the Court of Claims or other tribunal; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. TELLER presented the petition of Charles Autobias, of Pueblo County, Colorado, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BURNSIDE presented the petition of George H. B. White and others, citizens of the District of Columbia, praying for the passage of an act to amend the Revised Statutes relating to legal holidays in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Wisconsin, requesting the Senators and Members of Congress from that State to do all in their power to procure such legislation as will protect the people from extortionate rates of freights, and to establish a uniform maximum rate; also to favor the appointment of a board of commissioners to regulate and control interstate commerce; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BLAIR presented the petition of Libbey & Co., publishers at Dover, New Hampshire, praying for a reduction of the duty on material for making paper; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BALDWIN presented a memorial of E. D. Morgan, Moses Taylor & Co., and others, of New York, in favor of the retention of the present duty upon sugar; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of citizens of Dearborn, Michigan, remonstrating against the donation of the Dearborn (Michigan) arsenal property to the Wayne County Central Agricultural or Industrial Association for school purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BAILEY. I present a memorial of citizens of Wilson County, Tennessee, dealers in and growers of tobacco, upon the subject of regie contracts, and ask its reference to the Committee on Foreign Relations. I wish to say that a similar petition which I presented has been referred to the Committee on Finance. I ask that instead it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reference will be changed, and both petitions will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WILLIAMS presented the memorial of John Means, president of the Lexington and Big Sandy Railroad Company, representing twelve miles of railroad, remonstrating against a reduction of the duty on steel rails from $28 to $10 a ton; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PRYOR. I present a memorial numerous signed, the substance of which is as follows: "The undersigned merchants, manufacturers, and consumers interested in and using chrome iron ore and bichromate of potash humbly pray that the prohibitory duties now levied upon these articles may be removed therefrom." I move its reference to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FARLEY presented a memorial of the Legislature of California, relative to the establishment of a post telegraph system throughout the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a memorial of a large number of importers, refiners, and dealers in sugars, remonstrating against any change in the present classification of raw sugars; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. FARLEY. I present a memorial of the California Legislature in reference to an appropriation for the protection and improvement of the rivers and lands of California which are being damaged by mining débris. I ask that the memorial be read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object to that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont objects.

Mr. EDMUNDS. For the reason that I just now stated, after a memorial had been read, on the grounds of the expense of printing and the great inconvenience of filling up the bulk of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, as well as taking up time. I made that observation at the end of the reading of the last memorial which was read. I think the Senator from California was not in at the time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont apply his objection to the reading of a memorial of a State Legislature?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, there is a rule and regulation about that. If this is the memorial of a State Legislature I do not apply the objection to it by any means.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The memorial will be reported.

The memorial was read, and referred to the Committee on Commerce, as follows:

CHAPTER XV.

Assembly concurrent resolution No. 15 relative to the protection of the rivers, cities, and agricultural lands of California.

[Adopted February 24, 1880.]

Whereas many rivers of this State, and cities and lands bordering thereon, are being greatly damaged or endangered by the flow of mining débris; and

Whereas the whole country as well as this State are directly interested in the gold production of California, which materially depends on the free discharge of said mining débris: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the assembly, (the senate concurring,) That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be requested to use their utmost endeavors to obtain an immediate appropriation of at least $500,000 for the protection and improvement of the rivers and lands of California which are being damaged by the mining débris.

Resolved, That the governor be requested to send a copy of these resolutions to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

J. F. COWDERY,
Speaker of the Assembly.
JNO. MANSFIELD,
President of the Senate.

Mr. CONKLING presented the petition of Isadore Robot, superior of the Catholic mission of the Pottawatomie country of the Indian Territory, asking to be vested with the title to certain land as such superior; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. VOORHEES. I present a petition praying an amendment of the patent laws; and I ask that it be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont has entered a standing objection against the reading of petitions at length.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I enter it now, for the reason I stated when the Senator was not in.

Mr. VOORHEES. I will state what it is. It is the petition of citizens of Kosciusko County, Indiana, praying that such an amendment be made to the patent laws that any person making any implement or article which is an infringement upon any patent without knowing it to be such, may be allowed to pay the royalty, which in no case shall exceed 25 per cent. of the cost of making, or by ceasing to use it shall not be liable to prosecution for infringement of such patents. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Patents.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VOORHEES presented the petition of Joseph King and others, citizens of Rush County, Indiana, praying such an amendment of the patent laws as will protect innocent users of patented articles from prosecution as infringers; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

He also presented the petition of Charles E. Dimmitt and 56 others, soldiers and sailors of Ohio; also the petition of D. R. Leeper and 50 others, citizens of Indiana, who served during the war of the rebellion, praying that they be paid the difference between paper currency and gold at the time they received pay for their services in the field; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

DISTRICT WATER SUPPLY.

Mr. ROLLINS. Yesterday morning communications were received from the commissioners of the District of Columbia relative to an additional water supply on Capitol Hill, and the waste of water in the District; which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia. I move that the communications be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2524) in relation to the importation of classical antiquities, reported it with amendments.

Mr. PENDLETON, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the memorial of Samuel C. Reid, on behalf of the captain, owners, officers, and crew of the late United States private brig General Armstrong, their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1441) for the relief of the captain, owners, officers, and crew of the late United States private-armed brig General Armstrong, their heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns.

The bill was read twice by its title, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. JONES, of Florida, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4606) authorizing the President of the United States to nominate Drs. Thomas Owens and William Martin assistant surgeons United States Navy, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

ASSISTANT SENATE LIBRARIAN.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, reported the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint an assistant librarian for the Senate at a salary of $1,440 per annum, payable monthly, being the same amount of salary paid to assistant librarians of the House of Representatives.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, sir; I object to its present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the resolution goes over.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. KERNAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1442) giving to all religious denominations equal rights and privileges on the Indian reservations; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. EDMUNDS (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1443) for the erection of a monument in the city of Washington to the memory of General George A. Custer and the officers and men of the Seventh United States Cavalry who were killed in the battle of Little Bighorn; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. BURNSIDE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1444) to amend the Revised Statutes of the United States for the District of Columbia relating to public holidays within said District; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SLATER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1445) providing for the construction of the Mount Jefferson military wagon-road in Oregon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BAYARD asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1446) to provide for the erection of a public building at New Castle, Delaware; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. CONKLING (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1447) to legalize and confirm a grant by the Pottawatomie Indians; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CALL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1448) for the relief of James R. Sanchez and E. C. L. Sanchez, heirs-at-law of James R. Sanchez; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. MORGAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 91) relating to the memorial addresses delivered on the occasion of the passage of resolutions in the Senate and House of Representatives commemorative of Hon. George S. Houston, late a Senator of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. SLATER, it was Ordered, That the petitions and papers for the construction of the Mount Jefferson military wagon-road, in Oregon, on the files of the Senate be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

On motion of Mr. ALLISON, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of the owners of the bark Grapeshot on the files of the Senate be referred to the Committee on Finance.

NAVY REGISTER.

Mr. ANTHONY submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That 1,000 additional copies of the last edition of the Navy Register be printed for the use of the Senate.

PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANIES.

Mr. BAILEY submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Whereas it has been announced in the public press, and there is reason to believe, that a contract has been entered into by and between the Central Pacific Railway Company and the Union Pacific Railway Company, of the one part, and the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, of the other part, by the terms of which contract the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, in consideration of receiving the sum of $110,000 per month from the railway companies, binds itself to charge such rates for freights and passengers as may be fixed by the railway companies and to collect the same from the commercial public; and

Whereas the effect of such a contract is directly prejudicial to the public interests and contrary to the public policy that controlled Congress in chartering the Union Pacific Railway Company and in granting to both railway companies large subsidies in money and lands: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to investigate and report whether such a contract has been made, and what legislation is necessary to prevent the execution of the same and protect the public interest; and said Committee may report a bill to carry its recommendations into effect.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the resolution?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have no objection to the inquiry, of course, but the preamble alleges that the Senate believes, that is, if we vote for it, that the contract described has been entered into.

Mr. BAILEY. I am very willing to strike out the expression "and there is reason to believe." That will obviate the objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That being stricken out, I have no objection at all.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection to the resolution or preamble as modified; and it is agreed to.

ALASKA STATISTICS.

Mr. BLAIR submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to furnish for the use of the Senate a copy of the report of Captain George W. Bailey upon the numbers, location, occupation, and condition of the people of Alaska, together with a statement as to the climate and resources of that region; also, that he be further requested to furnish the Senate with a copy of the report of the Supervising Surgeon-General of the United States Marine Hospital Service for 1873, which contains the report of Dr. White, United States revenue marine, treating of the people and Territory of Alaska.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The second part of the resolution is a request which is contrary to our methods. It should be "directed."

Mr. BLAIR. Let it be changed so as to read "directed," as in the first part.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That modification will be made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I beg leave to suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire that I have the impression that the Secretary of the Treasury has other official reports and information touching the condition of things in Alaska that it might be desirable to have, if we have them not already, and that the first part of the resolution might be enlarged with benefit to the public service.

Mr. BLAIR. Let the resolution be enlarged as suggested by inserting "and any other information bearing on the subject in his possession."

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suggest an amendment to add at the end of the first branch of the resolution, "and any further information in his possession bearing on the condition of affairs in Alaska."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and that amendment will be made.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask leave to offer a resolution; I shall not ask its present consideration, but I desire it to be read for the information of the Senate, and then I should like to say a word.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That Rule 13 be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"Immediately after the privileged morning business is completed, and not later than one o'clock, the unfinished business of the preceding day and the Calendar of Special Orders, if any, for that day shall be taken up and disposed of; and after that, or if there shall be no special orders for the time, the Calendar of General Orders shall be taken up and proceeded with in its order, beginning with the first subject on the Calendar next after the last subject voted upon in proceeding with the Calendar; and in such case the following motions shall be in order at any time as privileged motions, save as against a motion to adjourn, or to proceed to the consideration of executive business, to wit:

"1. A motion to proceed to the consideration of an appropriation bill;
"2. A motion to proceed to the consideration of any other bill on the Calendar; but this motion shall not be considered as agreed to, unless two-thirds of the Senators present vote in favor thereof;

"3. A motion to pass over the pending subject, which, if carried, shall have the effect to leave such subject in its existing place on the Calendar for action at the next call of the Calendar after the pending call shall have been gone through with;

"4. A motion to place such subject at the foot of the Calendar.
"Each of the foregoing motions shall be decided without debate, and shall have precedence in the order above named, and may be submitted as in the nature and with all the rights of questions of order.

Resolved further, That the twenty-fourth rule be amended by adding thereto the following words: 'After the introduction of resolutions is completed there shall, on the demand of any Senator, be laid before the Senate, in its order, any resolution or concurrent resolution introduced on any prior day, and the same shall be proceeded with in the same manner as is provided in the rule for the Calendar for General Orders.'

Resolved further, That all rules or orders setting apart particular days for particular classes of business be, and they hereby are, abolished."

Mr. EDMUNDS. I shall move to refer the resolution to the Committee on Rules, but I should like to call the attention of the Senate to it a moment. We are now proceeding under what is correctly known as the Anthony rule, which enables any one Senator to postpone a bill that is reached in its order by his single objection. Then in other respects we spend, and I think waste, a great deal of time in ascertaining what it is that we wish to consider next.

I think that this method of going through with the Calendar in its order as bills and resolutions are reported on it, giving every case its chance to be once before the Senate in each call of the Calendar, will be found to be very useful.

The substance of this rule was adopted by the Senate about eight or ten years ago, indeed almost literally in this form, and was acted upon for two or three weeks, I do not remember the exact time. It happened that when it was adopted there was a large mass of resolutions on the Calendar which then, differing from the way this resolution is, had to be taken up every morning and gone through with one by one; and it happened that two very prominent and leading Senators found in the operation of the rule about passing a matter over without debate that a pet measure which they had in view had been passed over without their having an opportunity to discuss it for a day or two. The consequence was that, a few days afterward, the rule was repealed when the Senate was very thin and without much, if any, debate that I remember.

The Senate has now got so numerous and has such a vast mass of business, that I believe if we adopt an order of this kind and stick to it long enough to have everybody find that his measure that he has in charge has one chance of being brought to the attention of the Senate and that it will be decided by the Senate unless a majority of the Senate determine to pass it over instead of a single objection, will facilitate the administration of business and will save a vast amount of time that is now spent in struggles to get the floor and to get the Senate to take up particular measures. At the same time it will give measures that a majority of the Senate think ought to be acted upon a chance of being acted upon as they are reached instead of being thrown over by a single objection.

I commend the resolution to the earnest and immediate attention of the Committee on Rules, to which I move its reference.

The motion to refer was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 474) for the relief of William McGovern.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. No. 3968) for the relief of certain actual settlers on the Kansas trust and diminished-reserve lands, in the State of Kansas; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

FEES OF REGISTERS AND RECEIVERS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no further business of the morning hour, the Secretary will call the Calendar of General Orders, commencing at the point reached yesterday.

The bill (S. No. 490) in relation to certain fees allowed registers and receivers was announced as the first in order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let that go over, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The consideration of the bill is objected to, and it will be passed over.

Mr. BOOTH. Will not the Senator from Vermont consent to hear the report read?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not just now. The bill is to take money out of the Treasury. There are some better cases than that on the Calendar.

SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANIES.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 98) to provide for the settlement of accounts with certain railway companies.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, that is a bill which involves a very large sum of money, which, from investigations that the Committee on the Judiciary made on that subject in connection with a certain branch of it some years ago, I believe to be unjustly claimed by these companies. The papers and the testimony in the case are very voluminous, and it is one of those public bills, although it appears to be a private one, of very wide importance and very great extent, and therefore I feel justified in asking that it go over and come up as one of the bills of public importance.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. MAXEY. Before the order is made sending the bill over, I beg to state that the Committee on Military Affairs, which has had the subject under consideration and which intrusted the report of this bill to me, believes it to be just. They are sustained in that view of the question by the reports of numerous committees in both Houses of Congress coming to the same conclusion without a single break in the line.

This is a public bill and a bill of importance. It was reported at the last Congress favorably by committees of both Houses and failed only for want of time. Believing it to be a just bill and desiring it fully ventilated so that everybody shall have an opportunity of saying what he thinks about it, I shall ask the consent of the Senate that to-morrow week after the conclusion of the morning hour this case be set down for trial, saving of course the rights of appropriation bills and any unfinished business that may come over from the day previous.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator from Texas means by that, that he is asking unanimous consent, I must be excused. If he means to move it as a special order—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair considers it in the nature of a notice.

Mr. MAXEY. I give it as a notice that I shall then ask unanimous consent. I know the objection which the Senator from Vermont has to special orders, and I know the effect of his objection. I want precisely what he says he wants, a trial of this case to test the question whether the bill is just or unjust. That is a question I am willing to meet and have the Senate settle.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This is very far from being a new subject, although I do not know what special place in the consideration of the Senate the Senator intended his observation that this had been reported favorably by a committee of the House of Representatives to have. I was not aware that the opinions of committees of the House of Representatives were supposed to be of any proper weight in this body, inasmuch as the Constitution expects us to act upon our own opinion and our own independent sense upon the testimony of the merits of the question presented to us.

Mr. MAXEY. In reply to the Senator on that point, let me remark that I referred simply to what occurred during the last Congress; and I believe that most of us, or many of us, are in the habit of referring to speeches and other matters, even to the individual opinions of members of Congress, as well as the result of debates, as persuasive if not conclusive. I mentioned that fact only to show that there was a concurrence of sentiment among those who were intrusted with the investigation of this case, and I regard it as a legitimate argument.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not regard it as a legitimate argument, I am sorry to say. I regard it as entirely out of the constitutional proprieties of this body and the proprieties of parliamentary order to undertake to persuade the Senate of the United States to do anything on account of the observations, speeches, reports, opinions, or votes of anybody in the House of Representatives or of the whole House itself, except possibly in the case of a dispute between the two Houses in a matter of conference. There it may possibly be proper to refer in one House to the view that the other House has taken of the disputed question; I do not say whether it is or not; but that is apart, because as the Senator says it is a common habit; and I did not intend to criticise him personally in the reference I made to it.

But, Mr. President, this matter is one of very large consequence to the Treasury of the United States. If the claim of this large number of railway companies to be repaid a part of the price that they paid for property that they bought of the United States in the States then lately in rebellion in 1865, and on railways there, is put on the ground that the bargain they then agreed to was a hard bargain and that the property was not worth as much as they agreed to give for it, it is important in that point of view; and I shall I think be quite willing when I can be ready—because as I say the papers and documents are very voluminous—to have it considered by the Senate, and to have the attention of the people of the United States brought to it as one of the symptoms of the present time.

Mr. MAXEY. My only object is to get this case into the possession of the Senate. It has been in the possession of committees long enough.

I did not refer to anything going on now in the present Congress. Little as I know about the rules, I know I have no right to refer to anything that takes place in the House during this present session. I do have a right to refer to any historical facts in respect to the last Congress, or any Congress back to the first one that sat under the Constitution, and to avail myself of any reasoning furnished by the House in support of a position here; and if an argument be good, furnished by the House, it is persuasive, like a good argument from anybody else.

One other point. The Senator from Vermont says this is a large bill and involves a large amount of money. That may be a good reason with some why a bill should be killed; but, in my judgment, the amount involved is not a matter of the slightest consequence when it is brought into collision with the question, Is the claim just? If the claim is a just one it ought to be allowed; if it is an unjust claim it ought to be repudiated; and I desire that the Senate shall act upon it, for which reason I now call particularly the attention of the Senate, and I hope there will be unanimous consent that to-morrow week, at the conclusion of the morning hour, saving the right of the Appropriations Committee and unfinished business, this bill be taken up and disposed of.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the next bill on the Calendar.

MULLAN WAGON-ROAD.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 1256) authorizing the Secretary of War to improve and repair the Mullan wagon-road between Forts Missoula and Cœur d'Alene; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is no written report.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and read the third time.

Mr. CONKLING. I venture to suggest that if there is no report accompanying this bill, some Senator who understands it ought at least to tell us what it is.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I think there was a report accompanying the bill, but I do not know what has become of it. The bill is for the improvement of an existing military road in the Territories of Idaho and Montana which was built originally for military purposes by the troops in those Territories. The military there for the last year or so have been so much occupied that they have not been able to keep it in repair. Therefore the Secretary of War has asked that $20,000 be appropriated for the purpose. He says it is not only essential to the military but essential to the continuance of immigration to that country that this road should be repaired and kept in good order. The Military Committee examined the subject carefully, believe the appropriation is right, and made a written report, but it seems to have been lost.

The bill was passed.

CALVIN BRONSON.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2269) for the relief of Calvin Bronson; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized and directed to pay to Calvin Bronson $11,211 out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. CONKLING. Is that the entire bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair supposes so.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask that the bill be read again. It seems to me there must be something omitted.

The Chief Clerk again read the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. The report explains the matter. Let the report be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. HARRIS February 11, 1880:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2269) for the relief of Calvin Bronson, of Toledo, Ohio, submit the following report:

The facts necessary to be noticed in respect to this claim are briefly these: By section 93 of the act of 30th June, 1864, 13 Statutes at Large, page 270, the tax imposed on smoking-tobacco, the subject of this claim, was twenty-five cents per pound.

By the first section of the act of March 3, 1865, the tax was increased to thirty-five cents per pound, 13 Statutes at Large, 477, and by section 18 of same act, page 487, it is provided that this act shall take effect on the 1st April, 1865.

The claimant manufactured some one hundred and ten thousand pounds smoking-tobacco in the month of March, 1865.

Section 90 of act of 30th June, 1864, page 262, requires manufacturers to make their returns to the assessor on Wednesday of every week, of the amount and kinds of tobacco manufactured in the week ending that day, and requires the assessor to assess the same immediately thereafter, and that the tax so assessed to be paid within five days after assessment. The claimant returned to the assessor on Wednesday of each week in March, 1865, the tobacco manufactured during the week, as required by the act of 30th June, 1864, and the same was assessed at twenty-five cents per pound, in strict obedience to the requirements of the law of that day.

Immediately after each assessment the claimant proposed to pay the tax so assessed, tendering the money, but in disregard of the law the collector refused to receive weekly payments from claimant, saying that he could not be bothered with payments made weekly; that he would only receive them monthly.

This tobacco having been reported, inspected, and assessed, was immediately removed from the manufactory to a warehouse of claimant, some half mile distant. After the act of March 3, 1865, went into effect, and after the assessment of twenty-five cents per pound had been collected, this lot of tobacco was reassessed under the act of March 3, 1865, the additional sum of ten cents per pound, amounting to $11,211. This assessment the claimant refused to pay, because it was illegal.

In June, 1865, the collector of the district seized the tobacco manufactory, with a large amount of tobacco of the claimant, on the ground that claimant had in May, 1864, made a pretended sale of a large amount of tobacco to his brother, David Bronson, to avoid a higher rate of tax imposed by the act of June 30, 1864, and the additional ground that he refused to pay the additional tax of ten cents per pound on this lot of tobacco.

Immediately after this seizure the claimant came to Washington and requested the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to send a special agent to Toledo to examine and report the grounds of this seizure. Messrs. Payne and Hawley, special agents of the department, were sent to Ohio for that purpose. On the 22d September, 1865, Benjamin Payne makes the following report:

"TOLEDO, OHIO, September 22, 1865.

"I, Benjamin Payne, having been appointed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue special agent to investigate the charges against Mr. Calvin Bronson, of Toledo, Ohio, hereby certify that I have carefully examined all the business transactions of the said Bronson connected with the Revenue Department, and that I have nowhere found fraud or design on his part to defraud the Government. I further certify that the seizure of his goods by the collector was, in my opinion, unnecessary.

"BENJAMIN PAYNE,

"Special Agent, Treasury Department."

But in addition to this Mr. Payne decided that the additional tax of ten cents per pound was legal, due the Government, and must be paid. Under protest claimant paid it, giving Mr. Payne notice at the time, in addition to his protest, that he would appeal to the Commissioner to refund the tax so illegally demanded.

The law prohibited the claimant from instituting suit against the collector for the money thus illegally collected from him until after he had made his application to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to refund it; but at the end of six months after making such application (Revised Statutes, 3226) claimant had the right to sue without a decision of the application, but claimant says he did not sue because the collector was a defaulter, and soon after the collection of this tax he absconded.

The records of the office of the internal-revenue collector show that the collector was a defaulter to the amount of about $30,000, and in May, 1866, absconded.

Claimant made his application to the Commissioner and clearly proved that this lot of tobacco was manufactured in March, 1865; that it was reported on Wednesday of each week, as manufactured, and immediately thereafter assessed for tax under the then existing law; that the tax was payable in March under the law; and that the money was tendered to pay this tax, but not received, only because the collector refused to be bothered with weekly payments. On the 5th of January, 1870, this claim is indorsed:

"Examined, and allowed, and submitted by—

"Allowed March 12, 1870.

"J. T. VINSON.

"W. H. SMITH, Solicitor."

On the 7th July, 1870, E. P. Gaines, chief of internal-revenue division of Secretary's office, reviews all the facts in the case, and in conclusion says that while this payment of $11,211 was not made on what was strictly a legal compromise, the Secretary having not approved it, yet the seizure of the factory and tobacco of claimant was pending, and the payment of this tax was demanded; and in order to get his property released from seizure he paid the tax and his property was released from seizure, and argues that if the seizure case had been prosecuted the Government might have recovered; therefore, he says it is unjust for claimant to demand that the tax should be refunded, and recommends that the case be returned to the Internal Revenue Office for re-examination. On the 7th July, 1870, the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury returned the papers to the Commissioner, requesting a re-examination of the case.

On the 1st December, 1870, the Acting Commissioner of Internal Revenue addressed the following note to Joseph R. Swigart, esq., United States collector, tenth district, Toledo, Ohio:

"Sir: Refunding claim of C. Bronson for $11,211 has been fully considered, with all the accompanying papers and the brief of counsel for the claimant, and rejected by the solicitor and by me.

"Respectfully,

"J. W. DOUGLASS,

"Acting Commissioner."

The claimant then petitioned Congress to refund this tax of $11,211, alleging that it was illegally assessed and collected from him.

To reach the justice of this case three questions must be determined:

First. Was this additional tax of ten cents per pound, amounting to $11,211, legal?

Second. Were there just grounds of seizure and forfeiture of the property of claimant?

Third. Was this $11,211 paid as a legal and just compromise of the seizure case?

It is shown by the affidavits of the revenue officers of that district and by the affidavit of claimant that this tobacco was manufactured in the month of March, 1865, and that all that was produced each week was reported on Wednesday, assessed by the assessor, and the assessment handed over to the collector for collection of the tax, as required by the act of June 30, 1864; and that the claimant tendered the money immediately thereafter each week to pay the tax so assessed, but the collector refused to receive it, because "he was not willing to be bothered with weekly payments;" that at the end of the month he did receive the tax so assessed, the tobacco having been immediately after assessment removed from the manufactory to the warehouse for sale. The committee is satisfied that this tobacco, having been manufactured, reported, and assessed weekly before the 1st day of April, 1865, was properly assessed at 25 cents per pound, and that no subsequent additional assessment was legal.

Hence the failure to pay this subsequent illegal assessment of ten cents additional under the act of 3d of March, 1865, constituted no just or legal ground of seizure; and if the report of the special agents of the Internal Revenue Department and the action of that department upon them are worth anything, then there was no fraud in the sale of tobacco by claimant to his brother, David Bronson, in 1864; hence no judgment of forfeiture could have been obtained upon that ground, and these are the only grounds on which the seizure rested. Upon the report of the special agents sent to investigate the reasons of the seizure the Commissioner directed the district attorney to dismiss the case; and it was dismissed, and the committee thinks properly dismissed, because illegal, unnecessary, vexatious, and unjust. The sum claimed nor any other sum was ever demanded of claimant as a compromise of the seizure case; it was demanded as a tax, collected and receipted for as a tax, and under solemn protest paid as a tax.

This tax having been illegally assessed, and its payment extorted by the seizure of a property (worth many times the amount claimed) equally illegal, the committee is of opinion that it should be refunded, and therefore report the bill back with the recommendation that it pass.

Mr. CONKLING. I have nothing to say about the merits of this claim, owing to a lack of information; but this bill, which I understand is a House bill, is, as far as I know, entirely by itself in the history of legislation, and I think of proposed legislation. It is much in the form of a check on a bank. It is an order to the Secretary of the Treasury to pay a man named so much money with nothing to show any reason for paying it or any account for which it is to be paid. The bill, if put on the statute-books, would not amount to a receipt for the money. I know the report states the matter to which this bill relates or is intended to relate; but the report does not become a statute; it does not even go into the Journal of the Senate; the bill alone speaks; and I judge it was an oversight on the part of the committee from which the bill came in the House, and very likely a similar oversight here. I hope that some member of the Committee on Claims will suggest an amendment which will at least indicate the subject upon which we are to vote, if we are to vote upon this bill.

Mr. HARRIS. I have prepared an amendment to be added to the last word in the sixth line, which will meet the objection of the Senator from New York, and which I think myself quite proper, and if there could be an objection to the amendment it would be simply the fact that it was an amendment involving the necessity of the bill being returned to the House of Representatives. I send to the Clerk's desk the following as an amendment, which I believe removes the objection of the Senator from New York.

In full satisfaction of an illegal tax assessed upon certain smoking-tobacco, and paid by him under protest.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, this appears to be a very complicated case, arising under the administration of the revenue laws. I am not able to determine for myself whether the bill is a proper one to be passed or not by the simple reading of the report. It requires very careful consideration. But I desire to say that if the Committee on Finance have not been transcending their jurisdiction, this is a claim which belongs to that committee. It is very important that all these questions in relation to the revenue shall be decided upon uniform principles; otherwise we establish precedents by which we open the doors to a great many claims. If the Senator from Tennessee has no objection, I think this bill should be referred to the Committee on Finance. Similar questions are constantly before that committee, and I think perhaps this ought to have been originally referred to the Committee on Finance instead of the Committee on Claims.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning hour has expired, and the Senate will proceed to the consideration of its unfinished business.

FITZ-JOHN PORTER.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1139) for the relief of Fitz-John Porter, late major-general of the United States volunteers and colonel of the Army, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. RANDOLPH.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. McDONALD] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It is hardly necessary, but, by consent of the Senator from Indiana, I wish to renew the notice heretofore given that at the conclusion of his speech I shall ask the Senate to take up appropriation bills.

Mr. McDONALD addressed the Senate. [His remarks will be found in the Appendix.] Having spoken three hours and a quarter,

Mr. RANDOLPH. The Senator from Indiana has spoken now over three hours, and, if he will yield the floor, I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. McDONALD. I give way.

The motion was agreed to; and (at four o'clock and fifty minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, March 9, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. DAVID WILLS, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

Several members called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being demanded, the morning hour begins at twenty-two minutes before one o'clock. In the last morning hour, under the old rules, a bill was reported, the reading of which was not completed. The Chair thinks it would be just to regard that bill as in the morning hour under the new rules, the reading to be completed as unfinished business. The Chair sees no better or more intelligent method of proceeding.

Mr. MILLS. Will the bill be referred to the Calendar or acted on?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the House should determine that question. The bill has not yet been read in full. It is a bill reported from the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. CONGER. When the bill is read, why should it not take its place on the Calendar?

Mr. AIKEN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If this bill be read, will it necessarily be referred without discussion to the Calendar?

The SPEAKER. It would not under the old rules have been referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, unless a point of order could have been made against it.

Mr. AIKEN. Can it be referred to a committee?

The SPEAKER. The new rules compel all reports from committees to be referred to the proper Calendar; but this comes over under old rules, in the nature of unfinished business. The bill will be read.

Mr. MILLS. Will it be time enough to make the point of order after the bill has been read?

The SPEAKER. It will, because the reading of the bill is necessary to allow a member intelligently to know whether it is open to the point of order.

Mr. CONGER. I was about to say, when a bill has not been read, I do not see, perhaps the Chair does, why it should not come under the rule now, and not be unfinished business.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks this bill having been introduced into the House under the old rules would hardly come under the operation of the new rules. The Chair, however, is willing to submit the point to the House. The gentleman from Texas indicates his purpose to give a solution to the difficulty by raising a point of order, and if it is subject to such point of order, then it will go to the same calendar as though it were subjected to the operation of the new rules.

Mr. AIKEN. I move, without further reading, the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. It will be referred to the Public Calendar in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. REAGAN. What is it?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 4909) reported as a substitute for House bill No. 445, a bill for the creation of a department of agriculture.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman introducing the bill asks, without further reading, that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CONGER. On the Public Calendar?

The SPEAKER. The Public Calendar, but in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. If it had not created a new office or involved a tax upon the people, it would go to the House Calendar.

Mr. ATKINS. Does it take precedence of other bills?

The SPEAKER. It is subject to all the rules of the House.

Mr. COVERT. In connection with that bill I desire to present the views of the minority of the Committee on Agriculture.

The SPEAKER. Did the majority make any report accompanying this bill in writing?

Mr. AIKEN. No, sir.

The SPEAKER. The new rules require, and the Chair now desires to announce the fact to the House, that all bills reported from committees shall be accompanied by a written report.

Mr. AIKEN. That was not necessary under the old rule.

The SPEAKER. It was not the practice.

Mr. AIKEN. Was not the substitute for the bill considered at the time as a report?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that would not come up to the requirement of the new rule. But the gentleman can make his majority report at any time hence.

Mr. AIKEN. It came in under the old rule, did it not?

The SPEAKER. It did.

Mr. MCKENZIE. I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the views of the minority be read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from South Carolina, who represents the majority of the committee, to submit a report in writing hereafter.

Mr. AIKEN. Is that necessary? That was introduced under the old rules, and read under the old rules.

The SPEAKER. The old rules did not require it, but the Chair supposes, in view of the presentation of the views of the minority, the committee would desire to submit a majority report as provided for under the new rules. It is, however, a matter with which the Chair has no concern.

Mr. AIKEN. I was not instructed by the committee to make a report, but merely to report a substitute.

The SPEAKER. The minority views will be printed, and go with the bill.

Mr. AIKEN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MCKENZIE. I ask that the views of the minority be read.

The SPEAKER. The bill has gone to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and is not before the House.

Mr. AIKEN. Do I understand I have the right at any future time to present a written report?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that should be allowed to the gentleman, in view of the fact that the views of the minority have been presented.

Mr. MCKENZIE. Let the views of the minority be read.

The SPEAKER. The bill has gone to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and is not now before the House.

INDEXED RULES.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state that the doorkeeper on the left of the Hall has now in his possession copies of the indexed rules, and members can apply to him for the same.

CORRECTION.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to call attention to what is evidently a typographical error in the thirteenth rule as printed, where it refers to a motion for reconsideration, but is printed a motion for "reconstruction."

The SPEAKER. That is evidently a typographical error. The Chair is informed, however, the correction has already been made.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. KNOTT. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KNOTT. The point I make is that the morning hour is operating under the new rules and the call should begin with the first committee on the list.

The SPEAKER. Under the new rule provision is made that the call of committees shall commence where it left off on the preceding call; and the Chair thinks that under the spirit of the new rule the call should begin where it left off on the preceding call.

Mr. COVERT. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. I understand the Speaker says it will be necessary for the majority of the Committee on Agriculture to present their report, as well as the minority, before the report of the minority can be read to the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not so rule.

Mr. COVERT. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McKENZIE] called for the reading of the minority report, and the Chair ruled it could not be read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair stated that the bill had gone from the consideration of the House, and the gentleman representing the minority presented his views, as it were, by courtesy. The bill having been referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and not being before the House, it is not usual under such circumstances to read the minority report. It will be printed.

Mr. McKENZIE. I ask by unanimous consent the minority report be read.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I object to the reading.

The SPEAKER. The reading is objected to.

PAUL HEINRICH ELVERS.

Mr. RICHMOND, from the Committee on Agriculture, reported back adversely the memorial of Paul Heinrich Elvers, of Warren County, Ohio, praying Congress to adopt an alleged discovery he has made to prevent the spread of the hog cholera; which was laid upon the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

FORESTRY.

Mr. RICHMOND also, from the Committee on Agriculture, submitted the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed 100,000 copies of the report upon forestry, prepared by Dr. Franklin B. Hough, in pursuance of an act of Congress, and transmitted by the President from the Department of Agriculture, February 7, 1880, in pursuance of a resolution of the House of Representatives. Of this number 75,500 shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, 19,500 for the Senate, 4,000 for the Department of Agriculture, and 1,000 for the author: Provided, That the number of pages shall not exceed 650. There shall be allowed a sum not exceeding $800 for drawings and engravings necessary for this report, to be prepared under the direction of the Commissioner of Agriculture.

Resolved, That there be printed a further edition of 50,000 copies of the report on forestry, prepared under the direction of the Commissioner of Agriculture, in pursuance of an act of Congress, approved August 15, 1876, by Dr. Franklin B. Hough, to be distributed in the same proportion as in the above resolution.

Mr. RICHMOND. If there be no objection, I should like to have that resolution considered at this time.

The SPEAKER. That cannot be done.

Mr. ATKINS. And I object.

Mr. COVERT. I suggest, then, that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. It will be so referred.

Mr. COVERT. It is a resolution asking for the printing of a certain number of the report on forestry, and I presume naturally it should go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. RICHMOND. Let it be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. If the expense exceeds $500 the resolution must under the law go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. RICHMOND. It will cost over $800.

The SPEAKER. Then, under the law, the resolution is referred to the Committee on Printing.

ADULTERATION OF FOOD.

On motion of Mr. ANDERSON, from the Committee on Agriculture, that committee was discharged from the further consideration of the petition of citizens of Berlin, Wisconsin, for the enactment of a law against the adulteration of food, and the same was referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I objected a short time ago to the reading of a report of the minority of the Committee on Agriculture, but I am willing it shall be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The views of the minority will be printed in the usual form, and when the bill comes up for consideration the majority and minority reports can then be read.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The gentleman from New York, who presented the views of the minority, desires it shall be printed in the RECORD. If there be no objection I hope that will be done.

Mr. ANDERSON. I object.

Some time subsequently,

Mr. ANDERSON said: I withdraw my objection to the printing of the report.

Mr. BREWER. I renew it.

REPORT UPON BEET SUGAR.

Mr. COVERT, from the Committee on Agriculture, reported the following resolution; which under the law was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That there be printed 20,000 copies of the report upon beet sugar and the manufacture of sugar from beets, prepared by Hon. G. Le Duc, Commissioner of Agriculture, and transmitted by the President from the Department of Agriculture, February —, in pursuance of a resolution of the House of Representatives. Of this number 15,200 copies shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, 3,800 for the Senate, and 1,000 for the Department of Agriculture.

AGRICULTURAL REPORT FOR 1879.

Mr. COVERT also, from the Committee on Agriculture, reported the following concurrent resolution; which under the law was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring.) That there be printed 300,000 copies of the annual report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for 1879; 220,000 copies for the use of members of the House of Representatives, 50,000 copies for the use of members of the Senate, and 30,000 copies for the use of the Department of Agriculture.

REPORTS ON DISEASES OF SWINE, ETC.

Mr. COVERT also, from the Committee on Agriculture, reported the following concurrent resolution; which under the law was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring therein.) That there be printed 100,000 copies of special report No. 22 of the Commissioner of Agriculture, containing the reports of the veterinary surgeons appointed to investigate diseases of swine and infectious and contagious diseases incident to other classes of domesticated animals; of which 65,000 copies shall be printed for the use of members of the House, 20,000 copies for the use of members of the Senate, and 15,000 copies for the use of the Commissioner of Agriculture.

INTERNATIONAL SHEEP AND WOOL SHOW, PHILADELPHIA.

Mr. COVERT. I am also instructed by the Committee on Agriculture to report back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 3982) to authorize and direct the Commissioner of Agriculture to attend, in person or by deputy, the international sheep and wool show to be held in the Centennial buildings, Fairmount Park, Philadelphia, in September, A. D. 1880, and to make full and complete reports of the same, and for other purposes. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be now put upon its passage. It involves no appropriation. A bill the same in substance passed the Senate yesterday, and there is urgent necessity for the immediate action of Congress in reference to it.

Mr. BLOUNT and Mr. BOUCK objected to the present consideration of the bill.

The bill was referred to the House Calendar.

UTE OUTBREAK.

Mr. SCALES. I am instructed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to report back, with the recommendation that it be adopted, the resolution of inquiry touching the late outbreak of the Ute Indians in Colorado, referred to the committee on the 15th of January, 1880, on motion of the gentleman from Colorado, [Mr. BELFORD.]

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to transmit to this House at an early day a copy of the testimony taken by Generals Hatch and Adams, special agents of that Department, touching the late outbreak of the Ute Indians in the State of Colorado.

Mr. SCALES. The committee recommend that the resolution be adopted.

The SPEAKER. The committee would have the right even out of the morning hour to make this report at any time; and it is not well, the Chair thinks, to interfere with the morning hour by making such reports for consideration, because that would occupy the time of the morning hour and cut out other committees.

Mr. SCALES. It is merely a resolution calling for information.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection—

Mr. CARLISLE. I think we ought now to settle the practice as to this matter. I suggest that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SCALES] had better withdraw the resolution for the present, and report it again after the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. Committees are required to report back resolutions of this character within one week, and have the right to report them at any time; but in reporting such resolutions it is better to have them considered outside the morning hour for reports of committees and thus not interfere with the call of other committees for reports that do not possess such privilege.

Mr. SCALES. If I have the right to report the resolution at any time, certainly I have the right now.

The SPEAKER. That does not follow, under the new rule, if consideration is asked.

Mr. CARLISLE. For this reason: that the rule provides that the morning hour shall be devoted to the call of committees for reports which shall go to the appropriate Calendar; while another rule provides that resolutions of this character may be reported at any time within a week.

Mr. SCALES. Is this a privileged report?

The SPEAKER. It is, after the morning hour.

Mr. SCALES. Then I withdraw it for the present.

POLICE REGULATIONS, ON INDIAN RESERVATIONS.

Mr. SCALES. I am also instructed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to report back with amendments the bill (H. R. No. 350) authorizing the President to provide suitable police regulations for the government of the various Indian reservations, and to provide for the punishment of the crimes of murder, manslaughter, arson, rape, burglary, and robbery upon the various Indian reservations. I move that the amendments and the accompanying report be printed. I ask also that the bill be made a special order for the 25th of March and from day to day thereafter until disposed of.

The SPEAKER. Does this bill appropriate any money?

Mr. SCALES. It does not.

The SPEAKER. Then it goes to the House Calendar. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the bill may be considered as a special order on the 25th of March.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask the gentleman to except appropriation bills.

Mr. SCALES. I will make that exception.

Mr. CONGER. I object to the bill being made a special order.

The bill was referred to the House Calendar, and the amendments and accompanying report ordered to be printed.

CREEK ORPHAN FUND.

Mr. HOOKER, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back, with amendments, the bill (H. R. No. 418) to reimburse the Creek orphan fund; which, with the accompanying report, was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

RESERVATION INDIANS PROHIBITED FROM ENTERING TEXAS.

Mr. WELLBORN, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 3161, a bill (H. R. No. 5040) to prevent Indians on reservations from going into the State of Texas; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

ABSENTEE SHAWNEE LANDS.

Mr. WADDILL, from the same committee, reported back, with an amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 1197) for the relief of settlers upon the absentee Shawnee lands in Kansas, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would inquire of the gentleman reporting this bill if it makes any appropriation of money?

Mr. WADDILL. It makes no appropriation of money. It simply gives a privilege to certain actual settlers on absentee Shawnee lands to enter such lands.

The SPEAKER. Does it affect the title of the United States to any public lands?

Mr. WADDILL. It does not.

The SPEAKER. It relates only to Indian lands?

Mr. WADDILL. That is all.

Mr. CONGER. Does this affect in any way the title of the United States to any public property?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WADDILL] states that it does not affect the title of the United States to any public lands, and does not appropriate any money; that it relates only to certain Indian reservation lands.

Mr. HASKELL. Allow me a word.

Mr. CONGER. I do not like to ask for the reading of every bill that is reported from a committee; but I do like to know what a bill is about.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The bill was read.

Mr. CONGER. It is apparent that this bill relates to the sale of Government lands at a price to be fixed by this bill.

The SPEAKER. If it in any way affects the title of the United States to any of the public lands, it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. CONGER. I make that point of order against the bill.

Mr. HASKELL. A word on the point of order. This bill does not affect one foot of the public lands of the United States. It is only the re-enactment of an old law of 1869, under which the Shawnee absentee Indians disposed of their lands. Three small parcels of land remain undisposed of. That old law has expired by limitation. Three settlers desire to acquire titles to their tracts of land just as their neighbors acquired title under the act of 1869. This bill appropriates no money; it simply provides a way by which these settlers upon these lands can acquire title to them.

Mr. CONGER. And it provides that the lands not so taken shall be sold as public lands of the United States.

Mr. HASKELL. No, it does not provide any such thing.

The SPEAKER. Clause 3 of Rule XXIII is as follows:

All motions or propositions involving a tax or charge upon the people; all proceedings touching appropriations of money, or bills making appropriations of money or property, or requiring such appropriation to be made, or authorizing payments out of appropriations already made, or releasing any liability to the United States for money or property, shall be first considered in a Committee of the Whole, and a point of order under this rule shall be good at any time before the consideration of a bill has commenced.

The effect of the last paragraph of the clause is, even though there may be a mistake in the reference of a bill to a particular calendar, that it may be corrected at any time before the bill comes up for consideration.

Mr. WADDILL. This bill does not affect any public lands in the United States.

The SPEAKER. That is the question in dispute; the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] thinks it does.

Mr. WADDILL. It only affects lands belonging to these Shawnee Indians. The fund that may result from the sale of lands under this bill will go to the Indians. There is not a foot of Government land involved in the bill.

The SPEAKER. This bill refers to a former law which the Chair has not at hand; and consequently the Chair cannot determine with certainty whether it does affect public lands or not. The gentleman reporting the bill [Mr. WADDILL] states that the committee have considered this subject and that the bill does not in any way affect the title of the United States to any of its public lands or part with any of that title. Will the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] point out to the Chair which paragraph of the bill renders it liable to the point of order which he has raised?

Mr. CONGER. The land is described merely as "absentee Shawnee lands." Those lands are in a reservation which, under the law would revert to the United States.

The SPEAKER. The United States has a reversionary right in these lands?

Mr. HASKELL. That is not so.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas is not now entitled to the floor.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to say that in my opinion this is a clear case where the point of order would properly lie against the bill. The gentleman reporting the bill states that it does not relate to public lands at all. I am willing that the bill shall be referred to the calendar which he has indicated, and when it comes up for consideration we can determine whether the point of order would lie against it.

Mr. HASKELL. That is all I desire. All the proceeds of these lands will go to the Shawnee Indians. I desire to have this bill referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. WADDILL. I ask to be heard a moment on this question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to ask whether in any contingency the proceeds of this property would go into the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. WADDILL. Under no contingency. By an act of Congress passed several years ago—in 1869 I think—certain lands in the State of Kansas were reserved for the benefit of the Shawnee Indians. There were absentees of the Shawnee tribe to a considerable number scattered among different tribes. Provision was made that upon the return of those absent Shawnees they should have a portion of this land; and a reservation was made for their benefit. Afterward, these Shawnees being located elsewhere, this land was settled upon by white men. It still, however, belonged to the Indians. An act of Congress was passed authorizing the sale of the land and giving the actual settlers the privilege of buying it, but providing that the proceeds of the sale should go to the absent Shawnees, if they could be found, and if they could not be found, to the common fund of the Shawnee tribe. It is thus clear that the Government of the United States has not one particle of interest in this fund except to see that the Shawnee tribe of Indians get the proceeds of the sale of the land to which they are entitled.

Mr. BLOUNT. It is not true that if the proceeds of the sale of this land should go to the Shawnee fund as a trust fund, it will still be in the Treasury?

Mr. WADDILL. It is a trust fund, and is in the Treasury; but it is there for the use and benefit of the Shawnee Indians.

Mr. WHITE. It is clearly a public bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to know from the gentleman reporting the bill whether in any remote or possible contingency the United States can have any interest in this fund?

Mr. WADDILL. In no possible contingency.

The SPEAKER. On that statement the Chair rules that the bill goes to the House Calendar.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to reserve the point of order.

The SPEAKER. It is reserved under the rule, as the gentleman will find by referring to the last part of clause 3 of Rule XXIII.

The bill was accordingly referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHIPPEWA INDIANS IN WISCONSIN.

Mr. POUND, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back, with amendments, the bill (H. R. No. 1139) for the relief of the Lac de Flambeau, Lac Court Oreilles, and Bad River bands of Chippewa Indians in the State of Wisconsin; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to put a parliamentary inquiry to the Chair. On page 13 of the rules as printed I find in the second clause of Rule XVIII the following language:

And all bills, petitions, memorials, or resolutions reported from a committee—

The SPEAKER. That subject is not before the House.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope the Chair will allow me to get through, and then see whether it is before the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not wish to interrupt the morning hour.

Mr. BLOUNT. I simply rose to a parliamentary inquiry. If the Chair will not hear it, of course I desist.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear a parliamentary inquiry at any time, except that he does not wish the morning hour taken up with a parliamentary inquiry upon a subject not before the House.

Mr. BLOUNT. The purpose I had in view was simply this: The rule requires that bills reported from committees (and that is being done now) shall be accompanied by written reports. I desire to ask the Chair this question: What would be the effect if a bill should be reported without a written report?

The SPEAKER. The Chair misapprehended the gentleman. The rule is obligatory on the committee reporting a bill that it must be accompanied by a report in writing. The Chair has already so stated; and these bills have all had reports.

Mr. BLOUNT. It was not stated by the Clerk that there was a written report; and I rose for information.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] was right in making his inquiry as he did, and the Chair misapprehended his purpose.

DONATION OF CANNON FOR SOLDIERS' MONUMENT.

Mr. SPARKS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back, with amendments, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 92) authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver to the city of Charles City, Floyd County, Iowa, four cannon and carriages for the soldiers' monument in said city; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, reported back, with amendments, the bill (H. R. No. 1219) donating cannon and cannon-balls to the city of Topeka, Kansas, for monumental purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JOHN HEBERER.

On motion of Mr. SPARKS, from the same committee, that committee was discharged from the further consideration of the petition for the relief of John Heberer; and the same was referred to the Committee on Claims.

WILLIAM P. HOGARTY.

Mr. SPARKS, from the same committee, reported back adversely a bill (H. R. No. 3994) for the relief of William P. Hogarty; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

FIFTEENTH AND SIXTEENTH MISSOURI CAVALRY VOLUNTEERS.

Mr. DIBRELL, from the same committee, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. No. 952) for the relief of the Fifteenth and Sixteenth Missouri Cavalry Volunteers; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARINE ARTILLERY, SOUTH CAROLINA.

Mr. DIBRELL also, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 1511, a bill (H. R. No. 5041) to authorize the Secretary of War to turn over to the governor of South Carolina four pieces of condemned cannon for the use of the Marine Artillery; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JAMES M. THOMAS.

Mr. DIBRELL also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 5042) for the relief of James M. Thomas, late of Company C, Second Tennessee Mounted Infantry; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

KANSAS INDIAN WAR CLAIM.

Mr. JOHNSTON, from the same committee, reported back, with an amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 1199) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to ascertain and report to Congress the amount of money expended and indebtedness assumed by the State of Kansas in repelling invasions and suppressing Indian hostilities; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LOUISIANA STATE UNIVERSITY, ETC.

Mr. JOHNSTON also, from the same committee, reported back, with an amendment, joint resolution (H. R. No. 78) to transfer the barracks and arsenal property in the town of Baton Rouge, State of Louisiana, to the trustees of the Louisiana State University and Agricultural and Mechanical College, for the use and accommodation of said college.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. ACKLEN. It does not part with any portion of the property of the United States.

The SPEAKER. It parts with the temporary possession of certain property of the Government.

Mr. ROBERTSON. That is all.

The SPEAKER. That makes it subject to the point of order.

The joint resolution and amendment, together with the accompanying report, were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

TESTS OF RIFLED GUNS.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, that committee was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1126) to provide for the tests of certain rifled guns in possession of the War Department, and the same was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to invite the attention of the House to the importance of the object of that bill.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. MCCOOK. I ask by unanimous consent the gentleman from Virginia shall be heard briefly. Our harbor defense is an important thing.

Mr. BURROWS. I object.

JOHN REID.

On motion of Mr. BROWNE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, that committee was discharged from the further consideration of a bill (H. R. No. 2907) for the relief of John Reid, of Cincinnati, Ohio; and the same was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

PETER SCODEN.

Mr. BROWNE also, from the same committee, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. No. 782) for the relief of Peter Scoden; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ENOCH DAVIS.

Mr. BROWNE also, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 3511, a bill (H. R. No. 5043) to remove the charge of desertion against Enoch Davis, late a private in Company G, Sixth Iowa Volunteer Infantry; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SOLDIERS' MONUMENT ASSOCIATION, SALTSBURGH.

Mr. WHITE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. No. 2364) donating condemned cannon and cannon-balls to the Soldiers' Monument Association of Saltsburgh, Indiana County, Pennsylvania; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

HARLOW L. STREET.

Mr. WHITE also, from the same committee, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. No. 2134) for the relief of Harlow L. Street; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. DIBRELL. There is a minority report accompanying that bill.

Mr. SPARKS. Yes, there is a minority report, and I ask it be printed.

The SPEAKER. The views of the minority will be ordered to be printed, and accompany the bill and report.

Mr. WHITE. Of course the papers are not to be printed.

Mr. SPARKS. No, I merely ask that the report of the minority be printed.

The SPEAKER. The views of the minority have been ordered to be printed with the report of the committee.

SPRINGFIELD STREET RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. WHITE also, from the same committee, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. No. 260) granting to the Springfield Street Railway Company the right to lay tracks in Mill street in Springfield, Massachusetts; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

HENRY MULLEN.

Mr. WHITE also, from the same committee, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. No. 260) for the relief of Henry Mullen, with amendments; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC.

Mr. MCCOOK, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. No. 2599) granting condemned cannon to the Grand Army of the Republic, with amendments.

The SPEAKER. There does not appear to be a report accompanying this bill.

Mr. MCCOOK. There is a short report which will be found inside.

The SPEAKER. The reason of the rule is that members presenting bills from committees shall inform the House why a bill should be passed or rejected.

The bill and amendments were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

TEXAS INDIAN WAR CLAIM.

Mr. UPSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. No. 3774) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to ascertain and report to Congress the amount of money expended and indebtedness assumed by the State of Texas in repelling, suppressing, and guarding against invasions, raids, incursions, and hostilities by Indians and Mexicans in said State and upon its borders and in frontier defense; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. CONGER. Is not that subject to the point of order?

The SPEAKER. The point of order can be made against this at any time before its consideration.

Mr. CONGER. Is that the rule?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will read the last paragraph of the third clause of Rule XXIII, he will see that the point of order can be made by any member before the actual consideration of the bill.

SAN ANTONIO ARSENAL.

Mr. UPSON also, from the same committee, reported back favorably the bill (S. No. 54) to enable the Secretary of War to purchase land to enlarge and protect the San Antonio arsenal; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

THOMAS LITTLE.

Mr. UPSON also, from the same committee, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. No. 2513) to authorize the restoration of Thomas Little to the rank of captain; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

THE CHEROKEE ARTILLERY COMPANY.

Mr. SPEER, from the Committee on the Militia, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 2578, a bill (H. R. No. 5044) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan the Cherokee Artillery Company, of Rome, Georgia, four pieces of field artillery, with harness and equipments; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. SPEER. I wish to ask for the present consideration of that bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is subject to the point of order.

Mr. SPEER. I think the Speaker will not so rule if the bill is read.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc. That the Secretary of War be authorized to loan to the Cherokee Artillery, a military organization in the city of Rome, Georgia, incorporated according to the laws of the State of Georgia, and forming a part of its militia, a battery of four pieces of field artillery, with equipments and harness, and that he require of the said Cherokee Artillery Company a bond, as required by law, for the return of said guns, equipments, and harness, in good condition, whenever demanded by the Secretary of War.

Mr. HAWK. Is there a report accompanying that bill?

Mr. SPEER. There is.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I ask for the reading of the report.

Mr. CONGER. This bill comes within the ruling already made by the Speaker to-day. It parts with property of the United States, disposing of it for the time being.

Mr. SPEER. It does not part with the property, but only with its custody temporarily.

The SPEAKER. The Chair rules that parting with property of the United States temporarily brings it within the provisions of the rule.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARINE HOSPITAL AT ANNAPOLIS.

Mr. WHITTHORNE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. No. 2872) to transfer the naval hospital at Annapolis to the care and custody of the Secretary of the Treasury, to be used as a marine hospital, with amendments; which, with the accompanying report, were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

EXPEDITION TO THE ARCTIC SEAS.

Mr. WHITTHORNE also, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 3534) to authorize and equip an expedition to the Arctic seas; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOSTETLER. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I suppose in the next morning hour the call will be resumed where it rests now.

The SPEAKER. It will. The gentleman from Tennessee will notice the difference between the old rule and the present one. The old rule would have given his committee two hours to make reports, and as many morning hours as the House was willing to allow discussion on the last of such reports. The new rule allows committees to present reports only for appropriate reference, not for consideration; so that every committee under the new rule, the Chair thinks, will in the course of a week have an opportunity to present and place before the House every bill it desires.

The regular order is demanded by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOSTETLER.] The gentleman, the Chair presumes, desires to reach the bill reported by him from the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service. He can make the motion that the House proceed to the consideration of business on the House Calendar.

Mr. HOSTETLER. That is the motion I desire to make.

The question being put on Mr. HOSTETLER's motion, the Speaker stated that the "noes" appeared to have it.

Mr. KNOTT. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 85, noes 84.

Mr. KEIFER. I call for tellers.

Mr. CONGER. Pending the motion just submitted, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to consider the bill making appropriation for the payment of marshals.

The SPEAKER. It is not necessary for the motion to state what particular bill should be considered. But the Chair would entertain the motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, but the House is dividing.

Mr. BLOUNT. There is no such bill as that mentioned by the gentleman from Michigan in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. McMAHON. It is with the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CONGER. Then I move to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union without stating the object.

The SPEAKER. The motion would be that the House resolve itself into Committee on the Whole on the state of the Union to consider, first, bills raising revenue and general appropriation bills, and then other business on the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The Chair will entertain the motion as prior, for the disposition of the House could have been reached as well on the one motion as the other. The House was dividing, and on a rising vote the "ayes" had it.

Mr. CONGER. But my motion takes precedence.

The SPEAKER. Yes; but it was not made. The other motion was made without objection. If the two motions had been made the Chair would have given preference to the motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. CONGER. The motion of the gentleman from Indiana has not yet been decided?

The SPEAKER. It has not.

Mr. CONGER. Then, under the rule as to priority of business, my motion is a proper one.

The SPEAKER. The House was dividing on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. CONGER. That does not take away the priority of my motion.

The SPEAKER. The question of priority arises where two motions are made and in issue. The question then is which has the preference. In this instance only one motion was made, and the House is dividing on that motion. The gentlemen from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] demanded tellers.

Mr. HOSTETLER. I desire to ask a parliamentary question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOSTETLER. I wish to know whether it is not now in order to call for the yeas and nays to settle this question?

The SPEAKER. It is. The Chair, however, thinks that a vote by tellers may perhaps settle the question without a resort to the yeas and nays.

Mr. HOSTETLER. If gentlemen are willing to let a vote settle the question by tellers I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to call for the yeas and nays if he wishes and sufficient number sustain his demand.

Mr. CONGER. If the motion of the gentleman from Indiana does not prevail, then, as I understand, the motion would be in order that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. It would; and the preference would have been given to that motion had it been made in time.

The question being put on ordering tellers, there were yeas 34; more than one-fifth of a quorum.

So tellers were ordered; and Mr. KEIFER and Mr. HOSTETLER were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 106, noes 92.

Mr. CONGER. I call for the yeas and nays. I want to see who wish to go on with the public business and who wish to consider this political contribution bill in preference to going on with the public business.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 126, nays 104, not voting 62; as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, his Secretary.

POLITICAL CONTRIBUTIONS.

The SPEAKER. The House having determined to proceed to business on the House Calendar, the Clerk will report the title of the first bill on the Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

The bill (H. R. No. 2266) to prohibit Federal officers, claimants, and contractors from making contributions for political purposes; reported from the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service by Mr. HOSTETLER.

Mr. HOSTETLER. This bill has been so long before the House, has been so frequently reprinted, and the desire on the part of members is so strong to get it out of the way so that other business may be considered, I will say that in order to give gentlemen on the other side an opportunity to discuss this bill I will not call the previous question until four o'clock this afternoon, if that shall be satisfactory to gentlemen on the other side.

Mr. GARFIELD. I have myself no personal wish about this matter, and I do not know that I shall say a word upon the bill. But I know of two members who are prepared to speak upon it; one is not now in his seat, but is in the city and may not be able to get here in time to speak upon the bill to-day. If the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOSTETLER] knows of any gentleman on his side of the House who is ready to speak now I hope he will let the debate go on without indicating at this time any limit.

Mr. HOSTETLER. I do not propose myself to make any remarks upon this bill at this time, but will reserve my right to speak at the close of the debate.

Mr. GARFIELD. Then I think the gentleman had better fix some time to-morrow when the vote will be taken.

The SPEAKER. At what hour to-morrow?

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not care. All that I desire is that members may have an opportunity to speak. I would say three o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. HOSTETLER. Very well.

Several MEMBERS. Make it four o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks as at present advised if the previous question shall be called at three o'clock and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOSTETLER] shall claim his right to speak an hour after the previous question shall have been ordered, the vote then will not be taken at four o'clock. This was the old practice.

Mr. CONGER. Under the new rules has the member reporting a measure the right to speak an hour after the previous question has been called?

The SPEAKER. He has the right to an hour to open and an hour to close the debate.

Mr. CONGER. Is there anything in the rule which authorizes him to occupy an hour after the previous question has been ordered?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman to clause 3 of Rule XIV.

Mr. BURROWS. That is where the debate has extended beyond one day.

The SPEAKER. The debate on this bill has extended beyond one day.

Mr. GARFIELD. In case we should now fix an hour of to-morrow for the vote on this bill, will not the morning hour of to-morrow have to come out of that time?

The SPEAKER. By the rule, the unfinished business comes up after the morning hour for reports of committees.

Mr. GARFIELD. The morning hour would have to be used.

The SPEAKER. It would, for reports of committees.

Mr. GARFIELD. Then I would call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOSTETLER] to the fact that if he names three o'clock to-morrow as the hour, there would be the Journal to be read and the whole morning hour for reports of committees, and that would bring it to half past one o'clock before this bill would come up.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman had better state at what hour to-morrow he will call the previous question.

Mr. HOOKER. The morning hour to-morrow might be dispensed with.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the debate on this bill is to be closed at three o'clock to-morrow, that would leave but an hour and a half for discussion. The gentleman might say that he will call the previous question at the end of two hours after the morning hour of to-morrow.

Mr. HOSTETLER. I am willing to do that.

Mr. GARFIELD. I would prefer myself that he should name four o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. HOSTETLER. Very well; I will give notice that at four o'clock to-morrow I will call the previous question on this bill.

Mr. CONGER. It is intimated by the Chair that after the previous question shall have been ordered there would be an hour for debate.

The SPEAKER. Does not the rule allow it?

Mr. CONGER. The rule says that the member reporting a proposition may have an hour to close the debate. But another rule provides that there shall be no debate after the previous question shall have been ordered. It would seem, then, that the member must, under the new rule, take his hour before the previous question is ordered.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Michigan direct the attention of the Chair to that portion of the new rules to which he alludes as to debate in connection with the demand for the previous question?

Mr. CONGER. Clause 3 of Rule XIV says:

The member reporting the measure under consideration from a committee may open and close, where general debate has been had thereon; and if it shall extend beyond one day, he shall be entitled to one hour to close, notwithstanding he may have used an hour in opening.

Now the rule in regard to the previous question. I cannot turn to it at this moment—

The SPEAKER. Rule XVII relates to the previous question.

Mr. CONGER. Yes, sir. The language of that rule is:

There shall be a motion for the previous question, which, being ordered by a majority of members present, if a quorum, shall have the effect to cut off all debate and bring the House to a direct vote upon the immediate question or questions on which it has been asked and ordered.

So that, although the member introducing the proposition has the right to his hour to close the debate, he must use it before he calls the previous question; he must call the previous question at the end of his hour.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that Rule XVII, to which the gentleman refers, must be construed to be in harmony with the previous rule as read, which declares that there may be debate after the previous question is ordered, as the Chair at first supposed.

Mr. McMAHON. That is in accordance with a familiar principle of law.

Mr. CONGER. The member who introduced the proposition is entitled to an hour to close the debate, and being in possession of the floor he may then call the previous question. I hope there will be no ruling that shall give so broad a construction as the Speaker intimates to a positive rule, which does not in terms prevent the full enforcement of the other rule.

Mr. McMAHON. Is not the other rule equally positive?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thought so; and the Chair's disposition was to construe them together.

Mr. GARFIELD. The Chair will allow me to say that we have not yet reached a point where the question is really up to be ruled on. I hope the Speaker will hold it open until the point is really made.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hold it open.

Mr. GARFIELD. And we reserve our right to make the point at the proper time.

Mr. BARBER. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. Will the House necessarily return to this Calendar to-morrow after the expiration of the morning hour, without a vote to that effect?

The SPEAKER. The bill will go over as unfinished business—not only as unfinished business but by agreement.

Mr. CONGER. I do not desire to be misunderstood—

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not misunderstand the gentleman.

Mr. CONGER. There has been no agreement except the declaration of the gentleman in charge of the bill that he will call the previous question. There has been no agreement on this side of the House so far as I know.

The SPEAKER. The rule of course will control everything in connection with the legislative matters before the House.

Mr. CONGER. I do not wish anything to go by agreement—only by the rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana stated (and the Chair did suppose that it met the views of the minority of the House) that he would call the previous question at four o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. CONGER. We may desire to resist calling the previous question. We do not want to be committed by any agreement.

The SPEAKER. That is a matter within the discretion of the gentleman.

Mr. HOOKER. I rise to a point of order. The House, on motion of the gentleman from Indiana, has proceeded to the consideration of the House Calendar. Now that we have under consideration the first bill on the Calendar, I object to the time being taken up by discussing how long it shall be debated.

The SPEAKER. The title of the bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 2266) to prohibit Federal officers, claimants, and contractors from making contributions for political purposes.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall not be lawful for any officer, clerk, or employé of the Government of the United States to contribute or pay to any committee or person, or into any fund, any money, property, or other valuable for any political purpose whatsoever, or to pay any assessment or percentage upon the income or emoluments of his salary or compensation for any political purpose, or give, lend, advance, or pay any money, property, or valuable thing, with the intent, assent, permission, knowledge, or understanding that the same may be applied to such purpose; and any of said officers, clerks, or employés who shall violate any of the provisions of this section shall be immediately dismissed from the office, clerkship, or employment which they may hold.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of each of the heads of Departments of the Government of the United States to issue, and keep posted, a standing order in their respective Departments, prohibiting the officers, clerks, and employes in said Departments from violating any of the provisions of the first section of this act.

SEC. 3. That it shall not be lawful for any head of Department or other superior officer of the Government of the United States to collect, or permit or allow any other person to collect, or receive, from any officer, clerk, or employé in his Department or under his supervision, any assessment, percentage, contribution, gift, loan, or advance of any money, property, or other valuable thing, with the knowledge, intent, understanding, or permission that the same shall or may be used for any political purpose; and any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this section, or any head of Department who shall fail or refuse to promulgate the order as mentioned in the second section of this act, or who shall fail or refuse to dismiss from office or employment any officer, clerk, or employé in his Department who shall violate any of the provisions of the first section of this act, on the same coming to his knowledge, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by imprisonment for a period of not less than one month nor more than six months, and, in the discretion of the court, by a fine of not more than $5,000.

SEC. 4. That any person having a contract with the United States, or any officer thereof, or who shall have had such contract within three months previous, or who shall have such contract within three months thereafter, who shall pay or contribute, either directly or indirectly, any money, property, or other valuable thing for any political purpose, shall be deemed to have forfeited all rights, and the same shall thereby be rendered null and void, and all officers of the Government are hereby prohibited from executing any contract with any party so offending; and that any person having any pending claim against the United States, or before any Department or officer of the Government thereof, who shall pay or contribute any money, property, or other valuable thing for any political purpose, shall thereby forfeit said claim, and all right to recover or receive anything on the same.

Mr. HOSTETLER. I yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. HOUSE.]

Mr. HOUSE. Mr. Speaker, the demand of the people for reform in our civil service was fully recognized in the platforms of both the great political parties of the country prior to the last presidential election, and each stood fully committed to the inauguration of such reform if it should be intrusted with the administration of the Government.

The democratic party fought the great presidential battle of 1876 under the banner of retrenchment and reform. The republican party had controlled the Government during the stormy period of the war and still held the citadel of power after the war had ceased, with the Commander-in-Chief of the Federal armies as President of the Republic. The wild and reckless extravagance and corruption more or less incident to a state of war had invaded the administration of the Government in a time of peace. With a military hero at their head, an overwhelming two-thirds majority in both branches of Congress, flushed with victory, boasting of their conquests, and claiming to be the preservers of the Union and the successful defenders of the nation's life, they reveled in all the license of unbridled power and spurned with contempt all suggestions of danger to their indefinite control of the Government. They regarded themselves as owners in fee-simple of the entire country and the public offices of the land as so many soft places for loyalty to enter and enjoy itself. They cast the democrats into outer darkness to weep and wail and gnash their teeth in humiliation and despair. Like the Pharisee that went up to the temple to pray, they proudly recounted their great achievements, and like him they continually thanked God that they were not so bad as but a great deal better than other men.

They forgot all responsibility to the people, and their duty to the country was fully discharged, in their estimation, by the distribution of the spoils of conquest among the truly loyal. Corruption stalked in all the insolence of irresponsible power through the corridors of the Capitol. It seemed a bold, if not a reckless, undertaking on the part of the democratic party to attempt to dislodge the republican party from their intrenched position. But the day of reckoning was rolling on; and it was only a question of time when the people, aroused from their lethargy and throwing off their fears, would assert their right to call their servants to a stern account. The Credit Mobilier exploded like a bomb in the midst of the guilty revelers, and the floor of the banquet hall was covered with the dead and wounded. The bloated rings that had been generated in the hot-beds of executive favor saw the dawn of the day of wrath and sought safety in whatever retreat offered a refuge from the gathering storm. Neither the prestige of the great hero of the war, with the shield of his administration interposed to save them, nor the loud shouts of loyalty, nor bitter denunciation of the democratic party, nor infuriated howls against southern rebels, could blind the people altogether to the extravagance and corruption of their rulers. They determined to make the men who had betrayed their trust feel that there was still a tribunal in this country that dared to take jurisdiction of their conduct and punish their crimes. The curtain rose upon the Forty-fourth Congress. Upon the floor of the House of Representatives the great republican majority that had crowded the stage so long had retired, and in their places appeared a large majority of those despised and excommunicated democrats, whom their loyal adversaries thought had been buried never to rise again. But the people had spoken, and there was no mistaking the stern majesty of that voice that summoned the great democratic party of this country once more to the front.

The House of Representatives of the Forty-fourth Congress entered upon the work of retrenchment and the task of exposing dishonest officials. They cut down the expenses of the Government between twenty-five and thirty millions of dollars, notwithstanding the stubborn opposition of the republican members on this floor, encountered at every step.

Belknap fled before the uplifted torch of investigation and exposure to the White House, where a friendly Executive permitted him to find refuge in a resignation of his office, and he only escaped conviction on impeachment for his crimes by a technicality. The Secretary of the Treasury incurred the undying enmity of his party by placing the slench-bounds of justice upon the track of the great whisky rings that were robbing the Government of millions. They chased Babcock, the President's private secretary, to the very doors of the Executive Mansion, where the hand of his chief was interposed to save him. Smarting under the condemnation of the people, humiliated by the victory of their hated adversaries and the disgraceful exposure of corruption in high places, the republican party reformed their broken ranks, and took the field for the great conflict of 1876. They saw and felt that they had presumed too far on the forbearance, and had well-nigh exhausted the patience of the people. They came before the country with professions of reform which if carried out would restore the administration of the Government to the better and purer days of the Republic. In their platform at Cincinnati they declare that—

The invariable rule in appointments should have reference to the honesty, fidelity, and capacity of the appointees, giving to the party in power those places where harmony and vigor of administration require its policy to be represented, but permitting all others to be filled by persons selected with sole reference to the efficiency of the public service and the right of all citizens to share in the honor of rendering faithful service to the country.

Jefferson himself would not have hesitated to indorse this as sound and wholesome doctrine. They even went so far in that platform as to make the extraordinary declaration that they rejoiced in the awakened conscience of the people in reference to their political affairs, although that "awakened conscience" had clothed their party in a full suit of mourning to attend the political funeral of some of their most trusted leaders. This glorying in tribulation, this heavenly resignation that caused them to kiss the rod that smote them, not only argued repentance for their sins, but was strongly suggestive of a change of heart. This plank in the platform seems to have made a very profound impression upon the virgin heart of Mr. Hayes. In his letter of acceptance, he dwells upon the subject in a strain so apparently serious and pensive as to almost induce one to believe that he really regarded the declarations of the platform to have been made by his party in sincerity and truth. He says:

We should return to the principles and practice of the founders of the Government, supplying by legislation, when needed, that which was formerly the established custom. They neither expected nor desired from the public officers any partisan service. They meant that public officers should give their whole service to the Government and to the people. They meant that the officer should be secure in his tenure as long as his personal character remained untarnished and the performance of his duties satisfactory. If elected, I shall conduct the administration of the Government upon these principles, and all constitutional power vested in the Executive will be employed to establish this reform.

This was taking high ground by the party of great moral ideas and their chosen candidate for the Presidency on the subject of civil-service reform; but these promises of reform on the part of the republican party bore such a striking resemblance to a death-bed repentance that the people declined to repose that confidence in them which they were designed to inspire. The election came on and the American people decided the contest between the two great contending parties. Samuel J. Tilden was elected President of the United States. They commenced the practical operation of that civil-service reform on the part of the republican party unparalleled in all our past. The means by which the choice of the people was defeated by fraud and a man not elected was installed in the office of President of the United States forms a chapter of our history which succeeding generations will read with shame, even if our institutions shall so far survive the shock as to leave to posterity no graver sorrow than a blush for the crime.

Sir, it was a dark day in our history that witnessed the oath of office administered to Rutherford B. Hayes on the east portico of this Capitol. His inauguration, under the circumstances, was the severest test to which the patriotism and forbearance of a free people could be subjected. A large majority of the people had cast their votes for Mr. Tilden, yet they stood peacefully by and saw a man whom they knew to have been defeated installed by fraud in that high office which had never been filled before by any one who did not owe his elevation to the suffrages of his countrymen. President Grant declared that no man could afford to occupy the presidential chair by a title tainted with the suspicion of fraud; but we have had the mortification as a people of beholding that proud position occupied by one whose title is not tainted simply with a suspicion of fraud, but is fraudulent from center to circumference, in the honest belief and conscientious conviction of a large majority of the American people. This was not a mere triumph of the republican over the democratic party; it was a triumph of wrong over right, of fraud over the expressed will of the people. It was not only the inauguration of a republican president, but it was the installation of fraud, with all the pompous sanctions of law, in that high place which had never been stained by fraud before.

Our institutions have felt the rude shock of parties in their imbecile struggles for power and survived—they have even felt the clash of arms and lived; but how long they can survive a destruction of the confidence of the people in the arbitrament of the ballot-box remains to be seen. Confidence in this peaceful method of settling political controversies once destroyed, there remains under our system of government but one other arbiter, the sword. The men or the party who shall succeed in shaking the faith of the people in the efficacy of the ballot-box will have unsettled the foundations on which our fabric of government rests. He who can treat lightly the probable influence and effect of that great crime upon the future struggles of parties in our country has failed to consider, in my humble judgment, the gravest danger that throws its warning shadow upon our path. We can only hope for the best, and seek to avert the worst consequences of this first step of the republican party in the redemption of their pledge of civil-service reform embodied in their platform. This introductory chapter to the republican volume of reform ought to have given the country some idea at least of what the book would contain.

When Mr. Hayes took the oath of office he hastened to throw out profuse promises and to indulge in rose-colored professions that led some to believe that he really intended to make an honest effort to reform abuses; but men do not gather grapes of thorns nor figs of thistles. A corrupt fountain cannot send forth pure waters, nor can a stream rise above its source. It was idle to look for reform and purity in the public service from a party that had committed the great crime of inaugurating Hayes, or to expect Mr. Hayes, after he was inaugurated, to tear down the fraudulent props that braced his administration and stand forth alone the hero of a political reformation. True, he has gushed ad infinitum and ad nauseam. In his inaugural, speaking of the founders of the Government and avowing his intention to follow in their footsteps, he said:

They held that appointments to office were not to be made nor expected merely as rewards for partisan services, nor merely on the nomination of members of Congress, as being entitled in any respect to the control of such appointments.

In his first annual message he lifted the trumpet of civil-service reform and blew a blast so clear and loud that some political zealots mistook him for the millennial harbinger. Hear the mellow notes that warble from his gushing heart:

I recognize the public advantage of making all nominations as nearly as possible impersonal, in the sense of being free from mere caprice or favor in the selection.

And again he says:

I shall most heartily co-operate with Congress in the better systematizing of such methods and rules of admission to the public service and of promotions within it as may promise to be most successful in making thorough competency, efficiency, and character its decisive tests in these matters.

Soon after his installation he wrote the following letter calling attention to his celebrated civil-service order:

CIVIL-SERVICE ORDER.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, June 22, 1877.

SIR: I desire to call your attention to the following paragraph in a letter addressed by me to the Secretary of the Treasury on the conduct to be observed by the officers of the General Government in relation to the elections:

"No officer should be required or permitted to take part in the management of political organizations, caucuses, conventions, or election campaigns. Their right to vote and to express their views on public questions, either orally or through the press, is not denied, provided it does not interfere with the discharge of their official duties. No assessments for political purposes on officers or subordinates should be allowed. This rule is applicable to every department of the civil service. It should be understood by every officer of the General Government that he is expected to conform his conduct to its requirements."

Very respectfully,

R. B. HAYES.

Under this order the following action was had:

On 21st of July, 1877, a committee of the Pennsylvania Republican Association addressed the President a letter setting forth the history and objects of that association, the object being to promote the best interests of the republican party with which its members are identified, and to cultivate more intimate and social relations with each other. It was organized in 1867, of republican voters of that State, and took an active interest in political contests since that time in sending voters home and collecting moneys voluntarily contributed for campaign purposes, and in the distribution of political information throughout the State. The association had a representation in the republican State committee, and its delegates to the State convention were always admitted without having, however, the right to vote. The work of the association was done during the hours usually devoted to recreation.

During the campaign of 1876 it distributed 600,000 political documents.

The committee requested the President, in view of the history and objects of the association, to inform them "whether membership therein on the part of officers or employés of the Government met with his approval, and also what portion or portions of the work heretofore performed by it is in your opinion objectionable and should be discontinued so far as such officers and employés are concerned."

To this communication the following reply was made:

REPLY OF ATTORNEY-GENERAL.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, August 1, 1877.

GENTLEMEN: The President has referred to me your communication of 21st ultimo, in which you give a history of your association, state its objects, and ask whether the President's order of June 22 applies to the members of said association who hold official positions under the Government. I think that your association is clearly a political organization, whose purpose is to advance the interests of a party, and that the members of it who are in the employment of the Government are embraced in the President's order.

Very respectfully,

CHARLES DEVENS,
Attorney-General.

Messrs. H. A. MYERS, PAUL HIRSH, and others,
Committee Pennsylvania Republican Association, Washington.

LETTER TO BROOKLYN OFFICIALS.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, August 2, 1877.

DEAR SIR: I am directed by the President to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of 31st ultimo, requesting to be informed whether the late order of the President "concerned membership in the Twentieth Ward Republican Association and like organizations," and to say, in reply, that such organizations are clearly within its scope. Your comments have been carefully noted; and it may be that the order referred to will in some cases work a temporary inconvenience, yet it is fully expected and believed that the benefits to accrue from its operation will more than counterbalance them.

Very truly, yours,

WILLIAM K. ROGERS, Secretary.

WILLIAM W. GOODRICH, Chairman, &c.

These were the rules he laid down for the guidance of his administration, and for the inflexible maintenance of which he pledged all the constitutional power lodged in his hands.

No man was to be appointed to office from personal considerations; none were to be given office as a reward for partisan services; no Federal officer-holder was to take any part in the management of caucuses, conventions, or election campaigns; no office-holder should be assessed to raise money for party campaigns; and no man holding office under the Government should be a member of any political club or association organized to promote the success of a political party, or even spend his leisure moments in such an association. The Federal officer under his administration was not only required to do nothing in aid of any political party, but to abstain from the very appearance of doing so.

Never, perhaps, since Sancho Panza assumed the reins of government in the Island of Barataria has anything been seen like it in elevated moral tone and political purity. Said Sancho, with the better half of a sandwich in his mouth and a glass of lemonade at his side:

I tell you once again it is my pleasure that you look well to me and my Dapple in the article of food; for that is the main point; and when the hour comes we will go the round, as my intention is to clear this island of all manner of filth and rubbish, especially vagabonds, idlers, and sharpers; for I would have you know, my friends, that your lazy and idle people in a commonwealth are like drones in a bee-hive, which devour the honey that the laboring bees gather. My design is to protect the peasants, maintain the gentry in their privileges, reward virtue, and, above all, to have a special regard to religion and the reverence due to holy men. What think you of this, good friends? Do I say something, or do I crack my brains to no purpose?

The steward replied:

My lord governor speaks so well that I am all admiration to hear one devoid of learning, like your worship, utter so many notable things, so far beyond the expectation of your subjects, or those who appointed you. But every day produces something new in the world; jests turn into earnest, and the biters are bit.

It turned out that poor Sancho had cracked his brains to no purpose. Failing to receive that moral support from his subjects, which Mr. Hayes has found so strikingly absent in his party, poor Sancho, disgusted with the cares of state, resigned his position, mounted his faithful Dapple, and turned his back upon Barataria. Here the analogy between Sancho and Hayes fails. He will never resign. Titles gained by fraud are never surrendered by voluntary resignation.

Mr. Speaker, the office of President of the United States is the most exalted position to which human ambition can aspire. It has been filled by men whose memories are cherished by their countrymen with a veneration second only to that with which they regard the grand system of government which was formed by their labors and illustrated in their lives. Respect for the position should, in some degree at least, moderate the censure due the conduct of an unworthy incumbent. But facts must be submitted to a candid world, and it is the chief glory of our institutions that no man can reach a position in this country so lofty as to exempt him from criticism. Let any fair-minded man read Mr. Hayes's loud and reiterated proclamations of civil-service reform, and then take the Blue Book and scan the names of parties from Florida and Louisiana—the two States where the great fraud was perpetrated—and he will have an effort to restrain a smile of contempt, as he measures the distance between promises and performance, professions and practice, words and acts. Let us view for a moment the fragrant bouquet of civil-service reform he has gathered from the lap of flowers.

M. L. Stearns was the governor of Florida at the time the great iniquity was consummated in that State. He was the man who, contrary to law, withheld from the Tilden electors the certificates to which the returns clearly entitled them, and gave certificates to the Hayes electors, who, as he well knew, had not received a majority of the votes of the State. Stearns was defeated for governor at the very same election in which Hayes was held by the corrupt officials of Florida to have carried the State. Stearns was appointed by Hayes one of the commissioners of Hot Springs, at $10 per day, and is now a bright and shining light in the firmament of civil-service reform.

Samuel B. McLin was one of the State canvassers that exercised a power which everybody knows the law of Florida did not confer on the board. Arbitrarily and without a decent pretext for such illegal action this board refused to count the returns and threw out democratic votes. Without this barefaced usurpation it would have been impossible for the electoral vote of Florida to have been given to Hayes. Afterward McLin walked up to the Executive Mansion and claimed his reward. Mr. Hayes appointed him one of the justices of the supreme court of New Mexico at a salary of $3,000 per annum. His ability to find in the law of Florida what it did not contain as well as what it did doubtless went a long way in commending him to the champion of civil-service reform as a proper person to discharge the duties of a supreme judge. Such judicial prodigies as McLin are rare, and could not, therefore, escape the attention of one so bent as Mr. Hayes on civil-service reform when he was in search of proper material for a judge.

It will be remembered that as a part of the plan to count Hayes in it became necessary to establish an order of men known in the history of that celebrated conspiracy as visiting statesmen. The powers and duties of these men have never been very clearly defined. Prior to the time when it became necessary to defeat the will of the people by the machinations of political returning boards they were unknown to our history. No party in this country had ever before had any use for the services of such men, for the very good reason that no party had ever before deliberately determined to defeat the verdict of the people at the ballot-box by fraud. McLin says that both before and after the counting of the vote he, as a member of the returning board, was frequently assured that Mr. Hayes when inaugurated as President would take care of his friends in Florida. Notably among the visiting statesmen who gave these assurances were Governor Noyes, of Ohio, and General Lew Wallace, of Indiana. These two statesmen took particular pains to impress on the republican officials of Florida that they came to that State as the special friends of Mr. Hayes and at his request. A few extracts from McLin's testimony before the Potter committee will give an idea of the mission, at least of Noyes and Wallace:

Question. Did he [Governor Noyes] say anything to you or to Dr. Cowgill with regard to the auspices under which he had come to Florida, the objects of his mission?

Answer. As well as I remember he spoke of it in this way: that he himself had come, as well as other republicans, to encourage us.

Q. In what respect?

A. Well, I supposed at the time to render moral influence, or something of that kind, that he could render by his presence, or that could be rendered by the presence of other distinguished men of the party.

Q. Did he state whether he had come in pursuance of a general or special request of any persons?

A. I think he did, sir.

Q. Of whom?

A. Of the President.

Q. Of the President of the United States? President Grant was then in office.

A. No, Governor Hayes I am speaking of.

Q. He said that he had come at the special request and instance of Governor Hayes?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he state what his relations with Governor Hayes were at the time, and what they had been for some time?

A. That they were bosom friends at the time.

Q. And also political friends?

A. Yes, sir; that they belonged to the same political party.

Q. And that he had come to the State of Florida for the purpose of giving encouragement to Governor Hayes's friends here in reference to the count in this State?

A. Yes, sir; that the others had come for the purpose of giving counsel.

Q. What others did he mention as having also come at the instance of Governor Hayes?

A. Mr. Noyes did not say so, but General Wallace told me that he came at the special request of the President.

Q. That is, of Governor Hayes?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What, if anything, did Governor Noyes say in that conversation, or any subsequent one, with regard to the carrying out by Governor Hayes of any promises made by him?

A. As I stated on Saturday, I do not remember that Governor Noyes directly made promises of anything further than that the republicans of Florida were deserving of all credit for the manner in which they had conducted the campaign, and that the members of the canvassing board would be provided for; something of that kind, but it was rather in a general way.

Mr. YOUNG, of Ohio. Does not the gentleman from Tennessee think it would be fair to state to the House in this connection the testimony of Governor Noyes himself on this subject?

Mr. HOUSE. Well, that would take me a good while. Mr. Speaker, I read Governor Noyes's testimony, and I read McLin's testimony, and my opinion is that McLin told the truth about the matter. If I were to quote the whole of Governor Noyes's testimony, I do not think it would relieve him of the difficulty by any means. I will say this: Governor Noyes puts in a qualified denial; but the main fact that he was there, claiming to be the personal and intimate friend of Mr. Hayes, is not denied. McLin adheres to his testimony, and he states what Noyes told him.

Now, Mr. Speaker, McLin gives the following account of the part taken by General Wallace in bracing the spinal column of the men who were relied on to count Florida for Hayes:

Q. What did he [General Wallace] say was the reason of his coming to Florida?

A. He said that he had been telegraphed to by Governor Hayes and requested to come to Florida.

Q. Did he exhibit the telegram that he had received?

A. No, sir.

Q. What did he say that Governor Hayes had requested him to do?

A. To give counsel and aid in all the manner he could.

Q. What did General Wallace say to you with regard to the course that Governor Hayes would pursue with reference to the Florida republicans?

A. He said that he knew Governor Hayes well, and he was satisfied that if he became President he would provide, he would take pleasure in providing, for the republicans of Florida.

Q. At what time was it that these conversations took place?

A. Prior to and after the canvass.

Q. Prior to and after the completion of the canvass?

A. Yes, sir. It was referred to on several occasions.

These short extracts from McLin's testimony give us a glimpse of the peculiar duties which the visiting statesmen were expected to perform and did perform in promoting the great presidential frauds. This novel band of political knights-errant, it seems, were sent to the States whose electoral vote it had been determined to steal for the purpose of giving their "moral influence" to the rascals who were to commit the theft. I have heard of aiders and abettors and accomplices in crimes and of accessories before and after the fact, but I think this is the first instance in which I ever heard the part played by an accomplice in crime, described as giving "moral influence" to the principal criminal. But then it must not be forgotten that the year 1876 witnessed the first appearance of visiting statesmen upon the political stage. The English language like the common law must expand and adapt itself to new situations and the varying necessities of times and circumstances. It will be remembered that there were two republican members of the Florida returning board, McLin and Cowgill. I examined the Blue Book to ascertain what office Mr. Hayes had given Cowgill. To my astonishment, I was unable to find Cowgill's name on the civil-service-reform list at all. I thought there must be some mistake about the matter, as I could not believe that Mr. Hayes in his patriotic efforts to reform the civil service had overlooked so important a man as Cowgill, a member of the canvassing board that had counted Florida for him. But on looking into McLin's testimony further I found this account of Cowgill after the conclusion of his labors in Florida: It seems he came on to Washington to see Hayes, after he was inaugurated, to look after the reward in the way of a fat office that Noyes and Wallace had promised him and McLin for their services on the board of canvassers. McLin gives the following account of an interview he had with Cowgill:

Question. Dr. Cowgill was a member of the returning board?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Q. You may state what Dr. Cowgill said to you, if anything, in reference to it.

A. Dr. Cowgill told me that he was received very kindly by the President and given free admission to the White House at all times, and that he had expressed himself as being under great obligations to him and to me in the canvass, and that he felt not only under political obligations but personal obligations that he would certainly pay at an early day.

And again:

Q. What did Mr. Cowgill say with regard to any appointment that he should receive himself?

A. He told me that he had been promised an auditorship in the Treasury.

Q. Was he appointed to that place?

A. No, sir.

Q. Was he appointed to any position under the Federal Government?

A. I do not know of my own knowledge. I heard that he was appointed to an agency in the Treasury Department, but refused to accept it.

It seems that Mr. Hayes fully recognized the valuable services of Cowgill and McLin, and promised at a very early day to discharge the obligation he was under to them. As we have seen he made McLin supreme judge of New Mexico and promised Cowgill an auditorship in the Treasury. This for some reason could not be done and in lieu thereof he was appointed a special agent of the Treasury Department. This position requiring him to be from home a great deal, Cowgill declined to accept it, and retired to his orange grove on the classic banks of the Saint John's River, where in the enjoyment of his otium cum dignitate he can contemplate with quiet pride and satisfaction the extraordinary career of the man to whose elevation to the Presidency he contributed so much.

Mr. Noyes, the confidential friend and neighbor of Mr. Hayes, was not forgotten by the latter when he took his seat in the presidential chair. Noyes was appointed minister to France on a salary of $17,500 per annum.

General Lew Wallace, another intimate friend of Mr. Hayes, who, as has been seen, went to Florida and was most active in his efforts to assure the returning board that Hayes would take care of them, was appointed by Mr. Hayes governor of New Mexico on a salary of $2,000 per annum.

Mr. John A. Kasson, another wandering statesman who felt a strong call to visit Florida about this time, was rewarded by Mr. Hayes with the position of minister to Austria on a salary of $12,000 per annum. But not only were Stearns, and McLin, and Cowgill, and Noyes, and Wallace, and Kasson, the star actors in the farce of counting Florida for Hayes, all rewarded by the master for whose benefit they performed, but the great apostle of civil-service reform did not forget to suitably reward even the scene-shifters and candle-snuffers of the play.

J. W. Howell was employed in the office of the clerk of Baker County, from which a set of false returns were counted for Hayes. Howell boasted that he was the cause of Hayes's election by the part he took in this fraudulent transaction. Mr. Howell is the collector of the port at Fernandina, Florida, on a salary of $500 per annum, besides fees and commissions.

Richard H. Black and Thomas H. Vance, two colored gentlemen, officiated at the election in Alachua County, the one as inspector, and the other as clerk. They added to the poll-list, after the election, two hundred and nineteen fictitious names and the same number of republican votes. Thomas H. Vance nestles in the Sixth Auditor's Office on a salary of $1,600 per annum, and Richard H. Black finds an asylum on a like salary in the custom-house at Philadelphia.

L. G. Dennis, the chairman of the republican committee of Alachua County, was the man who inspired and instigated the manipulations of the returns by Black and Vance. Dennis was given a position in the Treasury Department, but the place not being equal, as he thought, to the value of his services, he clamored for a larger reward and lost what he had, and thereby added a modern illustration to the ancient fable of the dog that undertook to cross a stream with a bone in his mouth.

One Joseph Barnes was an inspector of election in Leon County. He it was who procured a lot of republican tickets to be printed in very small type and on very thin paper. These peculiar ballots were known by the suggestive name of "little jokers." Barnes boasted that he smuggled seventy-three of these republican ballots into the box. After the democratic party came into power in Florida, Mr. Joseph Barnes came to the conclusion that they might not properly appreciate his "little jokes," and he therefore wended his way to Washington to join the band of civil-service reformers under Mr. Hayes. The humorous author of the "little jokers" now smiles serenely in the Treasury Department on a salary of $1,000 per annum. He is supposed to be happy in the enjoyment of his salary and in the pleasing reflection that he is one of the good "jokes" that Mr. Hayes has got off on the subject of civil-service reform.

James Bell lived in Jefferson County, Florida. He seems to have been a sleight-of-hand performer in the many-sided game of fraud that gave Florida and the Presidency to Mr. Hayes. Bell was an inspector of election at some precincts in that county. After the close of the election, the inspectors tied up the tickets in packages and laid them out on a counter. Bell abstracted one of the bundles from the pile and slipped in its place another bundle of similar appearance, containing one hundred republican ballots. Bell was entirely too good a subject of civil-service reform to escape the keen eye of its great expounder, and he found a dwelling-place in the Interior Department on a salary of $1,200 per annum. I could mention other instances in the State of Florida illustrative of the industry and attention to details on the part of Mr. Hayes in his search of rare specimens with which to enrich his civil-service-reform cabinet of curiosities. But let these suffice.

I now turn to the State of Louisiana, for so long the Canaan of the carpet-bagger and the paradise of thieves. Upon this chosen field the dashing cavalier of civil-service reform has gathered his greenest laurels and displayed his most wonderful achievements.

Here the tree of civil-service reform, planted by his own hand, has taken deep root and thrown out its branches until its shadow covers the whole State. Here he has shown to an admiring world how a President determined to do his duty to his country can ignore the claims of party and appoint no one to office from personal favoritism and to reward no man for partisan services; here, too, he has demonstrated the fidelity with which he has observed the pledge made in his first annual message to make "thorough competency, efficiency, and character the decisive test in these matters," and here he has challenged the applause of all men of all parties as they have witnessed the heroism with which he has grasped the helm and headed the old ship for the better and purer days, displaying a sublime and salubrious courage that finds its only parallel in the boy that stood on the burning deck.

At the head of those whom the State of Louisiana has contributed to civil-service reform stands in flaring capitals the name of J. Madison Wells. The old man has a history that entitles him to the first place on this roll of honor. After Mr. Hayes was defeated for the Presidency the republican party leaned on the returning board of Louisiana for support, and the returning board leaned on Wells. He was equal to the emergency; he had it in his power to make or mar the fortunes of Mr. Hayes, to count him in or out, as he chose. He counted him in. Mr. Wells until recently held the office of surveyor of the port of New Orleans, at a salary of $3,500 per annum. His son, Alex. Wells, whom Mr. Hayes a short time since nominated for the position held by his father, occupied the place of special deputy surveyor at New Orleans at a salary of $2,500 per annum. S. S. Wells, another son of the old returning board chief, holds the position of inspector at New Orleans, for which he is paid $3 per day. R. R. Robinson, a son-in-law of J. Madison Wells, is a clerk in the custom-house at New Orleans, making in all between eight and nine thousand dollars per annum from the public crib to the Wells family.

Thomas C. Anderson was the left bower of the returning board deck. He is special deputy collector of the port at New Orleans at a salary of $3,000 per annum. His son has a clerkship at a salary of $1,400 per annum. Benjamin Bloomfield, the father-in-law of Anderson's son, clerk and auditor, at a salary of $2,500 per annum. George S. Bloomfield, the brother-in-law of Anderson's son, has a clerkship at $1,200 per annum, making a total of $8,100 which the Anderson family draw annually from the Treasury.

Louis M. Kenner, a colored member of the returning board, is deputy naval officer at New Orleans on a salary of $2,500 per annum. Alexander Kenner, a brother of returning-board Kenner, has a clerkship with a salary of $1,600 per annum, and another brother receives $900 per annum, footing up $5,000 per annum to the Kenner family. Kenner being a gentleman of color, could not of course expect his family to be as well provided for as those of Wells and Anderson. The Administration doubtless thought that a negro and his family ought to be satisfied with five thousand dollars a year, and I suppose they are, as I have heard no complaints. About twenty-one thousand dollars per annum to these three members of the returning board and their families is a very comfortable sum to enjoy in hard times. But there was another republican member of that notorious returning board. In fact they were all republicans, as no democrat was wanted or allowed to do the work that the board had on hand. G. Casanave was the name of the other member. He was also a gentleman of mixed colors. I now beg leave to announce a fact which must strike every one familiar with Mr. Hayes's civil-service-reform exploits as extraordinary and unaccountable. Casanave has never had an office under Hayes! How this happened I am at a loss to conjecture. He certainly never applied for one. His brother, Saint Felix Casanave, is United States storekeeper at New Orleans on a salary of $1,400 per annum. But there came a time when Rutherford B. Hayes and John Sherman heard the voice of Casanave crying for his reward, and they heeded it. After the returning board had counted Hayes in; after they had defied the order of the House of Representatives to produce the record of the fraudulent count, aided, abetted, encouraged, and supported by the republican members of this House in their contumacious refusal to produce the papers containing their count, and after they were released from their imprisonment here and went back to Louisiana, they were all four of them indicted in the courts of that State for their fraudulent conduct as members of the board. They employed counsel to defend them at a stipulated fee of $5,000. The sum of $1,875 seems to have been paid on this fee, but judgment was obtained and execution was issued and placed in the hands of the sheriff for the balance, and it was levied on Casanave's property. Wells, Anderson, and Kenner, though receiving salaries aggregating

$8,000 per annum, were law proof, and poor Casanave, with no office, but with a little property subject to execution, was about to have his house sold over his head. Casanave came to Washington. He says the next day after his arrival in this city he called, in company with General Sypher, to see the President. The President received him smilingly and graciously, but didn't offer to relieve him; told him that he had nothing to do with it and that he ought to see Anderson, and he thought Anderson would settle it. But Casanave knew how much of it Anderson would be likely to settle. He then called on Mr. McCrary, Secretary of War. He says McCrary expressed sympathy for him, but said he was a poor man, only living on his salary, and if he had the money he would pay the whole amount of the judgment himself. Whether this was a hint by McCrary that Mr. Hayes, who was drawing a salary of $50,000 per annum, which of right belonged to another man, Casanave does not say. But McCrary's sympathy did not satisfy the execution which the sheriff at New Orleans had levied on Casanave's property. Casanave then went to see Shellabarger & Wilson, who it seems are the attorneys of Hayes, Sherman & Co. in their troubles. Sherman was at the time up in the State of Maine making speeches to aid the Maine republicans in their State election, thereby carrying out Hayes's civil-service order, which prohibited every officer of the Government, high and low, from taking part in elections. In the absence of Sherman, Shellabarger & Wilson advised him to see Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Hawley. To Hawley he went; Hawley referred him back to Shellabarger, and Shellabarger, on the promise of Hawley, assured Casanave that when Sherman got back from Maine the money would be raised. Why Hawley himself did not tell Casanave to await Sherman's return and the money would be raised is not stated, but I suppose Hawley recognized it as a ticklish business and wanted to be able to say, if the matter ever got wind, that he had not compromised his chief by making Casanave any promise. He awaited Sherman's return. What then took place I will give in Casanave's own words, as given in the interview with him published in the Boston Herald and copied from that paper by the Washington Post in its issue of August 20, 1879. He says:

I waited and called on Mr. Sherman on his return, who received me very cordially; I stated my case to him and showed him the sheriff's writ. He answered that he knew nothing about it, and that he did not see why Anderson didn't settle this matter; but that the money ought to be raised, and that he would give me $100, which he attempted to take from his pocket, remarking at the same time, "You go and see some of the leading republicans and collect something from them." My reply to him was: "I have been to see the President and yourself, and I know no other leading republicans; is that the best you can do for me Mr. Secretary?" He answered: "That is all I can do; I am only here on a salary and I can't pay everything." I then took my hat, as I did so, saying: "I thank you sir; that amount would not pay my traveling expenses to Washington." Then I left his office, disappointed and depressed at the thought that I was going to be sacrificed and ruined, while others were being enriched in high offices into which they had climbed on the ladder I helped to set up. I again sought the advice of Mr. Shellabarger. In my excited feelings I said I would expose the whole matter of the returning-board proceedings and go home and pocket the loss. He advised me not to "throw the handle after the pot," but write a letter, setting forth the facts in the case, and await results in the case.

This last shot of Casanave went to the center. Henceforth, whether he then realized it or not, he was master of the situation. The wily old lawyer saw at a glance it would never do to let Casanave leave his office in that frame of mind, hence he suggested to him to write a letter and await results for a few days. He wanted to placate and mollify Casanave, until he could interview his clients, Hayes and Sherman, and inform them that in Casanave they held a wolf by the ears, and although it might be very fatiguing to hold him, it would be extremely dangerous to turn him loose in his present hungry condition. The truth is it was a ground-hog case with Casanave. Casanave wrote the letter to Mr. Hayes and sent a copy of it to Sherman. Without the slightest fear of being mistaken, I venture the assertion that no such letter was ever before addressed to an American President, and to the honor of our country be it said, that no man has ever before held that exalted position to whom such a letter could have been addressed without meeting the well-merited response of silent contempt. No President, except the great expounder of civil-service reform, has ever found himself so environed with thieves and scoundrels that he could not tear such a missile to ribbons and throw the fragments in the face of the rascal that dared to write it. But fraud, like misery, makes strange bedfellows. At the risk of being tedious, I will read the extraordinary production:

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 7, 1879.

MR. PRESIDENT: I have the honor to invite your attention to the following facts, upon which I respectfully solicit such relief as you may be able to offer me: In 1872 I was elected by the State senate of Louisiana a member of the returning board of that State. I did not desire or solicit the office, and I accepted it with great reluctance. In 1876 the grave and responsible duty of determining the result of the election for President of the United States devolved upon that board. Its deliberations were watched with profound solicitude by the whole country, while the leaders of two great political parties hovered around it, awaiting the result of its deliberations with that intense anxiety only known to expectants of the spoils of public office. The board found for the republicans, and the democrats, disappointed and chagrined, at once commenced criminal proceedings against its members. Counsel were employed to defend at a stipulated fee of $5,000, which Mr. T. C. Anderson assured me would be paid out of funds to be sent from Washington. At the conclusion of the prosecution counsel demanded their fee, which not being paid, they instituted suit, and after a hearing in court, obtained judgment against all the members of the board. A writ of habeas corpus (copy herewith inclosed) was issued, directing the sheriff to seize and sell sufficient property of the defendants to satisfy the judgment of $5,000, less $1,875. The sheriff, finding no property belonging to Anderson, Wells, and Kenner, seized my property, and now holds the same subject to sale under his writ.

If my property is sacrificed under that execution it will render me bankrupt. I am a poor man and unable to sustain such a loss. I have always assumed a full share of the responsibility attaching to the official acts of the returning board, although I have never enjoyed any of the fruits resulting from its findings; and in this connection I respectfully remind you that I hold no office under your administration and have derived no pecuniary benefits whatsoever therefrom, but, on the contrary, I have sustained considerable loss in my business on account of my identity with the board. Messrs. Anderson, Wells, and Kenner, the other three members, and their numerous family connections are enjoying lucrative positions in the employ of the Government.

I protest against being mulcted for the cost of the criminal proceedings against the returning board while others enjoy the honor and emoluments resulting from its decision. It is neither just nor honorable to impose this heavy burden upon me. It would be more becoming the beneficiaries of our acts to discharge these debts.

Upon my arrival in Washington two weeks ago I was assured, upon the promise of Assistant Secretary Hawley, that the amount required to satisfy the judgment would be raised as soon as the Secretary returned.

I called upon Mr. Sherman yesterday and he proffered me a contribution of $100 as the only relief he could offer me, which I was compelled to decline out of respect for the great finance minister of our Government. I expect to take my departure for Louisiana in a few days, and if any arrangement can be made of this matter to offer me relief, to which, under these circumstances, I believe I am justly and honorably entitled, I will be under obligations to those through whose influence it may be accomplished.

I am, very respectfully,

G. CASANAVE.

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 7, 1879.

DEAR SIR: I herewith inclose you a copy of an unofficial letter addressed to the President.

Very respectfully,

G. CASANAVE.

Hon. JOHN SHERMAN,
Secretary of the Treasury.

He reminds the President that he had always assumed his full share of the responsibility for the acts of the returning board, but had never enjoyed "any of the fruits resulting from its findings." "Fruits resulting from its findings" is good—excellent. It could not have been more genteelly put. "My share of the swag" would have expressed the idea as well, but it would perhaps have jarred upon the President's civil-service-reform sensibilities, and I presume that Casanave did not desire to offend. It was a delicate point and, on the whole, I rather admire the considerate mildness with which he drew it. He reminds the President that he is poor and that he has never done anything for him, while Wells, Anderson, and Kenner, his pals, like the fat kine seen in Pharaoh's dream, are wading up to their knees in the fertile clover-fields of executive patronage.

I protest—

against being mulcted for the costs of the criminal proceedings against the returning board while others enjoy the honor and emoluments resulting from its decision. It is neither just nor honorable to impose this heavy burden upon me. It would be more becoming the beneficiaries of our acts to discharge those debts.

"The beneficiaries of our acts" is also good—admirable. "The receivers of the stolen goods should not turn their backs upon the thieves" would perhaps have conveyed to the President as clear a perception of the meaning of Casanave, but he seems not to have lost sight in any part of his letter of Mr. Hayes's refined civil-service-reform ideas. And it must be confessed that there was some force in the logic of this disinherited member of the returning board. My sympathies are with him. He then tells the President that he called on Mr. Sherman and he only offered him $100, "which," continues Casanave, "I was compelled to decline out of respect for the great finance minister of the Government." The idea of Mr. Sherman playing the rôle of a poor man, living on his salary, seemed to Casanave, to use a common but expressive phrase, rather thin. He let McCrary off on that plea, but when Sherman put it in, he filed a demurrer. He then gives the President to understand that he will leave for Louisiana in a few days and what is done for him he wishes done speedily. There was no mistaking this letter; it meant business, and it was so accepted by the parties to whom it was addressed. Casanave says that in a few hours after the letter was delivered, he was informed that $500 had been sent to Badger at New Orleans to be applied to the payment of the judgment. The next day he was told that $500 more had been sent to be credited on the judgment. This latter he ascertained to be incorrect. On the 12th he received a telegram that his property had been advertised and would be sold on the 16th unless something was done. Time was important. He again called on Shellabarger & Wilson and requested them to see Sherman and get a definite answer. In a few hours thereafter Shellabarger handed him the following telegram, which Casanave says he sent at his own expense:

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 13, 1879.

E. NORTH CULLOM,
New Orleans, Louisiana, Exchange alley, near Custom House street:

Should we send one thousand more on returning-board judgment, will you give reasonable time for balance?

SHELLABARGER & WILSON.

To which the following was a reply:

NEW ORLEANS, La., August 13, 1879.

Messrs. SHELLABARGER & WILSON,
Washington, District of Columbia:

If you send me $250 more, making a total of $1,750, and Casanave will give security not to dispose of his property, I will wait till January 1.

E. NORTH CULLOM.

Cullom was the party who had the judgment against Casanave and was about to sell his property. Five hundred, it will be remembered, had been contributed by Sherman and had been already sent.

Hayes had contributed one thousand, sending the same to Shellabarger's office by Webb Hayes; but subsequently Webb Hayes returned to the office of Mr. Shellabarger, and said that his father wanted the thousand dollars returned, as a detective had informed his father that there was collusion and fraud between Casanave and the New Orleans attorney. On Casanave being informed of this his virtuous indignation was aroused at the idea of Hayes accusing him of fraud. The source from which the charge originated seemed to make Casanave as indignant as the charge itself. He went to see the President, being provided by Mr. Shellabarger with the following note:

I recommend Casanave to call on the President to give him an opportunity to speak to Casanave about the fraud that the detective spoke about, provided the President so desires.

S. S.

Armed with this missive from Shellabarger, Casanave went to the White House to interview the President, but he was reported not in, and Casanave failed to see him. Mr. Shellabarger then asked again to see the telegram Casanave had received in regard to the sale of his property. On the back of this telegram Judge Shellabarger wrote the following to John Sherman and requested Casanave to take it to him, which he did:

MY DEAR SECRETARY: The $500 you sent to me I have sent to Badger. I still hold the $1,000 sent me by the President. He reports collusion and fraud. What shall I do?

SAML. SHELLABARGER.

Sherman replied, requesting Shellabarger to investigate the charge of collusion and fraud, and on doing so Shellabarger found that the fee charged the returning-board members was a reasonable one, and that the debt against them was bona fide, and there was no collusion or fraud in the matter. In the mean time other telegrams had been sent to Cullom requesting that he hold up execution on the payment of the $500, (which Sherman had contributed, and the $1,000 which Mr. Hayes had sent but afterward attempted to get back,) but Cullom was firm; he insisted on $250 additional. Shellabarger saw Sherman and he handed over $250, making $750 contributed by him, which added to the $1,000 contributed by Mr. Hayes made $1,750, the amount demanded by Cullom before he would agree to an extension of time on the balance. This matter being arranged further proceedings were suspended. Casanave was relieved for the present, and returned to New Orleans, saying that he had a "document" in his possession which would bring the Administration to time if they endeavored to shirk the payment of the balance of the $5,000. Whether Mr. Hayes became alarmed after sending his son to Shellabarger with $1,000 lest the matter should be made public, and therefore wished to get the money back, or whether the story of the detective was a real one, I am sure I do not know; but I think the most probable solution of Webb's effort to regain possession of the $1,000 contributed by his father arose from the fact that on reflection the old man saw that Casanave had violated that portion of his civil-service order which prohibited assessments for political purposes, and according to this order Casanave had clearly no right to levy this assessment of a thousand dollars on him. But it was too late—$1,000 of Tilden's salary went toward the payment of the returning-board judgment, and that much of it is lost to Rutherford B. Hayes and his heirs forever.

Think of Washington, Jefferson, Adams, Madison, Jackson, or any of the illustrious men who have filled the presidential chair, being placed in a position where a man who had committed a fraud to count them into office could boldly approach the White House and demand of them money for services rendered in such a cause. The bare suggestion is an insult to the memories of those illustrious men, which every honest man with the instincts of an American citizen feels like resenting with indignation. Yet Casanave made this demand of Mr. Hayes as compensation for his services as a member of the notorious returning board of Louisiana, and Mr. Hayes contributed $1,000 to relieve Casanave's necessities. Why should he have done so? It will not do to say that it was simply an act of charity prompted by goodness of heart on the part of Mr. Hayes to relieve a friend in distress. I suppose there were hundreds, ay, thousands of men in the United States who voted for Mr. Hayes against whose property executions have been pending since his inauguration. To how many such unfortunate friends has he contributed money in their distress? When Casanave first went to him he refused to do anything. When Casanave first went to John Sherman he proffered a hundred dollars, and said he was a poor man, and it was all he could do. But when Casanave threatened exposure and demanded his reward the money was forthcoming. The act speaks for itself. No comment within the bounds of propriety could do the subject justice. Let the American people look on and make their own comment upon the acts of the man who fills the place that Washington once filled, and upon the party who is responsible to the country for having placed him there. But the beauties of civil-service reform, as illustrated in the State of Louisiana, are by no means confined to the members of the returning board. From J. Madison Wells down to the most insignificant liar that furnished his mite of perjury in an affidavit, or the most obscure rascal that brought his contribution of forgery in the shape of false returns, rewards in the way of Federal appointments have been bestowed with a lavish hand.

H. J. Campbell, recognized as the head of the affidavit factory that was set up during the count in the custom-house at New Orleans, when perjury was served out in quantities to supply the demand, was made United States district attorney for Wyoming. Nearly all the electors on the Hayes and Wheeler ticket found their services recognized by Hayes and his party in lucrative and comfortable appointments. The following is a partial list of the less conspicuous agents who figured in the fraudulent count. It is taken from the report of the Potter investigating committee, and shows with what care and industry Mr. Hayes provided for even the humblest man that took part in the scheme of fraud by which he holds his seat as President.

Supervisors and persons connected with the election.

Look upon these facts and read this list. Then reread Mr. Hayes's lofty professions of civil-service reform as embodied in his letter of acceptance, his inaugural address, his first and last annual message, his civil-service order and the proceedings thereunder. Can any position however exalted, can any charity however multitudinous in its capacity to cover sins, rescue one capable of such professions and such performances from the contempt of every American citizen with virtue enough to admire an honest man and sufficient candor to despise a hypocrite?

But the visiting statesmen who went to Louisiana to assist in the fraud were not forgotten by the beneficiary of their labors when he had grasped the prize of the Presidency. John Sherman dared not deny under oath that he gave to Weber and Anderson, in New Orleans, while the count was going on, a written promise if they would stand firm he would pledge Mr. Hayes to make such provision for them as would enable them to leave the State. Anderson and Weber were the supervisors of East and West Feliciana, respectively. False protests, with their names affixed, were on file with the returning board. They gave symptoms of disavowing and repudiating those protests. At this juncture Anderson says he and Weber had an interview with John Sherman. Sherman assured them if they would let the thing stand as it was they should be amply provided for. This seemed to satisfy them for the time, but on reflection they concluded they ought to have something from Mr. Sherman in writing, and they addressed him the following note:

NEW ORLEANS, November 20, 1876.

SIR: We have carefully considered the arguments advanced by you in our interview. Your assurance that we shall be taken care of is scarcely specific enough. In case we pursue the course suggested by you we would be obliged to leave the State. Will you, therefore, state in writing who we shall look to for the fulfillment of those promises.

Respectfully,

D. A. WEBER.
JAMES E. ANDERSON.

HON. JOHN SHERMAN.

To this letter the following was received by Anderson and Weber in reply:

NEW ORLEANS, November 20, 1876.

GENTLEMEN: Your note of even date has just been received. Neither Mr. Hayes, myself, the gentlemen who accompany me, or the country at large can ever forget the obligation under which you will have placed us should you stand firm in the position you have taken. From a long and intimate acquaintance with Governor Hayes I am justified in assuming the responsibility for promises made, and will guarantee that you shall be provided for as soon after the 4th of March as may be practicable, and in such manner as will enable you both to leave Louisiana should you deem it necessary.

Messrs. D. A. WEBER and J. E. ANDERSON.

JOHN SHERMAN.

Mr. Anderson produced the above, which purported to be a copy of the original, before the Potter committee; objection was made by the republican members of the committee to its being received as evidence. It was determined not to give the document publicity until the appearance of Mr. Sherman before the committee. The following telegram was sent to him at the Treasury Department by the chairman of the committee:

SIR: A paper purporting to be a copy of a letter written by you to D. A. Weber and James E. Anderson has been produced before the committee, and the committee has suspended the reading of it until you can have an opportunity to come here, forthwith, see the paper, and state whether it be a copy of any letter written by you, if you so desire to do.

In response to this telegram Mr. Sherman made his appearance before the committee, when the following proceedings took place:

AFTERNOON SESSION.

On the reassembling of the committee, (at 1.30 o'clock, p. m.) John Sherman, Secretary of the Treasury, appeared, and announced that he had come in response to a telegram received from the committee, which he handed to the chairman.

The CHAIRMAN, (addressing Secretary Sherman.) Do you desire to be sworn as to this matter?

Secretary SHERMAN. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you be sworn now, sir?

Secretary SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

JOHN SHERMAN (Secretary of the Treasury) sworn and examined.

The CHAIRMAN, (addressing the witness.) James E. Anderson, the witness testifying before the committee this morning, stated that he had received from the hands of D. A. Weber a letter purporting to be signed by you, of which that which I now show you is a copy. Will you state to the committee whether you ever wrote such a letter?

The WITNESS, (after an inspection of the paper handed to him, the same being subsequently marked "Ex. D.") I can only say this, that I believe, upon my responsibility and the oath I have taken, that I never wrote such a letter. I have no recollection of ever writing such a letter. If this letter was written, it must have been, if I am not mistaken about the dates, on the day when the returning officers first convened to open the returns. I think it was on the 20th. This purports to be dated on the 20th. At that time I knew but little about the transaction; the papers had not been opened. I do not believe I ever wrote that letter. At the same time there are things in this letter that I would have written to these or any other men who were engaged in the performance of what I believed to be their duty, if I had been asked; but I do not believe I wrote that letter.

After some time, (the witness having apparently concluded his statement,)

The CHAIRMAN said: That is all for the present, Mr. Secretary.

The WITNESS. If you want me any further, gentlemen, I will come back at any time you desire.

During the time the committee were discussing the question as to the admissibility of the copy of the Sherman letter, and before the telegram was sent to Sherman, the following colloquy took place between two gentlemen of the committee, Mr. McMAHON, democrat, and Mr. REED, republican:

In the course of the discussion, Mr. REED asked Mr. McMAHON whether it was taken for granted that the original letter was not in existence.

Mr. McMAHON. Not so far as we know.

Mr. REED. Have you any better evidence of it than this; any other copy?

Mr. McMAHON. No, sir; no other copy that was made at this time.

Mr. HISCOCK. The other copies are simply copies made from this one?

Mr. McMAHON. Simply made from this one. I have no other contemporaneous copies.

Mr. REED. Is there any photographic copy of the original?

Mr. McMAHON. If there is, I know nothing about it.

Mr. REED. Then I understand you that this is the only copy that will be produced?

Mr. McMAHON. I am not going to tell you everything.

Mr. REED. My understanding of your answer is that there is no other copy to be produced.

Mr. McMAHON. I have simply said that, so far as my knowledge extends, there is not.

Mr. REED. You do not know of any such paper, by hearsay or otherwise?

Mr. McMAHON. I am not on the stand. I have never seen a photographic copy of the letter.

Mr. REED. Have you heard of one?

Mr. McMAHON. Yes, often. I think that Mr. Sherman had better take the responsibility of answering that question.

The anxiety of Mr. Sherman's friends to ascertain whether the democratic members of the committee had in their possession the original or a photograph copy, by either of which they would be able to confront Sherman's denial with the evidence of his own handwriting, was most manifest. But they were left in doubt upon this subject, and under this fearful uncertainty Mr. Sherman took the stand. If he denied positively ever having written such a letter the original, or at least its ghost in the shape of a photographic copy bearing the fac-simile of his handwriting, might rise then and there to confront him. The situation had no terrors for an honest or an innocent man, but for a guilty man it bristled with danger. Mr. Sherman met the question propounded as no frank, innocent man would have met it, and took the only possible avenue of escape that a shrewd guilty man could have taken. The substance of his reply may be embraced in a few words—"I don't think I wrote the letter, but I would have had no hesitation in saying to Weber and Anderson what the letter contains." Don't think he wrote it! An honest man ought always to be able to know whether he has been guilty of a corrupt act. The doubt in his own mind upon such a subject is evidence to every one else that he was capable of performing the act. Nothing but the fear that the committee had or might obtain conclusive evidence of his guilt would ever have forced Mr. Sherman to defend in advance the propriety and morality of such a letter.

Plainly it was nothing more than a proposition to two rascals, if they would commit an act which might render it necessary for them to fly from a State whose people they had outraged, they should be taken care of and protected amply outside of the State. Mr. Sherman sees nothing wrong in this. He would have told any men this, he says, who were engaged in doing their duty. An honest man does not require, and no honest man will accept, a bribe to do his duty.

He could not offer such a bribe without believing the men corrupt to whom he offered it, and they could not accept it in remuneration for official acts without demonstrating their corruption. Mr. Sherman may think there is nothing wrong in offering a bribe to election officers in a State to do a certain thing. This may be visiting statesman morality, but outside of that extraordinary band of political wanderers such a transaction would be stamped, by universal consent, as corrupt and disreputable. That he wrote the letter I have not the slightest doubt; that he was capable of writing it his own words leave no man any room to doubt. Mr. Hayes, of course, in his labors to establish civil-service reform, could not overlook such services as these. Mr. Sherman was made Secretary of the Treasury, and is a prospective candidate of the republican party for the Presidency. I do not desire to obtrude my advice upon them, but in my opinion, if they intend to carry out the peculiar notions of civil-service reform entertained by that party, they can find no one among their distinguished leaders upon whose shoulders the mantle of Rufus B. Hayes could more appropriately fall. Edward W. Stoughton was another one of the visiting statesmen who went to Louisiana. Anderson says that Stoughton was in Moreau's restaurant on Canal street when he and Weber went in there to see Sherman. Anderson describes Stoughton as "a gentleman with a remarkable head of white hair. That is all I remember about him," he says. Perhaps the impression made on Anderson by Stoughton does not differ so widely from that made on a good many others. But that was not all that Hayes "remembered" about Stoughton. He remembered to make him minister to Russia on a salary of $17,500 per annum. Other visiting statesmen put in their work in Louisiana, and afterward received their reward from Mr. Hayes, but I do not care to further particularize on this part of the subject. But there is one other Louisiana specimen which I must not omit to mention, perhaps not eclipsed in brilliancy by any civil-service achievement in that State. I allude to the case of S. B. Packard. Packard, as is well known, was a candidate for governor of Louisiana in 1876. He received just 2,366 more votes in the State than were cast for the Hayes electors. But Hayes was counted in, and Packard was counted out. Packard and his friends claimed that if Hayes had carried the State, a fortiori Packard had, and they insisted that any decision that would oust Packard would impeach the validity of Hayes's title.

No man can deny this logic or refute it. It required under the circumstances an amount of cheek rarely met with even in the broad domain of brazen effrontery to play the rôle which Mr. Hayes found himself under the necessity of assuming. He soon proved to those who thought him incapable of playing the part that they did not know him. He had seen how the new order instituted by Grant had worked, and he resolved to try some visiting statesmen on Packard. The aptness with which he caught and appropriated this Grant idea does great credit to his shrewdness. Hayes knew that Packard had not been elected governor as well as he knew that he had himself failed to carry the State. Grant, just before the sun of his administration went down, (let us hope never to rise again,) had said that public opinion would not longer tolerate the propping of carpet-bag government by United States bayonets; and before his term expired he issued an order for the removal of the troops from Louisiana. By their own rottenness such governments had decayed and fallen in all the Southern States except Louisiana and South Carolina. Hayes was too well aware of the defect in his title and of the temper of the American people at that time to attempt to force Packard upon Louisiana as the governor of that State. He organized a returning board on Packard and counted him out. But this count was an honest one, and the gentlemen engaged in it arrived at the truth. Packard was of course indignant, but he was powerless. He had to submit. His lacerated feelings found a balm in a fat office which Hayes held out to him and which he took. He was appointed consul to Liverpool on a salary of $6,000 per annum. Oh, civil-service reform, thy ways are mysterious and past finding out!

But this is perhaps the true solution of Mr. Hayes's extraordinary crookedness on the subject of civil-service reform. He knew that he was inaugurated amid the smothered indignation and execrations of a wronged people, although for the sake of peace they stood by with unlifted hands and beheld the unspeakable outrage upon their rights perpetrated. Like all guilty men, he felt nervous and timorous. He knew that his title to the Presidency was immersed in fraud, and he feared that a full exposure of the crimes by which he had been seated might lead to the discovery of some methods by which the disgraceful decision under which he claimed would be reversed. There is no doubt that he felt great anxiety upon this subject. The perplexities of the situation suggested two things: First, to propitiate the people who had been robbed; or, failing in that, to make such terms with the robbers as to disincline them to disclose the means by which the great felony was committed. Hence with one hand he scattered promises of reform broadcast over the country and with the other distributed offices among the rascals that had committed the crime. Therefore, when this House ordered an investigation into the means by which the great fraud was consummated, the committee charged with that duty found the witnesses most conversant with the facts snugly ensconced in lucrative Government positions. They had been artfully bribed by a judicious distribution of executive patronage before they were called to testify. The difficulties that surrounded the investigation are thus tersely and truthfully stated by the majority of the committee in their report:

POWER OF PATRONAGE TO CONCEAL WRONG.

On the other hand, the power of an administration with the absolute disposal of one hundred and ten thousand offices, some of whose members are most interested in disposing of them so as to sustain themselves and their action, is enormous, as has been felt at every step of the investigation.

There is no form of continuing influence equal for convenience and control to that of an office. If a man be bribed by a sum down he may lose it or waste it, and then the control it gave over him will be gone. But in an office which he holds at the pleasure of the person who appointed him he is under continuing control. While he is compliant and serviceable he receives a support; but when he fails in either regard, or confesses where he might have kept silent, his supplies are cut off and he is turned out on the world without means and without character, ruined by his confession of the truth.

Patronage has, besides this, the further advantage that it affords the possibility of ascribing its bestowment to just causes, so that while being used for the most reprehensible purposes, the motives of its use may be concealed.

It is the history of all state conspiracies that if the conspirators succeed the means by which they do so are rarely disclosed or published while their party remains in power.

How fully the Administration has profited by these examples, and how desperately it has used the Federal patronage, alike to reward and keep under control those who participated in the frauds of 1876, and to retain witnesses in its interest, will appear.

But not alone to Louisiana and Florida, whose electoral votes gave the Presidency to Mr. Hayes, has he confined his exploits in reforming the civil service. Among the many imposing monuments that rise under his busy hand to perpetuate his extraordinary devotion to civil-service reform, not the least conspicuous is the one he has recently erected in the State of New York. The President and his Secretary of the Treasury announced to Congress and the country that the good of the public service required the removal from office of C. A. Arthur, collector, and A. B. Cornell, naval officer, at the port of New York. They set about to procure the removal of these officers, who although they had in some way incurred the displeasure of the President and Secretary of the Treasury, had a firm friend in the distinguished republican Senator from New York, [Mr. CONKLING.] The war between the Administration and the lofty and lordly Senator became very warm. The Senator, it is said, took no pains to conceal his contempt of Mr. Hayes, and did not mince his words in his fierce denunciation of that mischievous and meddlesome functionary who dared to interfere with his affairs in the State of New York. Secretary Sherman, in two lengthy communications, the one addressed to the President of the Senate and the other to the President of the United States, dated, respectively, January 15 and January 31, 1879, had shown that the honest and efficient administration of affairs in the New York custom-house demanded that Arthur and Cornell should be removed and others appointed in their stead. In a message to the Senate of the United States, of the date of January 31, 1879, Mr. Hayes uses this language in reference to the removal of Arthur and Cornell and the confirmation of the nominations he had made to succeed them:

The officers suspended by me are and for several years have been engaged in the active personal management of the party politics of the city and State of New York. The duties of the offices held by them have been regarded as of subordinate importance to their partisan work. Their offices have been conducted as part of the political machinery under their control. They have made the custom-house a center of partisan political management.

The custom-house should be a business office. It should be conducted on business principles. General James, the postmaster of New York City, writing on this subject, says: "The post-office is a business institution and should be run as such. It is my deliberate judgment that I and my subordinates can do more for the party of our choice by giving the people of this city a good and efficient postal service, than by controlling primaries or dictating nominations."

The New York custom-house should be placed on the same footing with the New York post-office. But under the suspended officers the custom-house would be one of the principal political agencies in the State of New York. To change this, they profess to believe, would be, in the language of Mr. Cornell in his response, "to surrender their personal and political rights."

Convinced that the people of New York and of the country generally wish the New York custom-house to be administered solely with a view to the public interest, it is my purpose to do all in my power to introduce into this great office the reforms which the country desires.

With my information of the facts in the case and with a deep sense of the responsible obligation imposed upon me by the Constitution to "take care that the laws be faithfully executed," I regard it as my plain duty to suspend the officers in question and to make the nominations now before the Senate in order that this important office may be honestly and efficiently administered.

R. B. HAYES.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 31, 1879.

The President tells the Senate that, with a deep sense of the obligation imposed on him by the Constitution to see the laws faithfully executed, he regarded it as his plain duty to suspend Arthur and Cornell and to make the nominations then pending before the Senate for confirmation; and why? In his own language, "In order that this important office may be honestly and efficiently administered." According to this Arthur and Cornell had not administered their offices honestly, and the President wished men to take their places who would so administer them. Of course a democratic Senate could not take the responsibility of retaining in office men upon whom a republican President had put the brand of dishonesty, and Mr. Hayes's nominations were confirmed and Arthur and Cornell were compelled to retire. The administration scored a victory in the long and bitter war between it and the Senator from New York. The White House was wreathed in smiles. An extra quantity of lemonade was ordered and the Cabinet drank the health of their victorious chief, who, with the scalp of CONKLING, as he supposed, dangling from his wampum belt, strutted around the council board, cutting fantastic tricks before high heaven, as he is in the habit of doing. He felt that civil-service reform had triumphed, and he was happy. But his exultation was of brief duration. CONKLING's picket-line was driven in, but he had only fallen back upon his reserves. Returning to New York, he summoned his clans. Cornell, whom Hayes and Sherman had turned out of office on the alleged ground that it was not honestly administered, was taken up by the republican party of New York and nominated for governor. Thus did New York's unconquered Senator fling defiance and contempt into the very face of the administration. How was the insulting challenge received? There was then witnessed a scene of abject humiliation and self-abasement on the part of the administration destined to stand, it is fondly hoped and believed, without a parallel in our history. William M. Evarts, Mr. Hayes's Secretary of State, and who is supposed to have great influence with the more respectable element of the republican party in New York, went to that State to persuade the people that the man Hayes had turned out of office for a dishonest administration of it ought to be supported for governor by the honest men of that State.

John Sherman, the Secretary of the Treasury, also went to New York to make speeches for Cornell and to give him a good character. When asked by a voter in his audience how he could advise honest men to support a man for governor of a great State whom he had caused to be removed for official misconduct, he had the audacity to state, in the face of his own letters and the message of the President, that Cornell was not removed on account of anything affecting his official integrity. Mr. Hayes stated in such a manner as to get it into the newspapers that if he were in New York he would support Cornell for governor.

The triumph of CONKLING left nothing to be desired, even by that haughty and imperious despoiler of Hayes. Achilles, with the dead body of Hector lashed to his victorious chariot, would fitly represent the scene, but for the inability of the Administration to sustain the character of Hector. Cornell himself must have felt a touch of pity and forgiveness when he beheld the debasement and abject humiliation of the Administration.

Not only has Mr. Hayes ignored, disregarded, and unblushingly violated all his promises made before and since his inauguration relative to the character of men to be appointed to office and the rules by which he would be governed in making the same, but he has surrendered every civil-service-reform principle announced by him when the success of his party and the requirements of its stalwart leaders demanded it to be done. His celebrated civil-service order was an infant of feeble promise at its birth. It struggled only for a moment in the arms of its fond father and was then laid away in its little grave to rest. That order expressly forbade any officer of the Government to take part in the management of any caucuses, conventions, or election campaigns, and it was expressly stated that the order applied to every department of the service—no exceptions—every officer, high and low, was prohibited from engaging in such work. Yet in every political campaign since that order was issued members of the Cabinet have openly and notoriously engaged in election campaigns. In his last annual message Mr. Hayes undertakes to justify the action of himself and members of his Cabinet in traveling over the country to deliver partisan harangues in utter contempt and oblivion of his civil-service order. If the following awkward and not very perspicuous extract from his message is not intended as an apology for their conduct I am at a loss to understand its meaning:

When the people have approved a policy at a national election, confidence on the part of the officers they have selected, and of the advisers who, in accordance with our political institutions, should be consulted in the policy which it is their duty to carry into effect, is indispensable. It is eminently proper that they should explain it before the people, as well as illustrate its spirit in the performance of their official duties.

Now, it is a notorious fact that members of Mr. Hayes's Cabinet and Mr. Hayes himself during the last election in Ohio went to that State and made political speeches in order that the influence of their position might be thrown in aid of Foster's election and in securing the State to the republican party. These campaign speeches are called explaining the policy of the Administration to the people, in order that they may have confidence in those they have selected to carry that policy out. This, Mr. Hayes says, is eminently proper. Why a heated political campaign is chosen as the time and occasion for explaining this policy to the people and invoking their confidence does not appear very clear to any one, except, perhaps, to Mr. Hayes himself. I would suggest to him that if he and his Cabinet wish to make public speeches in order to explain their policy to the people, it would be better not to select the noise and confusion of a fierce party conflict in the midst of which to make their explanations. When a close and doubtful contest is raging between their party and their antagonists, the President and his Cabinet, in going to a State where such contest is raging to make their speeches, might be suspected more of a desire to help their party than to explain their policy to the people. They cannot obtain the confidence of the people under false pretenses. But there is one portion of this civil-service order that promised to be very troublesome to the republican party, if it meant what it said and its author had any bona fide intention of carrying it out—and that is the portion which forbids assessments being made for political purposes on officers and employes of the Government. It is a notorious fact that the republican party for years have derived a large portion of their campaign funds by levying a tax on the poor and defenseless clerks and employes in the Departments and elsewhere. To stop the supplies from this source was a very embarrassing impediment to their successful manipulation of elections. They therefore determined to flank this part of the civil-service order and find their way to the Departments and to the salaries of Government employes, as they had formerly done. The congressional elections for 1878 were approaching and something must be done to enable them to raid the Departments and extort campaign money from Government employes. The process was a very simple one. They merely resolved to call the process of collecting the money "voluntary contributions," instead of "assessments." They prepared a circular to this effect, and lest some poor clerk might seize upon that portion of the civil-service order as a shield to protect himself against their exactions, they conceived the idea of getting the President's consent to what they wished to do. The following is the circular that was issued:

HEADQUARTERS OF THE REPUBLICAN CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEE, 1878,
1319 F STREET, NORTHWEST,
Washington, D. C., May 27, 1878.

SIR: This committee, charged with laboring for the success of the republican cause in the coming campaign for the election of members of Congress, call with confidence upon you, as a republican, for such a contribution in money as you may feel willing to make, hoping that it may not be less than $16.

The committee deem it proper, in thus appealing to republicans generally, to inform those who happen to be in Federal employ that there will be no objection in any official quarter to such voluntary contribution.

The importance of the pending struggle cannot easily be exaggerated. That the Senate is to be democratic after the 4th of March, 1879, is very nearly a certainty. In view of this, the election of a democratic House of Representatives would precipitate upon the country dangerous agitations which would inevitably add to present distresses. Foremost among their schemes the opposition already announce their intention to attempt the revolutionary expulsion of the President from his office.

If, by the presentation of three candidates for the Presidency in 1880, the people should fail to choose, the House must elect, each State delegation casting one vote. From what is now known, and with the growing dissensions in the camp of the enemy, the committee have good reason to enter upon their work with courage.

Please make prompt and favorable response to this letter, and remit at once, by draft or postal money-order, to "Sidney F. Austin, esq., treasurer, &c., German-American National Bank, Washington, D. C."

By order of the committee.

GEO. C. GORHAM,
Secretary.

This circular is artfully drawn. Its authors knew that Hayes was nervous and demoralized on the subject of his title. He dreamed of democratic conspiracies to expel him from a place to which he knew he had no right. The investigation ordered by the House of Representatives, and the appointment of the Potter committee to inquire into the frauds by which the people's choice was set aside and a man not elected was installed in the office of President, threw the occupant of the White House into a panic. The circular brought the attention of Mr. Hayes to this subject in the following words: "Foremost among their schemes the opposition already announce their intention to attempt the revolutionary expulsion of the President from his office." In the presence of such an alarming movement Mr. Hayes was prepared to adopt any method calculated to defeat it. He willingly yielded to the demand of this partisan committee, and gave them free access to the employes of the Departments to raise money with which to elect a republican majority to the House of Representatives, and thus put it out of the power of Congress to molest him in his seat. Hence, there appeared in the circular an announcement to the effect that no clerk or employé need have any fear in contributing money to the success of the republican party. "There will be no objection in any official quarter to such voluntary contribution." These words were inserted in the circular by the hand of Rutherford B. Hayes, the author of the civil-service order! It seems strange that such can be the fact—not strange either, when considered in connection with his other performances in the line of civil-service reform and the pressure under which he acted. That I may do him no injustice, I will quote from the testimony of George C. Gorham, secretary of the committee, taken before a select committee of the Senate:

By Mr. McDONALD:

Q. What sources outside of the committee were consulted in regard to the first circular and its tone in reference to the request for contributions?

A. We were very desirous of consulting the proprieties of the matter, to not call on the appointees of the President for contributions in any manner that would be distasteful to him.

Q. What authorities outside were consulted?

A. I was making that statement; and therefore one member of the committee was selected to present this to the appointing power, and I presume he acted upon knowledge, and he made a slight modification of the language which referred to the matter.

Q. Then this circular, as published, was presented to the President?

A. I do not think the whole of it was. I think this portion of it was; of course, I do not know the fact, but I believe it to have been submitted by one member of the committee to the President: "The committee deem it proper, in thus appealing to republicans generally, to inform those who happen to be in Federal employ that there will be no objection in any official quarter to such voluntary contribution." This was the part submitted. In the original I had written to the effect that "voluntary contributions would be approved by the executive department," and that was modified and a written memorandum returned by the member of the committee who made the inquiry, and these were the words that were substituted: "That there will be no objection in any official quarter to such voluntary contribution." These words I understood to have been approved by the President.

Q. Was not the entire circular, as it is there, with the modification you have suggested, presented at the same time?

A. I do not believe it was. I may be incorrect in my recollection, but as it was in manuscript and I did not want to stop to copy the whole, I think I copied that paragraph alone, as I did not want the circular to be issued in a form that would meet the disapproval of the President in this respect, and that that was the part submitted. My impression is that the residue of it was not.

Q. That the rest of the circular was not submitted?

A. I think not, but I am not certain.

Q. Was it submitted to any of the heads of Departments?

A. Oh, no. I do not think anybody had anything to do with it at all outside of our committee, except in that one particular as to how the executive branch of the Government would view this soliciting of contributions.

Q. How the phrase should be put in reference to the executive mind?

A. Yes, sir; what assurance we could give a man that he would not be turned out of office if he contributed to the success of the republican party. We wanted some assurance of that sort, and we wanted to put it in language that would not be distasteful to the Executive, and therefore the matter was referred to one of the committee, who brought this report: that this language would not be indecorous or distasteful.

Gorham first wrote it, "voluntary contributions would be approved by the executive department." This was putting it rather strongly and pointedly to the author of the civil-service order, and so Mr. Hayes seems to have thought, and therefore he concluded to couch his emasculation and virtual abrogation of his civil-service order in this language: "There will be no objection in any official quarter to such voluntary contribution." If he meant to do the fair thing by the poor employes of the Government why did he not also add "nor will there be any objection in any official quarter to a refusal to make such contributions?" He knew when he thus, with his own hand, nullified his own order that he thereby turned loose upon the Departments and the employes of the Government a set of political constables who would fleece them of their earnings. He knew that when he said that he and those under him had no objection to such contributions, it would be construed as equivalent to saying they would like to see the contributions made. He knew that a partisan committee asked him to do this with a view to raising a campaign fund in aid of the republican party. He knew in thus rescinding his order against assessments for political purposes he was tearing down the only defense that the hard-worked employes had against the political vultures that hovered over their salaries: "Such contributions in money as you may feel willing to give, hoping that it may not be less than $16." No "assessment" about this! O, no! All "voluntary." It would seem to any one not a member of a republican campaign committee that if the contribution was to be purely voluntary the amount to be given ought also to be left to the discretion of the donor. But the amount that each employé was to give was, doubtless, inserted in the circular, through fear that the poor clerks in their readiness to give to the republican party a portion of their small salaries might overstep the bounds of prudence and distress themselves by an excessive and lavish subscription. This tender concern of the committee to guard these employes against the consequences of their own rashness and zeal is one of the most touching and beautiful manifestations of disinterested benevolence to be found in all the history of party struggles. Under this process they collected from the employes of the Government, according to Secretary Gorham, nearly $100,000! To what plethoric dimensions that campaign fund would have swelled if the paternal forethought of the committee had not saved the department clerks and postmasters of the country from a reckless waste of their money by suggesting to them a reasonable amount, must be left to the imagination.

Into some of the Departments—notably into the Treasury Department—they sent a collecting-officer, armed with a subscription-book. Mr. H. M. Baker was the man sent into the Treasury Department. He gives the following account of the manner in which he proceeded:

Q. Did or did not the chiefs of divisions in the Secretary's office and the heads of bureaus assist you in obtaining these moneys?

A. I do not think they did anything that could be called assistance. I generally went to the chief of the division first, and he did as he pleased about subscribing, and then I said I wished to pass along to the other clerks, and he said very well, or something of that sort. That was the extent of it.

Q. Had you subscription-books?

A. I had one subscription-book.

Q. By whom was it headed?

A. It was headed by John Sherman, Secretary of the Treasury.

The plan of these collectors was to go first to the head of the Department, who of course subscribed, and then the subordinates were afforded an opportunity to "voluntarily" follow the example of their chief. They seem, with singular unanimity, to have reposed confidence in his judgment as to what would be a profitable investment.

Mr. Gorham gives the following account of the amount collected under this beautiful civil-service-reform proceeding, projected by him and his committee, with the finishing touch given to it by the President himself:

By Mr. BAILEY:

Q. I understand that altogether the subscriptions to your fund amounted to about $108,000?

A. Yes, sir; as near as I can get it.

Q. Of which $93,000 came from the officers?

A. From Senators, Representatives, and others.

Q. How much of that came from Senators and Representatives?

A. I cannot state it now. I think that their subscription was pretty general. There were, as we knew, thirty-nine republican Senators, and they gave, as a general rule, $100 apiece. There may have been some exceptions; I do not remember. The republican members of the House gave us $50 apiece.

Q. All of them or only a portion?

A. The great body of them. The intention of all was to do it. There may have been a case here and there where it was not convenient.

Q. All the remainder of the $93,000 came from those in the civil service of the Government?

A. Yes; I think so.

Q. And from all the republican party outside of those who were employed you received but $13,000?

A. That is all. I am sorry to say that was all we got from them.

Q. Then your treasury—I mean the treasury of the committee—was recruited chiefly from the employes of the Government?

A. It would appear so from my last answer.

Q. And they bore the expenses of the republican campaign chiefly, with the exception you have named?

A. That would be the inference from the last question and answer.

Q. Were these circulars addressed alike to democrats and republicans who were in the service of the Government?

A. We made no distinction.

The money thus wrung from the employes of the Government was sent to doubtful congressional districts to influence the elections and obtain, if possible, a republican majority in the House of Representatives. The salaries of these officers are paid by taxes collected from the entire people, democrats as well as republicans. Yet, under the transparent guise of voluntary contributions, these salaries are drawn on by the republican party at each election to keep themselves in power. These men in subordinate positions know that the retention of their places may depend upon their honoring the drafts made upon them; they dare not refuse. The bread which feeds their wives and little ones depends upon their keeping their place—that lost, the wolf is at the door. Could there be a more degrading slavery than this; a greater scandal to the public service or more disgraceful to a republican government? A man thus situated pays over the amount demanded of him with about as much volition in the premises as the benighted traveler on the highway surrenders his purse to the masked robber under the cold and deadly eye of a revolver.

The bill now pending before the House, or rather the substitute reported from the Committee on Civil Service Reform, is intended to remedy this growing evil and to eradicate this shameful abuse, and to relieve the poor employes of the Government, who are unable to protect themselves, from the extortions of political managers. It positively prohibits them from making contributions for any political purpose or to any political party under the penalty of being discharged from office; and each head of Department is required to post in conspicuous places in his Department a printed prohibition. Armed with this law, the employe can point to the printed rule in his Department and defy all the collecting agents that may be sent to rob him of a portion of his salary. But it is said that this is depriving the free-man of his liberty. Not so, Mr. Speaker. It is striking the chains from the limbs of men whose circumstances place them in the power of a party and enabling them to give to their families the full benefits of their hard-earned salaries. Does any man with sense enough to put two ideas together believe that the $100,000 which Gorham and his confederates collected in 1878 from employes of the Government were the free-will offerings of those hard-worked men, many of whom are barely able to support themselves and families on the compensation they receive? I do not expect the republicans to support this bill. It would, perhaps, be making too large a draft on their patriotism to require them to support a measure which deprives their party of the money with which they control elections. Their anxiety lest it would pass during the extra session was but poorly concealed. Elections were coming off in Ohio, New York, and Maine, and if the source from which they derived their campaign money should be cut off they feared the fate that awaited their party in those States with unbought ballots to control the result. Hence, day after day, they made dilatory motions to prevent a vote on the bill. It was pending in the morning hour; and, as is well known, two dilatory motions with a yea-and-nay vote will consume the hour. They at first pretended that they objected to its being considered in the morning hour and wished ample time to debate it in Committee of the Whole. The gentleman who had charge of the bill proposed to let it be considered in Committee of the Whole, with the amplest opportunity for debate, if the republicans would pledge themselves not to resort to dilatory motions to prevent its coming to a vote. This they refused to do. They wanted the money from the employes of the Government to run their campaigns in Ohio and Maine and New York. I think they feared if the bill passed Congress they might fail to coerce the President to veto it as they did in reference to the appropriation bills. But their fears were groundless. I think he would have vetoed the Ten Commandments without the least hesitation if the stalwart leaders of his party had ordered him to do it. But so it was. They defeated the consideration of the bill by what is familiarly known here as filibustering. The elections came off in Ohio, Maine, and New York; and, if current reports are to be credited, the employes in the Departments were called on more than once during those hotly contested campaigns for money to aid the imperiled fortunes of the party.

Mr. Hayes in his last message has laid the groundwork for vetoing this bill, and they now feel easy about it. He says:

Reasons of justice and public policy, quite analogous to those which forbid the use of official power for the oppression of the private citizen, impose upon the Government the duty of protecting its officers and agents from arbitrary exactions. In whatever aspect considered, the practice of making levies for party purposes, upon the salaries of officers, is highly demoralizing to the public service and discreditable to the country. Though an officer should be as free as any other citizen to give his own money in aid of his opinions or his party, he should also be as free as any other citizen to refuse to make such gifts. If salaries are but a fair compensation for the time and labor of the officer, it is gross injustice to levy a tax upon them. If they are made excessive in order that they may bear the tax, the excess is an indirect robbery of the public funds.

This part of the message was intended both as an apology for the part he took in the Gorham circular and as a groundwork for vetoing this bill. "An officer should be as free as any other citizen to give his own money in aid of his opinions or his party." He comes forward as the champion of the liberty of the citizen, and yet he issued an order that forbade a Federal officer from even belonging to a political club, though he was assured that such connection in no wise interfered with his official duties. I should like to hear him on the question: "Which deprives the citizen of the greater amount of liberty, to prohibit him from belonging to a club or to prohibit him from paying over a portion of his salary to corrupt the ballot-box?"

Mr. Speaker, if we mean to break up this demoralizing practice, if we mean to reform this abuse, we must strike at the root as is done in this bill. It is nonsense to talk of leaving to men the question whether they will make voluntary contributions, when they know that a refusal endangers their political heads. There are so many pretexts by which they can be dismissed the service, so many subterfuges by which the hand of power can make their wives and children beggars, that few men have the nerve, or rather the temerity, to risk their positions by a refusal to comply with demands made upon them. The Forty-fourth Congress struck a blow at this abuse, but failed to reach it. They provided, in an act passed August 15, 1876, as follows:

SEC. 6. That all executive officers and employes of the United States not appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, are prohibited from requesting, giving to, or receiving from, any other officer or employe of the Government any money or property or other thing of value for political purposes; and any such officer or employe who shall offend against the provisions of this section shall be at once discharged from the service of the United States; and he shall also be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be fined in a sum not exceeding $500.

It was found an easy matter to evade this law, and the practice has gone on as it did before. This act simply prohibited one officer from giving to or receiving from any other officer anything for political purposes. It did not protect the employe from the inroads and raids of campaign committees. This bill does, and the provisions of this bill, or something equivalent, is the only thing that will. This measure, if it should become a law, will enable the feeblest man and the feeblest woman in the employment of the Government to paralyze the arm of any campaign manager that reaches out to filch for party purposes any portion of their salary.

Looking over the entire situation—reviewing the history of the republican party under the administration of Mr. Hayes, chiefly remarkable for the gigantic fraud upon popular rights that gave it existence, and the wrecks of broken promises and violated pledges by which its career has been marked—how can the people of this country expect or hope for a reform in the civil service by the continuance of that party in power? It is difficult, if not impossible, for a party encumbered with abuses and complications consequent upon a long continuance in power to reform itself. The only remedy is in a change of rulers. Each indorsement of a party guilty of corruption or maladministration is construed by them as a popular condonation of their offenses and a permission to continue in the same evil practices, or to embark on others equally if not more reprehensible. The next presidential election will present very grave questions for the solution of the American people. Their indorsement of the republican party will imply an approval of a gigantic fraud by which the will of the people was defeated and a man seated in the presidential chair who, as every man of ordinary intelligence in the United States knows, was not elected. If they wish to preserve representative government they must not only rebuke the great crime committed on their rights by the inauguration of Hayes, but they must make up their minds to see to it that the outrage is not repeated. That it will be again attempted if the democratic party should be again successful at the polls, I have no doubt.

The indorsement of the republican party at the next presidential election will not only be construed as a condonation of the fraud by which the present incumbent of the presidential chair holds his seat, but also of the shameless distribution of executive patronage among the men who committed the crime. It will imply an approval of the thinly disguised process by which one hundred thousand office-holders are assessed to raise a fund with which to corrupt the people and debauch the ballot-box. The time has been when one-half the crimes that have stained the record of the republican party even since the last presidential election would have kindled a flame of indignation among the masses that would have consumed any party that dared to commit them. The purity of the Government, the fate of our institutions, is in the hands of the people. With them rests the responsibility of rising in their resistless might and preserving what our fathers bequeathed to us, or folding their arms in stupid indifference and suffering their free government to pass into a centralized despotism, where their voice will never be heard and their power will never be felt.

During the delivery of Mr. HOUSE's speech, when his hour had expired,

Mr. MCKENZIE said: I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Tennessee be permitted to proceed with his remarks.

Mr. BURROWS. I would like to inquire of the gentleman whether, if his time be extended he proposes to speak on this bill? [Laughter.]

Mr. HOUSE. Yes, sir; I will come up to it in the most natural order in the world. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. TOWNSEND, of Illinois.) The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. KEIFER. Before the gentleman proceeds I only want to say that we feel bound to object if other gentlemen who expect to speak within the time which it was understood would be allowed for discussion are likely to be cut off by this extension of time; but we do not desire, so far as I know, that anybody— [Cries of "We will let you speak!" "We will be fair!"]

Mr. KEIFER. I do not object, then, with that understanding.

Mr. BURROWS. I suppose the gentleman who has this bill in charge will not insist on calling the previous question to-morrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the proposed extension of time?

Mr. MCMAHON. I shall object to the time being extended beyond four o'clock to-morrow evening.

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman had better object to the continuation of this speech.

Mr. MCMAHON. I only give this notice. Other gentlemen must take the responsibility.

Mr. KEIFER. We are driven to object, in view of the notice given by my colleague, [Mr. MCMAHON.]

Mr. HUMPHREY. Yes, sir; we have to object under the circumstances.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot accept a qualified objection. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. HUMPHREY. No; I will let the gentleman go on, and trust to the honor of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. MCMAHON. I desire to give notice to the House I have charge of an appropriation bill which I want to bring in day after to-morrow; and I shall, therefore, object to anything which runs the debate or voting over to-morrow evening. I give notice in order that gentlemen may govern themselves accordingly.

Mr. HOUSE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a word. I should like very much to go on and complete my remarks.

Mr. KEIFER. I have no objection.

Mr. HOUSE. But I do not wish to do so at the expense of the time of other gentlemen on either side of the House who wish to discuss this bill. I have not often consumed the time of this House, as gentlemen who know me here can attest, and I do not wish to do it now.

Mr. KEIFER. Go on and finish your remarks.

Mr. HOUSE. If there is objection to extending the time fixed to-morrow for taking the vote, I will not go on.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I wish to suggest to my colleague this debate may be kept on after four o'clock to-morrow; so the subject may be disposed of to-morrow.

Mr. MCMAHON. That is all I wish.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Then let the gentleman from Tennessee proceed to close his remarks.

Mr. WHITE. We commit ourselves to nothing.

Mr. MCMAHON. When this bill came up it was understood it was only to occupy to-day; now it is to occupy two days.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania object?

Mr. WHITE. I do not wish to be committed by any promise made by anybody else.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is no objection, and the gentleman from Tennessee will proceed.

Mr. WHITE. I propose to speak on this bill.

Mr. HOUSE then continued his remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour extension of the gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. WILBER. If the gentleman is cut off from completing his remarks, let him print them.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I hope by unanimous consent the gentleman from Tennessee will be permitted to finish his speech.

Mr. CONGER. Let the gentleman finish his speech; there are two or three sentences I have not heard before.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection; and the gentleman from Tennessee will proceed.

Mr. HOUSE. There are a good many gentlemen who have not heard as much as the gentleman from Michigan. He has heard more than almost all other gentlemen, and is fond of telling what he knows.

Mr. HOUSE then completed his remarks.

Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York. I will yield ten minutes of my time to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. CONGER. I understood half the time this afternoon and half the time to-morrow would be given to this side of the House. The whole of this afternoon has been taken by the other side.

Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York. I give ten minutes to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. YOUNG,] who will go on this afternoon.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move the House do now adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 60, noes 3.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Before announcing the vote, the Chair asks by unanimous consent that Mr. BRIGGS, of New Hampshire, be granted leave of absence for one week, as he has been called home to attend important business.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask to introduce a resolution for reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CONGER. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. BLACKBURN. No one has risen to object.

Mr. CONGER. I have demanded the regular order and have risen.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I now see the gentleman where I want to.

Mr. MITCHELL's motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and forty-two minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows, viz:

By the SPEAKER: The petition of the widow of Meinrod Oechsle, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. AIKEN: The petitions of D. T. Billings and 16 others, and of W. A. Armstrong and 18 others, citizens of Elmira, New York, for the passage of the Reagan interstate-commerce bill—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. WILLIAM ALDRICH: The petition of Lord, Stontenburgh & Co. and 156 others, wholesale and retail druggists of Chicago, Illinois, for the removal of the stamp-tax on perfumery, cosmetics, and proprietary medicines—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, the petition of J. W. Hanson, publisher of the New Covenant, Chicago, Illinois, for the abolition of the duty on type—to the same committee.

By Mr. ANDERSON: The petition of H. E. Smith, publisher of the Empire, Concordia, Kansas, of similar import—to the same committee.

By Mr. ATKINS: The petition of F. E. Bryan, of Denmark, Tennessee, for the removal of the stamp-tax on perfumery, cosmetics, and proprietary medicines—to the same committee.

By Mr. BAKER: The petition of James Stockhouse and 56 others, citizens of Kosciusko County, Indiana, that Congress enact such laws as will alleviate the oppressions imposed upon the people by the transportation monopolies that now control the interstate commerce of the country—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. BEALE: The petition of citizens of Spottsylvania County, Virginia, of similar import—to the same committee.

Also, the petition of citizens of Accomac County, Virginia, for an appropriation for the improvement of Chincoteague Bay—to the same committee.

By Mr. BERRY: The petition of S. G. Lewis, publisher, Grass Valley, California, that materials used in making paper be placed on the free list, and for a reduction of the duty on printing-paper—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BICKNELL: The petition of 46 citizens of Indiana, for the removal of prohibitory duties on chrome iron ore and bichromate of potash—to the same committee.

Also, the petition of E. D. Morgan & Co. and others, against levying one rate of duty on sugars of all grades up to a stated point—to the same committee.

By Mr. BOUCK: The petition of H. W. Meyer, publisher of the Volksfreund, Appleton, Wisconsin, for the abolition of the duty on type—to the same committee.

By Mr. CALKINS: The petition of the publisher of the Local News, Lowell, Indiana, for the abolition of the duty on type—to the same committee.

Also, the petitions of E. T. Blue and Dalph & Casper, druggists, of Indiana, for the removal of the stamp-tax on perfumery, cosmetics, and proprietary medicines—to the same committee.

Also, the petition of John Dunlap, of Julian, Indiana, for the establishment of a post-route between Goodland and Julian, Indiana—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. CHITTENDEN: The petition of E. D. Morgan and others, against levying one rate of duty on sugars of all grades up to a stated point—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. CLAFLIN: The petition of William M. Jenks, for compensation for services rendered the United States in the capture of a blockade-runner during the late war—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. COBB: The petition of E. Pickhardt, publisher of the Signal, Huntingburgh, Indiana, for the abolition of the duty on type—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. COVERT: The petition of W. S. Overton, of Whitestone, New York, of similar import—to the same committee.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, March 10, 1880.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

THE UTE INDIANS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I have the honor to transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of the Interior, containing an agreement signed by the chiefs and head-men of the Ute Indians now present at the seat of Government. The stipulations of this agreement appear to me so reasonable and just, and the object to be accomplished by its execution so eminently desirable to both the white people of the United States and the Indians, that it has my cordial approval, and I earnestly commend it to Congress for favorable consideration and appropriate legislative action.

RUTHERFORD B. HAYES.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, March 9, 1880.

The message was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, with the accompanying papers, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a petition of citizens of the State of Indiana, praying for the passage of a bill providing for the equalization of bounties; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WALLACE presented a petition of citizens of Clinton County, Pennsylvania, praying such an amendment of the patent laws as will protect innocent users of patented articles from prosecution as infringers; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

He also presented two petitions of soldiers and sailors of the late war, who are citizens of Allegheny County, Pennsylvania, praying to be paid the difference between the value of gold and greenbacks at the time they were paid for their services as soldiers; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. KERNAN presented the petition of Roger A. Pryor, now of Brooklyn, New York, praying the removal of his political disabilities; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CONKLING presented the petition of merchants of New York City engaged in the transportation of cotton from southern to northern and eastern ports of the United States, praying for the passage of a bill to amend section 4472, of chapter 2, title 52, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, concerning commerce and navigation and the regulation of steam-vessels, as bearing on the transportation of cotton; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. GROOME presented the petition of Rev. Arthur Jones and 39 others, citizens of Ohio, praying that a proportionate part of the unclaimed volunteer soldiers' bounty be granted to Wilberforce University, near Xenia, Ohio; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. COCKRELL presented additional evidence to accompany the bill (S. No. 1048) for the relief of Thomas Doak; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

QUORUM.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is evidently no quorum present, and the Chair will pause before proceeding to call for further morning business.

Mr. THURMAN. Did I understand the President suspended receiving reports by reason of the want of a quorum?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Yes, sir.

Mr. THURMAN. I move that there be a call of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio moves that there be a call of the Senate. The question is on that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll of the Senate.

The Secretary called the roll, and 40 Senators answered to their names.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is a quorum present. Reports of committees are in order.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Sarah S. Flagg, widow and executrix of W. C. Flagg, deceased, late collector of internal revenue for the twelfth Illinois district, praying payment of a balance claimed to be due her late husband for compensation for services as such collector, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was adopted, and the prayer of the petition denied.

Mr. THURMAN. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report back the bill (S. No. 10) to reimburse the several States for interest paid on war loans, and for other purposes, adversely. I have been requested by the minority of the committee to ask that it be placed upon the Calendar.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The views of the minority of the committee were presented some time ago.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed upon the Calendar, with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. BAYARD, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1252) to define the terms of office of certain officials of the United States, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Mrs. Ann Barnes, praying to have refunded to her certain moneys alleged to have belonged to her late husband, Ammon Barnes, and also alleged to have been taken from him by order of the United States military authorities in 1862, and covered into the United States Treasury, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was adopted, and the prayer of the petition was denied.

Mr. VANCE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2769) to amend the act entitled "An act to encourage the establishment of public marine schools," approved June 20, 1874, so as to extend it to the ports of Wilmington, Charleston, Savannah, Mobile, New Orleans, Baton Rouge, and Galveston, reported it without amendment.

Mr. TELLER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 200) for the relief of Nathaniel P. Harbin, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. CALL, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 963) granting a pension to Theodore Rauthe, reported it without amendment.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. RANSOM asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1449) to provide for the settlement of accounts with the North Carolina Railroad Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SAUNDERS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1450) supplemental to the provisions of sections 1866, 1867, 1868, and 1869, chapter 1, and section 1907, chapter 2, title 23, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, increasing the jurisdiction of the probate court of Lawrence County, Territory of Dakota; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ALLISON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1451) to provide for the appraisement and sale of lots in the town of Peru, Dubuque County, Iowa; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. RANDOLPH (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1452) granting a pension to Agnes Fairly; which was read twice by its title, and, together with the papers on the files relating to this case, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CONKLING (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1453) to amend section 4472 of chapter 2, title 52, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, concerning commerce and navigation and the regulation of steam-vessels; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. VOORHEES asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1454) to amend an act entitled "An act granting a pension to Catharine Harris," approved June 19, 1878; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1455) authorizing the President to appoint John W. Hoffman a second lieutenant in the United States Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BAYARD asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1456) to amend section 2022 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

COURT IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. THURMAN. If there is no further morning business I wish to remind the Senate that yesterday a motion was made by me to refer the memorial which I then presented from delegates of the Indian tribes in the Indian Territory to the Committee on the Judiciary, and it was laid aside owing to the absence of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] who reported the bill the passage of which is remonstrated against by the memorial. I believe it was understood that that motion was to come up this morning in the morning hour; if so, I move to proceed to consider it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio moves that the memorial of the delegates from the Indian tribes in the Indian Territory protesting against the passage by Congress of the bill "providing for the establishment of a United States court in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I should like to say a word upon that motion. Some time ago I presented a memorial which was referred to the Committee on Territories in relation to the Indian Territory, and that committee has had the whole question under consideration, and I had the honor the other day of reporting a bill which that committee passed upon by sections and after mature deliberation submitted to the Senate. It seems to me very singular, after that committee has considered and passed upon this question and reported, that now it should be proposed to take the question from them virtually and put it into the hands of the Judiciary Committee.

The other day the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CARPENTER] made a motion equivalent to that made yesterday by the Senator from Ohio; but after he discovered that the Committee on Territories had passed upon the subject and reported deliberately to the Senate a bill which raises the very question upon its face that the Senator from Ohio now proposes to refer to the Judiciary Committee—after that was discovered, the Senator from Wisconsin withdrew that motion.

It is said that this question is not a proper one for the Committee on Territories if it involves the formation of a Federal court for the Indian Territory. That matter has been passed upon by the Committee on Territories; and, leaving myself out of the question, I think that there are at least some respectable lawyers upon that committee, including the chairman, [Mr. GARLAND.]

It is said now that this question ought to be put before the Judiciary Committee because it is a legal question. Sir, there are no measures or hardly any questions in my opinion that come before this body which do not involve questions of law. Is it possible that when a respectable committee of the Senate has made a report, after due investigation, after earnest labor, the question should be taken away from it and put before the Judiciary Committee because it is essentially the legal committee of this body?

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. CONKLING. What was the foundation of the action of the Committee on Territories, touching the establishment of a court? The point of my inquiry is, was it under a resolution of the Senate? Or how came the Committee on Territories to secure jurisdiction of that question?

Mr. VEST. I will answer the question of the Senator from New York with great pleasure. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] introduced a bill organizing a court in the Indian Territory, which was referred to the Committee on Territories. It was first referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, but at the request of the Senator from Illinois it was taken from that committee and referred to the Committee on Territories. The bill that is now before the Senate is a substitute for what is known as the Oklahoma bill, which I myself introduced at the beginning of the last session and at the commencement of this, and also as a substitute for the bill introduced by the Senator from Illinois. And, sir, I know of no reason why now this bill should be referred to another committee, because that is the whole of it. If the Committee on the Judiciary desire to be heard on the legal questions involved in this bill, it will come up on the Calendar and then be fully discussed. If it be sent to the Committee on the Judiciary now, it simply involves further delay and unnecessary trouble.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, the bill to which the Senator from Missouri refers as the foundation of this one, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary on my motion, but it was only read by its title, and by its title it appeared to me that that was the committee which ought to consider it. I was immediately afterward informed, without ever having read the bill,—informed by the Senator from Illinois who had introduced it—that I had misapprehended the nature of the bill in my construction of its title, and that the chief and principal object of the bill was not a judicial court, and whatever there was in it about that was merely an incident to it, if I correctly understood him. I said then certainly I should be very glad to correct my mistake for I made the motion to refer to the Committee on the Judiciary in the absence of its chairman; and that committee is certainly not desirous of undertaking any duties that do not strictly belong to it. Accordingly, without reading the bill, or any member of the committee reading the bill as far as I know, but in the spirit of courtesy that prevails in this body and which is so much commented on in the newspapers, we at once reported the bill back without even reading it and had it sent to the Committee on Territories where we supposed it belonged by the explanation of the Senator from Illinois.

But the substance of the bill reported, its great and leading object, is the establishment of a judicial court to try the Indian people as well as people of the United States, in respect of all their rights, civil and criminal, in the Indian country which by treaty and by patent has been set apart to these Indians, and wherein under treaties they have been authorized to establish a civil government of their own and a system of jurisprudence of their own; so that the bill now reported, so far as relates to that branch of the subject that I am speaking of, and I do not know but that is all there is of it substantially—I have not read it carefully—is nothing more nor less than a judicial bill providing for the establishment of a court under the Constitution of the United States and the laws of Congress over a certain part of the territory of the United States, and unhappily over a part of the territory where the propriety of establishing such a court and the constitutional means of making it effective is much more difficult than in any other part of the country.

Now, I submit to the Senate that it is proper, not as a subject of contest and discussion when the bill comes up here for consideration on the Calendar, but as a matter of that kind of judicial inquiry which can only be performed by a committee in the quiet of its own room and by study and consultation, that this subject deserves the attention of the Committee on the Judiciary, and I say that without the slightest disrespect to the Committee on Territories. But we have the organization of our committees divided up with reference to one committee taking a particular kind of studies and observation, and another another; and the theory, and I think a sound one, is that the Committee on Territories are far more capable in their character as a Committee on Territories of considering a matter of territorial adjustment than the Committee on the Judiciary or the Committee on Finance or the Committee on Agriculture or any other committee for the reason that that is made by the rules of the Senate their special study. The same may be said, I think, of the Judiciary Committee, as humble and commonplace as the members of that committee are. Therefore it appears to me, not as a matter of controversy, but as a matter of getting all the light that that committee can throw upon it from their point of view in respect of their special studies and inquiries, it should be referred to the Judiciary Committee before the Senate is called upon itself to form an opinion.

I confess, Mr. President, that if the bill of the Senator from Illinois had remained with the Committee on the Judiciary, and it had embraced also provisions of ordinary territorial administration, after the Committee on the Judiciary had passed upon the judicial part of it, or passed upon the whole of it, I should have moved myself, if nobody else did, before the Senate acted on it to refer it to the Committee on Territories, in order that they might consider its territorial provisions from the light of their experience and their studies.

So I think that this motion of the Senator from Ohio is not in any respect discourteous toward the Committee on Territories, that it does not in any respect imply a doubt of the fitness of their inquiries or the correctness of their conclusions, but it only calls for scrutiny by the committee specially appointed for that purpose of the legal and judicial aspects of this case.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President, I take issue with the Senator from Vermont as to the motion to refer this memorial to the Committee on the Judiciary, and I regard it as directly discourteous to the Committee on Territories. I am aware that it is not so intended; but nevertheless that is the fact, as I view it. This subject was referred to the Committee on Territories well-nigh three months ago in open Senate, after a contest between the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Illinois as to the bill the latter introduced. The Senator from Missouri introduced a bill more comprehensive, intending to establish courts in that country, and also a territorial form of government, and the Senator from Vermont or the Senator from Ohio, or any other Senator, would be very much puzzled to explain how we could establish a territorial government in that country without establishing a court of some character. So at one breath you can chide out all necessity for the Committee on Territories. But the chief object and purpose is to establish a territorial government in the Territory, and you cannot establish a territorial government without establishing in it some kind of a court. For example, under the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury the question of establishing a territorial government in Alaska has been before the Committee on Territories. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BURLER] has reported a bill to that effect. In that bill provision is made for a court. Why do not the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Vermont, one or both of them, move to refer that bill to the Committee on the Judiciary too? That establishes a court. And why do you not take the Committee on Privileges and Elections out of the category of committees, for they pass upon all kinds of legal questions, on the qualifications of electors, and the proper holding of elections, bribery, and so on.

But, Mr. President, why this new-born zeal just at this particular moment? The very men who send in this protest, which I perceive is now in the hands of the Senator from New York, were before the Committee on the Territories when this question was up. They were heard from time to time by written briefs and orally. They never raised a question as to the propriety of the Committee on Territories considering the question; they made no protest; they did not deny the jurisdiction of the Committee on Territories to pass upon it, but they came forward manfully and presented an argument against the proposition on its merits. Now the Committee on Territories is of no use if this matter is to be taken from it. Let the petition lie on the table, and come up when the bill reported by the Senator from Missouri is brought up and everybody can be heard upon it. If this motion is to prevail, it prevails against my protest, and it prevails, I think, after too long a delay of this question known to the Senate, known to the country, known to the newspapers, known to the Indians, known to the colored people, known to everybody to be before the Committee on Territories. Then take the Alaska bill and refer that, and take all other measures before the Committee on Territories from it and refer them to the Committee on the Judiciary. It is a delay of business for which there is no excuse, and I protest against the proposed reference.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I think, with my limited knowledge of this case, I can help the Senator from Arkansas to the distinction which he seems to be seeking—the distinction between such a case as is presented in Alaska by the question whether it shall be organized as a Territory and this case now in hand. With the people whose rights are involved, a treaty was made in 1866, and on the threshold of this whole subject we encounter the question whether this bill violates that treaty. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. DAVIS] suggests that a more appropriate committee to consider that than the Committee on Territories would be the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. GARLAND. Will the Senator pardon me for a moment?

Mr. CONKLING. Certainly.

Mr. GARLAND. I suggested at the very time that the bill should go to the Indian Committee, but it did not, and was referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. CONKLING. If my honorable friend will hear me a moment, I am going to give some reasons, I think good ones, why it should not go even to the Committee on Indian Affairs, although my impression is very strong, with the Senator from Illinois, that as between Territories and Indian Affairs, the Committee on Indian Affairs should take charge of the subject. But I insist that this is especially an appropriate question for the law committee of the Senate, whatever that committee shall turn out to be.

I have said that in 1866 a treaty was made with these Indians, under which treaty this territory inured to them, under which treaty a court was established and recognized for certain purposes, and only for certain purposes, namely, to pass upon the accusations in the nature of criminal offenses, no civil jurisdiction being given to it but all civil jurisdiction being carefully withheld.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him? I desire to state that I have not read the record of that treaty made with the Cherokees, Choctaws, Chickasaws, Creeks, and Seminoles, unless it does most emphatically confer power upon the Congress of the United States to establish a Federal court with civil jurisdiction.

Mr. CONKLING. Unless it does what?

Mr. VEST. It gives the power to the Congress of the United States to pass a law organizing a United States court for the protection of life and property.

Mr. CONKLING. The honorable Senator did not attend to my observation, or he would not make his observations contradictory of mine. Let me repeat myself. I said the treaty of 1866 established a court, a criminal court, a court with no other jurisdiction. The Senator from Missouri rises to say that that treaty in his estimation empowered Congress at some other time to do something else. I will come to that in a moment; but one thing at a time. My present assertion is, and I think nobody will deny it, that the court which, in point of fact, that treaty did establish was a court invested with criminal, and not with civil, jurisdiction.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator from New York permit me? I do not wish to interrupt him without his leave.

Mr. CONKLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. VEST. I do not understand the Senator's position, and I wish to state my own. I do not understand the Senator from New York as now asserting that the treaty of 1866 made with the five civilized tribes established any court at all. Do I understand the Senator to make the statement that any court was established by the treaty of 1866?

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator means by the word "established," set up manually and bodily, no; if he means "authorized," yes.

Mr. VEST. Then, I say that the court so authorized was one with civil as well as criminal jurisdiction, and the treaty so states. We ought to be able to understand the statements of each other.

Mr. CONKLING. If I understand the Senator from Missouri and he understands me, the difference between us illustrates, I think, the propriety of referring this subject to a committee charged with solving questions of law. I have read this treaty and I do not understand it at all as the Senator from Missouri does. I will make free to say that in my belief I should never have been called upon to declare my understanding of the treaty in this respect but for the fact that a railway company has gone through this Indian reservation issuing bonds from end to end, passing all the way over it, seeking to obtain these lands, and failing to obtain them by departmental power, and now so standing that to them, under a court of civil jurisdiction very large opportunities will inure. I say this meaning no offense to anybody and interposing no challenge to the reasons or the motives of anybody; but I say, as a matter of history, that these wards of the nation and these owners of this land were left unmolested and unenvied, with their treaty and their court, until the possibilities, the expectations, and the adventure of a railway company came to necessitate opportunities not found in the court and in the law as then the court and the law stood.

I repeat that this treaty, with my understanding of it, established and authorized no court into which a corporation or an individual can go with an action of ejectment, with any process of expulsion, to drive these people from their lands or to bring their title into question. This bill proposes to institute such a court, and proposes it although another provision of the treaty declares that never shall this thing be done except with the consent of these Indians. The honorable Senator from Arkansas has told us that the Indians went before the Committee on Territories and there objected and there protested, and there confronted this scheme which the treaty says in no form is admissible except with their consent.

I submit with great respect in regard to an Indian Territory organized under a treaty, which treaty makes the consent of these people a sine qua non, a condition precedent to such action, whether under such circumstances the question of setting up a court with civil jurisdiction into which claimants of these lands, squatters, alleged constructive grantees, can go and contest with the Indians, severally or together, their rights, is a question of law. Like other questions of law it involves, no doubt, considerations of ethics, considerations of good faith, considerations of right, but it is all the time and none the less a question of law, whether under the Constitution and under the treaty made in pursuance of it, which is a law, this proposed thing can be done and lawfully done?

That is a question of law. Does any such question arise in the case of Alaska? Will the honorable Senator from Arkansas say that there is any parallel between the cases or any relation between them except their utter dissimilarity? The question in Alaska is whether the community inhabiting that Territory shall be aided by an enabling act to set up an organism of their own. That is a political question; that is a territorial question; that is an economic question; that is a question addressed to the general discretion which takes note of the affairs of that territory. I can hardly conceive of a question the locus of which is in a territory, more entirely different from that in its elements and in the considerations by which it is to be decided.

This is a matter of considerable importance. We know by public rumor that so restless has the foot of adventure become in this region that military preparations have become necessary—I believe I am not mistaken in that—there is very imminent danger of collision, outbreak, and bloodshed, and why? I read from this treaty:

Whenever the Cherokee national council shall request it, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause the country reserved for the Cherokees to be surveyed and allotted among them, at the expense of the United States.

Now in various ways, of which I understand this to be one, it has come to pass that the question is whether other persons are to go into this territory, not whether the lands are to be allotted among the Indians, when they ask for it, at the expense of the United States, but whether adventurers are to go and seize and possess and monopolize these lands despite the treaty of 1866, and despite the law and the right of the matter. I think it will require some ingenuity to show that such questions pertain to the Committee on Territories because the Committee on Territories takes jurisdiction of a bill proposing an enabling act for Utah, for Montana, for Alaska, for some other Territory, which enabling act deals with the question whether its inhabitants shall be allowed to erect themselves into a Territory in the hope of attaining ultimate Statehood and membership of the Union.

Mr. President, I am reminded to say, what I might appropriately have done before, that I know of no reason, certainly none applies to me, for feeling any disposition in this matter for or against contending parties. The Senator from Missouri seems to espouse one side with great warmth. No doubt there is in his State a strong interest in regard to it. I can assure him with the utmost frankness that without understanding the particulars in that regard, I have no inclination on earth to antagonize the feeling, whatever it may be, except so far as I feel bound to observe and keep on our part, whatever it shall turn out the law declares to be our obligation. That, as I have tried two or three times to say and to illustrate, I regard as a question of law, to be most appropriately dealt with by the law organ of the Senate, having no fear whatever for one that I shall be any too wise on this subject after hearing not only the bill reported by the Committee on Territories but also the best report that can be made on the subject by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I have but a word to say. I stated yesterday that I made this motion to refer, not the bill, but the memorial to the Committee on the Judiciary by the request of the memorialists, and because looking into the questions presented by the memorial and by the bill referred to in the memorial, I saw that they were legal questions of very great gravity and importance; and because, despite of the most earnest efforts that I have made from time to time to restrict the jurisdiction of the Committee on the Judiciary to subjects connected with the judicial system of the United States, I have been again and again voted down by the Senate. It was always replied to me that it is competent for the Senate to send a bill or resolution to any committee that the Senate sees fit to order shall consider it, and that it is no answer whatever to a motion to refer a bill to a particular committee that that bill has been reported by some other committee, that that may be a persuasive reason for not doing so, but the Senate has the right and in its discretion will exercise the right to refer any subject before the Senate, whether it be a bill or a resolution or a petition or what not, to any committee whose opinion the Senate desires to have upon the subject; and hence the Senate has taken a bill reported by one of its committees and sent it bodily to the Committee on the Judiciary for the legal opinion of that committee. It has done so more than once; it has done so after very full discussion, and it was not considered disrespectful to the committee whose bill was thus referred.

But I have not moved to refer this bill to the Judiciary Committee, but simply to refer the memorial. Undoubtedly there are great legal questions in this case. In the first place, while there is no doubt of the power of Congress, as I understand it, to establish a court of criminal jurisdiction in the Indian Territory—for we have exercised criminal jurisdiction over that Territory for a long period of time, taking the parties, however, to Fort Smith, in Arkansas—while there seems to be no doubt of that, these gentlemen assert (whether correctly or not I do not know) that there is no treaty which authorizes the establishment of a court of civil jurisdiction, and that to establish such a court is a plain violation of the treaties and of their independence; that if all civil matters can be tried in a Federal court in that Territory and taken thence to the Supreme Court of the United States, the judiciary established by their own government—for they have a written constitution, at least the five nations have, and a regular form of government, legislative, executive, and judicial—that their judiciary will be completely overslaughed and put down; that the independence which is secured to them by the treaties—or if independence is too strong a word, their separate autonomy—is completely overthrown if this bill shall become a law.

Then, again, they assert that by another provision in this bill, which fully extends the homestead laws of the United States over that Territory, and which allots the lands that are now held by the nations and not by individuals, and which, as it is said, under existing treaties can only be allotted by the Indian nations, the bill undertakes to allot the lands to individuals.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. THURMAN. Certainly. I only mention what the memorialists state.

Mr. VEST. The Senator from New York mentioned that same matter. I assert now that no provision in the bill with regard to lands in the Indian Territory can take effect until the free consent of the Indians has been obtained, and any assertion to the contrary is simply without any sort of foundation. I assert that the bill is strictly in accordance with the treaty of 1866, and that no lawyer, however eminent he may be, can find one single provision in this bill which militates against or contradicts one provision of that treaty.

Mr. THURMAN. I am very glad to hear that statement. I have not carefully read the bill, and it did not seem to me to be necessary that I should do so in order to make this motion. I only say that that is what these memorialists allege. It is further asserted that this bill violates the treaty obligations in this, that it provides, in section 9—

That male residents of the Indian Territory, being citizens of the United States and over twenty-one years of age, shall be competent to serve as jurors in said court, but shall be subject to such exemptions and challenges as are provided by law in regard to jurors in the Federal courts.

They understand this as excluding all others but citizens. I do not so understand it, but I understand it as adding to the body of persons who may be jurors in this court persons who are citizens of the United States, every citizen of the United States who may happen to be there. Now, no citizen of the United States has a right to go into that Territory without the leave of this Government. He must procure the leave of this Government in order to go in there, and then he has the right to go in under certain restrictions and liabilities. This ninth section, they say, interferes directly with their right under the treaty to have their cases tried by members of their own nation. That is another legal question.

Then, Mr. President, this bill provides further for naturalizing, if I may so speak, the Indians in that Territory. Any Indian may go before a judge of a Federal court and by making certain proof and taking an oath may become a citizen of the United States, he and his wife and all their minor children.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair reminds the Senator that the morning hour has expired.

Mr. THURMAN. I thought it went to half past one.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Only for the consideration of the Calendar, under the Anthony rule.

Mr. THURMAN. Then all I have to say is that I should be glad to have this motion voted on, and I ask unanimous consent to have it disposed of.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. THURMAN. Then, Mr. President, they say that this is absolutely to disintegrate their nation; that it violates the treaty obligations of the United States in this: that, as they say—I do not know that they are right in their interpretation of the bill—when an Indian thus becomes a citizen of the United States he still is to retain his interest in the property that belongs to the nation, and in the annuities that are payable to the nation.

In conclusion, I am wholly indifferent whether this motion prevail or not. I have no disposition to load the Judiciary Committee, already burdened with work, with more work, and especially on so grave a subject as this; but nevertheless I have thought it my duty to let the Senate decide whether or not it will require the opinion of its Law Committee upon this important subject.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, I have rarely heard a proposition which struck me as more extraordinary since I have been a member of this body than the one now pending. The Senate referred this question to a committee of its own selection, the Committee on Territories, of which the distinguished and able Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND] is chairman, and which is composed of as good lawyers as those who compose the Committee on the Judiciary; and I mean no disparagement to anybody. Now the proposition is, after the Committee on Territories has examined this question and made a report, to take the subject away from it by a vote of the Senate. Nothing more insulting to a committee could possibly be proposed, in my judgment.

This matter was referred to the Committee on Territories, of which I am not a member, not by its seeking but by a vote of the Senate. It was charged with the investigation by a vote of the Senate; it has discharged that duty, and has brought the whole subject here for discussion appropriately and properly, and now a motion is interposed to take the subject-matter and refer it to some other committee.

Sir, I have always admired modesty, and my knowledge upon that subject has been vastly enlarged by the contemplation of that quality on the part of the Judiciary Committee. How strange that the Senator from New York and the Senator from Ohio, distinguished, able, and respected members of that committee, stand here and claim that they shall reinvestigate this question! Why? Because the Committee on Territories are not capable, or not willing, or not of sufficient integrity to investigate this question.

Mr. THURMAN. What makes the Senator make such an assertion as that?

Mr. VOORHEES. It is one or the other.

Mr. THURMAN. No, sir; there has not been one word said against either the integrity or ability of the Committee on Territories.

Mr. VOORHEES. That is the argument.

Mr. THURMAN. No, sir; it is not.

Mr. VOORHEES. Very well; I repeat that the argument, if there is any, is to take this subject, after it has been investigated three months by the Committee on Territories, away from that committee, either because they have not the competency to investigate it or because somebody else is more competent, or on the ground that they have not the integrity to investigate it properly. I repeat that is the argument; it has not fallen in words from anybody's lips, of course, but the subject is to be taken from their consideration either because they are not lawyers of sufficient ability to investigate it and somebody else is, or because they are not competent to be intrusted with so great a subject—one or the other.

It is strange to my mind that there should be a struggle on this question; and it reminds me of nothing so much as the attempt of a Federal court (which always assumes jurisdiction) to absorb the jurisdiction of State courts. That is the only parallel to the assumption that is made here on the part of the Judiciary Committee of this body. I undertake to say that this question has been as well investigated, as ably, and with as much legal knowledge, as will be brought to bear by the Judiciary Committee on this bill.

The duties of our committees are mixed. Some legal questions have to be decided by every committee of this body. I do not stand forth assuming to be a better lawyer than anybody else here, nor as good as very many here, but there are some legal questions that come even to me for decision as a member of various committees, and I assume to decide them. I suppose they ought to be referred at once to the Judiciary Committee. I suppose that wherever a member of a committee or any committee of this body finds legal questions lying in its way pertaining to the affairs of courts, the organization of courts, or the decisions of courts, there we ought to stop and bring the matter here and refer it to the Judiciary Committee. Certainly we ought to do so if this motion ought to prevail.

I undertake to say that this is the first time since the organization of the Committee on Territories that this question has been raised. It is not one of the oldest committees; it has only been organized of late years in connection with the advancing tide of organized government throughout the West. Ever since it was first organized, this is the first time that the question of whether courts should be established in connection with territorial governments has ever been attempted to be taken away from the Committee on Territories. It is the first time that the power of the Committee on Territories has been disputed as to that point. It is the first time that it has been sought to impugn the Committee on Territories by a direct claim of power on the part of the Committee on the Judiciary to set it aside.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator from Indiana be kind enough to point out the section in the bill reported from the Committee on Territories that provides for any territorial government, or anything that looks like it?

Mr. VOORHEES. I have not got the bill here.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have read it with great care two or three times and am unable to see that particular section.

Mr. VOORHEES. I have not got the bill here. I ask the Senator from Vermont why, with his vigilance, well known in this body, he did not observe that point when this question was given in charge to the Committee on Territories? Why is it that nobody saw that it was an improper subject to go to that committee at that time? Why is it, after charging them with the labors for three months, that the impropriety of that course and that vote of the Senate is only found out at this late day?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will answer the Senator with great pleasure, so far as I can, with truth and propriety. I have said,—the Senator probably did not hear me,—that it was stated by the Senator from Illinois after his bill, Senate bill No. 962 to establish a United States court in the Indian Territory and for other purposes, had been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, that so far as the judicial part of it went it was merely incidental; that it was a territorial government bill. I did not read the bill, as I said, but assumed that he was perfectly correct in his apprehension of his own bill, and I accordingly suggested the change of reference which was made. The bill that is reported by the Committee on Territories makes no reference whatever to the bill introduced by the Senator from Illinois. It is not a substitute for it.

Mr. VOORHEES. I will inform—

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator will pardon me I am answering his question; I will not take a minute. The bill reported by the Committee on Territories contains no provision that I can see on the subject of a territorial government at all. The bill introduced by the Senator from Illinois, that I have just sent for and read for the first time, does contain a provision for electing a Delegate and having a territorial representation, and providing for the qualifications of voters, and so on. So there was ground for what the Senator from Illinois said, a sound or an unsound ground; but certainly there was a color of propriety in having the Territorial Committee just as well as the Judiciary Committee or the Committee on Indian Affairs consider the bill, because one section in it did provide for a subject that was properly within the scope of the inquiries of the Committee on Territories. But the Committee on Territories has reported an independent bill, not as a substitute even for that, as it reads on the face of the report, and that bill thus reported leaves out entirely the provision for territorial arrangements, organization, and Delegate, and is simply in its first twenty-three sections a judicial bill, and in its other fourteen sections, making thirty-seven in all, a bill for the disposal of the lands of these Indians that confessedly now belong to them, and that the Committee on Indian Affairs, if anybody, ought to have considered.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator from Vermont permit me, before he takes his seat, to simply make a statement?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.

Mr. VOORHEES. I yield the floor to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. VEST. I thank the Senator from Indiana. This bill is reported as a substitute for both what was known as the Oklahoma bill, which I introduced myself, and the bill introduced by the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. LOGAN.]

Mr. EDMUNDS. I read from the printed statement at the head of the bill reported by the Committee on Territories:

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Territories, reported the following bill, which was read the first and second times by unanimous consent.

The Senator from Missouri will see that whatever the motive and intention of the committee may have been—

Mr. VEST. I still state that as the fact.

Mr. CONKLING. What is the number of the bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. The number of the bill is Senate No. 1418. The number of the bill of the Senator from Illinois is Senate No. 962.

Mr. VEST. I make the statement as a matter of fact.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My only knowledge of what it is, is from the records of the Senate.

Mr. VEST. I so informed the officers of the Senate. One of them came to me afterward and I told him to have it so entered, that the bill was a substitute for the other two bills. That is the fact.

Mr. VOORHEES. I understand, and upon the information mainly given me by the Senator sitting here [Mr. GARLAND] and the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. VEST,] that the bill introduced by the Senator from Missouri embraced the whole territorial question; the bill alluded to by the Senator from Vermont, as introduced by the Senator from Illinois, certainly treats of the organization of a Territory. This bill, which likewise relates certainly to the organization of a Territory, a court system there, is reported as the result of the committee's examination of these various measures, and is a substitute for them all. The question in its inception was rightly given to the Territorial Committee. As shown by the Senator from Vermont, the question was rightly given to them. Their report now embraces a part of what was properly referred to them; and thereupon the Judiciary Committee of this body thinks the subject ought to be taken out of the hands of the committee to which it was originally given, and sent to that committee. I think not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator is mistaken too. The bill is out of the hands of the Committee on Territories; it is in the hands of the Senate.

Mr. VOORHEES. I accept the technical correction.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is a substantial correction; and it turns out to be a bill that is now before us, not a single word of which the Committee on Territories has any jurisdiction over, because the first half of the bill is a judicial establishment; the second half is disposing of the lands of the Indians, and there is not a word of a territorial establishment in it.

Mr. VOORHEES. In contradistinction to the gentleman's statement, I say that every word of the bill properly belongs to the jurisdiction of the Territorial Committee. I repeat my statement, and if I am wrong I shall be corrected by those much older in service than I and better informed as to the previous legislation of this Government than I pretend to be. I reassert that the organization of courts in the Territories was never claimed by the Judiciary Committee before.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. VOORHEES. Very well; I will hear.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In the original acts, the enabling acts, authorizing the people of a Territory of the United States to set up a territorial government, provisions for courts are made, and the Committee on Territories has always done so. Subsequent bills relating to judicial administrations in those Territories, changes of the law as to the judiciary in those Territories, have always, when attention has been called to the point, and, in ninety-eight cases out of a hundred without attention being called to it, been considered by the Committee on the Judiciary, and are to this day.

Mr. VOORHEES. The Senator from Vermont yields the whole point by his statement just made, that the original inception of the court and its organization has always come from the hands of the Territorial Committee, and after that the subsequent work of amending, of pulling down or patching up, has been taken charge of by the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator will pardon me, he has not correctly stated what I said.

Mr. VOORHEES. I did not mean to state what the Senator said; I only stated the substance.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator is mistaken in the substance. I said that where the organization of a court was incident to the formation of a territorial government for the people of a Territory with a view to their becoming a State, it had been considered by the Committee on Territories in connection with the territorial bill; but I did not state that where the original initiation of a judicial establishment was the object of a bill instead of the incident of it, the Committee on Territories had it.

Mr. VOORHEES. I think we are understood on the question. I wish to make a further statement as an objection to referring this memorial to the Judiciary Committee. I have been longing with an aching heart to get some matters out of the Judiciary Committee that are there resting, and perhaps if not sleeping at least neglected for the want of time and opportunity on the part of that committee to attend to them. I remember a few days ago seeing the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] get after that committee on the subject of the Geneva award, and after much difficulty we were enabled to hear from that committee upon that most important subject. We heard of it spasmodically for a little while, and now it slumbers—a great question involving national honor beyond the value of money, the question whether we obtained from a friendly government money that we have no use for and do not know where to put it? There are other questions that I might mention, which it would not be proper for me to do, that I have longed to see brought before this body, involving the highest public and private rights. Why the Judiciary Committee, in its great capacity, with all its wealth of learning, its omniscience of legal questions, should want anything more to do, is a mystery to me.

I think we had better take this question as it came from this able Committee on Territories, and now that it is before the Senate, let us dispose of it, for it may not get back here again in an ordinary life-time if we do not take hold of it now.

I have not intended to reflect upon anybody or even upon the Judiciary Committee, but I must say that it strikes me as a strange spectacle in public or private life for one man to say, "Let me attend to that subject, for I can do it better than he can;" or, "It belongs to me to do it." After a committee that has charge of the duty by a vote of the Senate has done the best it can, for another committee to come forward and say now, "That has not been done properly," or, "You had no right to attend to it, and we will take it and attend to it," is a course of procedure that will never be sanctioned by my vote.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, the honorable and gifted Senator from Indiana has seen fit to decorate certain members of the Judiciary Committee with his censure. He rebukes the members of that committee for being immodest, for being presuming and rash. As the humblest member of the committee, I cannot complain. That honorable Senator has been so diffident, so reticent, so decorous himself in respect to this measure that nobody can challenge the propriety of the admonition he has given to the honorable Senator from Ohio, and in lesser degree to the less important members of the Judiciary Committee.

I venture, however, to put in a disclaimer, a denial, as far as I can venture to deny any proposition coming from so distinguished a source. I deny all purpose, I deny all tendency, in this motion, to reflect upon the Committee on Territories, or upon any member of it. I strenuously dispute the propriety of the argument of the Senator from Indiana when he says that the implication is of some superior faculty, of some greater ability, of some larger possession by one committee than another.

To illustrate: If a bill were introduced proposing to refund the public debt, proposing to negotiate loans, I should be in favor of referring, as the rules of the Senate would require to be referred, that bill to the Committee on Finance, and it would not be wholly because of the demonstrated and superior individual genius of the honorable Senator from Indiana as a financier, nor would it be because of imputing to the other members of the committee personal superiority, but it would be because the inscrutable mysteries of Providence and of politics having put the honorable Senator from Indiana and his associates in a majority in this body, and it having been necessary to compose a Committee on Finance, the honorable Senator from Indiana and his associates have become members of that committee. Therefore, I should vote to refer financial measures to them, and I should not intend to imply that either of the members of the committee was of higher character, more integrity, superior ability, than other members of the Senate who might have been selected in that behalf. But the necessity of dividing and apportioning labor establishes the usage of parliamentary committees.

The honorable Senator from Indiana asserted, (although I believe he admitted at last that he had never read this bill, which is the mantle of explanation to cover a good many things that he stated) that the bill was intended to establish a territorial government and organize a territory. I have read it, and I make this statement in regard to it, subject to correction: The first twenty-three sections of the bill are purely judicial; they allude to nothing else; they devise, institute, and invest with very variegated authority a judicial court, and there is nothing else in it. From section 24 to the end of the bill, the last section being 37, commencing with the institution of a local land office, the bill confines itself wholly to a parceling out, distribution, and disposition of the Indian lands. If there is another provision in the bill, I will thank any Senator to mention it.

Mr. THURMAN. Yes, there is a provision in the bill to enable Indians to become citizens of the United States.

Mr. CONKLING. But it is a part of one of the sections which I have thus classified.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will allow me to say a word in that regard, I will state that the bill also makes provision for the distribution of the tribal funds to individuals who may become citizens of the United States. That provision involves a judicial question.

Mr. CONKLING. I am aware of it; and still both Senators who have made suggestions will confirm me when I say that this bill has two, and only two, branches: one is to set up this judicial court, and the other is to dispose of the lands of the Indians with the incidental questions entering in.

The honorable Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] thought that too large a statement was made touching lands. I beg the Senate to hear one of the sections of this bill. Bear in mind that by the treaty these lands belong to the Cherokee Indians. Now hear this section:

All missionaries who have labored continuously among the five nations before mentioned for ten years shall be entitled, with their children, to the same rights as to selecting homesteads under the provisions of this act as if members of said nations; and any missionary having labored among said nations the term before mentioned,—

Observe this—

And now a non-resident, may, within one year after the taking effect of this act, return to the Indian Territory and claim such rights: Provided, That he shall become a bona fide resident of said Territory.

I do not think anybody has alleged against this bill more scope in disposing of the Indian lands than this section implies.

So, Mr. President, it turns out that instead of being a bill to set up a territorial government, about which the honorable Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] has been arguing, it is a bill wholly judicial in its character, except so far as it intends to dispose of these lands and to make the incidental provisions referred to by the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I desire to say a word with reference to this memorial. I have glanced over it and it seems to be perfectly respectful in its terms. It relates to a question that ought to be decided by some committee of this body, and it seems to me not the Committee on Territories. I think fairly and legitimately the memorial would properly go to the Committee on Indian Affairs; but as one member of that committee I shall vote, and vote cheerfully; to send it to the Judiciary Committee, because it involves, not only with reference to the bill now under consideration but with reference to almost every bill relating to Indian Affairs that will be considered at this session, questions which must be decided one way or the other by the Judiciary Committee.

In the first place, the bill under consideration provides for establishing courts. The Indians in this memorial say that under the treaty the courts proposed cannot be established. It provides also for the allotment of lands. The treaty provides that these lands shall be held under the control and direction of these Indian tribes. They have an absolute fee-simple title to the lands, and yet it is proposed to dispose of them here to homestead settlers and to others. Surely that is a judicial question. It is a question that ought to be decided by the responsible law committee of this body.

Another provision which has disturbed the Indian Committee a great many times, and which is now being considered by that committee, is whether or not we can allot homesteads to individual Indians and at the same time withdraw from the tribe their proportion of the tribal funds. One section of the bill provides with reference to these five tribes that when their members have become citizens of the United States and shall have taken their property in severalty, the stocks and bonds now held in trust for the tribes shall be also distributed to the individual Indians who may become citizens of the United States.

Mr. VEST. That has been the law ever since 1875.

Mr. ALLISON. But it is a question whether we can do that with reference to these five tribes, and it is an important question which I think the Judiciary Committee ought to decide.

Mr. MAXEY. Why not print the memorial and let it lie on the table and be considered with Senate bill No. 1418, and let the whole matter come before the Senate? The bill is on the Calendar. We have the bill on the Calendar, subject to be called up at any time. And why place the memorial in the possession of the Judiciary Committee? Let the memorial be printed, and let us consider it here.

Mr. ALLISON. I shall vote for the reference because I believe it will facilitate the consideration of the bill.

Mr. MAXEY. We shall never get it out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning hour, as extended, has expired. The Chair takes this occasion to lay before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War.

Mr. THURMAN. This matter, then, goes over till to-morrow.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Commissary-General of Subsistence, representing the necessity in the interest of economy of purchasing subsistence supplies required for remote posts in the early spring months; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

COMMITTEE ON RULES.

Mr. MORGAN submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That the forty-seventh standing rule of the Senate be amended as follows:

In the part of said forty-seventh rule which reads as follows: "A Committee on Rules, to consist of three Senators," strike out "three" and insert "five," so that the rule will read:

"A Committee on Rules, to consist of five Senators."

FITZ-JOHN PORTER.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1139) for the relief of Fitz-John Porter, late major-general of the United States volunteers and colonel of the Army, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. RANDOLPH.

Mr. McDONALD resumed the floor and concluded the speech begun yesterday. [His remarks will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I do not desire to discuss this question at any length; but I desire, if I am able to do it, to correct one or two impressions that I think have been attempted to be made which I understand, according to my theory and view of the case, to be incorrect.

Mr. President, I will merely in very short and brief terms review the points of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. McDONALD] and call his attention to certain propositions. I desire first to show that this board had no legal existence. On page 67, volume 2, you will find their authority as stated by the board themselves, and I wish to put it in right here.

Mr. McDONALD. I have never argued that point.

Mr. LOGAN. I know; but I desire to set the question at rest in reference to the legality of the board. The president of the board, General Schofield, says this:

The president of the board said: The board will be glad to have counsel present the whole case, reading the record, with comments upon it if they so desire. We will regard all the official papers relating to the case as part of the record.

There is one other matter in regard to which the board would like to hear what counsel have to say: that is in respect to receiving testimony in a case like this, this being a board having no organization under the law, no power to summon witnesses or administer oaths.

That is the language of the board themselves. They admit that they are not legally constituted, that they are not a military board under the law, that they are not a military board under the regulations, that they are not a board under any law that exists either statutory or otherwise. That is all I have to say in reference to that point.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does anybody contend that they were?

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator from Delaware did.

The next point is this, and I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Indiana to it: An objection was made that there was no battle on the 29th. I believe that objection has been done away with by the reports of the officers on both sides and therefore I do not wish to discuss that.

The next excuse made by the Senator from Indiana for Porter's not obeying the 6.30 order of the 27th of August, 1862, was in reference to the roads. I have but a word to say in reference to that; and it is that at the time the order was received Colonel Meyers swears that he parked the trains, and the trains were parked that night and did not enter the road again until daylight the next morning, showing that the road was open. Colonel Clary swears that the railroad cars had been run behind Cedar Run by two o'clock, leaving the roads both open and the railroad also. Hence that excuse falls to the ground.

Next I desire to call the attention of the Senate to a suggestion that was made by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. RANDOLPH] that Mr. Lincoln himself repented having approved the judgment of the court-martial and would probably have done something on the subject but for his death. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from New Jersey who made this statement to pages 853, 854, and 855, volume 2, of the board report.

Robert T. Lincoln, the son of President Lincoln, was called and sworn before this board. He was asked this question:

Q. You may state what that was—

Speaking of a conversation—

What statement he made bearing on that point.

Referring to his father this is his answer:

A. He gave me some account of the case as it presented itself to him, and either read to me or quoted to me, I don't recollect which, a note written by General Porter, as I recollect, to General McDowell. I never saw the note until this morning, so I give my recollection of it. My recollection is better than anything else. My recollection of the contents of the note is that it was in substance this, that General Porter wrote to General McDowell that he judged by the sound of the firing that our troops were beaten, and that he should therefore withdraw his corps from the field.

That is the very note you have in discussion now, that was never known before, you say, although it was before the court-martial, and I will produce it before this case is finished.

That is my recollection of the contents of the note as given me then. My father was exceedingly urgent or strong in his condemnation.

By the RECORDER:

Q. As to the spirit of this note what did he say?

A. I recollect one distinct remark that he made, but at what period in the conversation I do not now recollect. He said that the case would have justified, in his opinion, a sentence of death.

That was the language of President Lincoln before his own son, sworn to before this board called for the purpose of examining into all the facts.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The Senator from Illinois has twice, I think, made a statement; I scarcely know how to characterize it—

Mr. LOGAN. What statement do you mean?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I will let you know, sir.

Mr. LOGAN. Well, sir, I should like to know by what authority—

Mr. RANDOLPH. I say this, sir: whether the Senator intended or not to do so, he certainly did make a statement that I apprehend left the impression upon the minds of some persons that my statement with reference to the proposed action of President Lincoln was an incorrect one.

Mr. LOGAN. Why, Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me—

Mr. RANDOLPH. Certainly.

Mr. LOGAN. I intended no such reflection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Then he—

Mr. LOGAN. Allow me to finish the sentence. So far as the Senator himself is concerned I meant no such reflection. I was speaking of the statement of the Senator that he made in his speech; and I understood him to base that upon the statement of some person—I afterward ascertained whom by reading the testimony—a gentleman in New Jersey; it is not necessary to mention his name. I only now read the evidence of Mr. Lincoln's son, not in refutation of the statement of the Senator himself, but in refutation of the statement that has been made in this particular instance. That is all.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Now, sir, in order to clear this whole matter up, the Senator from Illinois having disavowed—and I am very glad he has—any personal imputation upon myself—

Mr. LOGAN. I have no desire to cast any reflection upon the Senator. I only speak of the statement he made based upon what he understood to be testimony. That is all. Now, if the Senator will allow me—

Mr. RANDOLPH. One moment.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well.

Mr. RANDOLPH. On page 318, part 2, will be found conclusive testimony that my statement as to what Mr. Lincoln before his death did say to Governor Newell, of New Jersey, was a correct one, and this is the testimony—

Mr. LOGAN. I know.

Mr. RANDOLPH. That he proposed to reopen this case; and the testimony, which should be read here and now, is to this effect:

WILLIAM A. NEWELL was then called on behalf of the petitioner, and, being duly sworn, was examined, and testified as follows:

Direct examination by Mr. CHOATE:

Question. Where do you reside?

Answer. Allentown.

Q. You were governor of New Jersey at what period?

A. 1856 to 1860.

Q. You were acquainted with the late President Lincoln. What were your relations with him?

A. I knew him in Congress in 1846 to 1850; I knew him subsequently during his administration as President, and had also, I may say, intimate personal relations with him.

Q. Did you make any application to him in respect to the case of General Porter? If so, at whose suggestion, and when?

A. At the suggestion of Governor Randolph, who, I think, at that time was governor of our State—

That is a mistake. I was not governor at that time—but subsequently—and probably other gentlemen whose names I do not now recollect. I am not positive as to the date; I think it was in 1864, the latter part of the year.

Q. Where was this application and interview?

A. In his office at the White House.

Q. A personal interview between you and him?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you state what he said?

The RECORDER said: I would like to know the purpose of this examination. Mr. CHOATE. It is to show a statement of President Lincoln, that, in approving the action of the court-martial, he did it without an examination of the evidence, relying upon the statement that had been prepared for him for the purpose by the Judge-Advocate-General.

The RECORDER. I submit to the board that that is not proper under the circumstances. We have the official record of President Lincoln's action over his own signature. That is the best evidence in the premises.

A discussion hereupon occurred between the recorder and Mr. Choate regarding the matter, which at this late hour I omit. I proceed with the evidence of Governor Newell—

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator will allow me, there is no controversy between him and me as to the statement of Mr. Newell.

Mr. RANDOLPH. One moment. I shall omit, as I have said, the discussion between counsel and the decision of the board admitting the evidence, occupying a page or two, in order to come to the very pith and marrow of this whole business:

Governor Newell, being examined by Mr. Choate, testified as follows:

Q. Please state the conversation that you had with President Lincoln upon the subject of your application.

A. I stated to the President that I had called at the solicitation of friends of General Porter in our State to say that in their judgment the finding of the court was very severe; and that in view of new evidence being in possession of General Porter we desired to have the case reopened in order that he might be reinstated or the sentence revoked. Mr. Lincoln stated that he had not been able to give that personal attention to the case which its merits required; that he had accepted the opinion of the Judge-Advocate-General and of the War Department as the basis of his action; that if any new evidence exculpatory of General Porter could be introduced he would be very glad to give him an opportunity to have it presented; that he had had a high regard for General Porter personally and as a soldier, and that he hoped that he would be able to vindicate himself in that way. I had at least two conversations with the President on that subject, the import of which I have given you. I do not recollect the precise language; but it made a special impression upon my mind at the time, and my recollection has been fortified by a letter which I wrote to Governor Randolph, and which reminds me of this particularly.

Q. Did you hold any official position at that time?
 A. I think I was a member of Congress elect at the time of that conversation.
 Q. Your personal and political relations with the President were what?
 A. Very intimate and friendly.
 Q. Had you any relation with General Porter?
 A. I have never seen the general but twice. I would not have known him ten days ago if I had met him in the street.

Then on the cross-examination—

Mr. LOGAN. Now does the Senator desire to read all that?

Mr. RANDOLPH. A word or two more, sir, and I shall have finished this controversy:

Cross-examination by the RECORDER:

Q. Did the President at that time say that he had not read any of the evidence?
 A. No, sir; he said he had not been able to give it that particular attention which the matter required. He accepted the opinion of the War Department and the Judge-Advocate-General.
 Q. You don't know whether he had read the case himself?
 A. I do not. I am under the impression, from the manner of his conversation, that he had not investigated it as a lawyer.
 Q. When did you hold these conversations with him?
 A. It must have been in 1864, the latter part of the year.
 Q. Each of them?
 A. They were close to each other. I saw him twice, if not oftener. I was frequently in Washington as that time as member of Congress and private citizen.
 Q. Did he at that time state what kind of newly discovered evidence or explanatory evidence he desired?
 A. No, sir; he made no inquiry about that. I didn't know anything about that myself. I recollect his saying distinctly, and his manner of putting it at the time, that if there was any evidence that General Porter could bring to change the aspect of the case he would be glad to have it done. I recollect perfectly his particular expression at that time—I recollect that more than anything else—that if there was anything that could be brought out, he hoped it would be done.
 The examination of the witness was here closed.

Mr. LOGAN. Now is the Senator through?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Yes, as to this particular matter.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will at least accord to me great consideration for him, for on two or three occasions when I have given way to him I have myself come to the conclusion that he was going to read the whole volume, but he has desisted now and has not read it all.

Mr. RANDOLPH. If I could only see in print the Senator's speech, now a week or—

Mr. LOGAN. I will certainly sit down until the Senator is through, and when he is through I will proceed. I have seen gentlemen before who became very nervous. I do not usually get nervous myself, and I have not been very much so in this case; and I think I have taken it very coolly and very calmly; but I will say this, I presented the evidence of President Lincoln's only son, a lawyer in Chicago, and a very eminent lawyer, too, for his age, to show that Mr. Lincoln believed this man ought to have been punished by a sentence of death, thereby showing that he could not have said what this witness says he understood him to have said.

Mr. RANDOLPH. No, sir; what he, President Lincoln, did say.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator is not now a witness. He will allow me to give my conclusions, if he pleases.

That is all that I presented that for, not that it cuts any figure in the world in this case. We are the judges. Mr. Lincoln is dead and gone. It is not for him to act, nor would his views, perhaps, have any considerable influence on this case with the evidence that is now before the Senate. But the point I desire to direct the attention of the Senate to in the remarks of the Senator from Indiana yesterday is this: He undertook to explain from a map that by Fitz-John Porter's feeling over to the right, as we would call it in military parlance, at the time he was at Dawkins Branch, when McDowell left him, he would afterward have connected with the troops by a direct line to his right. I desire to correct that, because I am sure the Senator did not understand the position of the troops, and took the map of the positions at six o'clock, as I understand, and undertook to show that Fitz-John Porter could not have made the march in the direction that he was expected to go under the order.

Now, I have a map here, and I have not only the map of the War Department but one made by this board, showing the exact position of the troops at two o'clock. The position of the troops, according to General Jackson's report and the report of all the officers, was this: General Jackson formed his men over here [indicating] behind the new-cut railroad, as any one will see; he says so himself in his report. Our line was formed here in his front, [indicating.] Our line passed Groveton and up this pike road to the left of four divisions, so that the line of Jackson was from Sudley Springs in the direction of Gainesville, his right resting not on the Gainesville pike but on a road running to and connecting with it and on the railroad. Longstreet coming in to the left on the Warrenton pike from Gainesville and forming there on Jackson's left made the line extend over to the Manassas Gap Railroad. That would be the line, [indicating.]

Fitz-John Porter in moving off to the right would not have closed on our left at all, but his right would have extended to our center. To have moved and struck our left and formed that line [indicating] he would have had to go at least two miles beyond Dawkins Branch and thrown his right here, [indicating,] and that would have formed a line across in this direction, [indicating,] showing that our right rested up by Sudley Springs, opposite Jackson's right, and our left down toward Gainesville, in opposition to the left of Longstreet. That would have been the position. Any military man, I care not who he is, who will examine these maps will understand me in a moment. I do not say that my friend from Indiana is not a good military man, but I do say that he misunderstood the position of the troops, and he did not explain it so as to make it satisfactory to any one who was listening to him and who understands the position the troops occupied at that time.

At the very time that the Senator from Indiana was speaking about it being an impossibility for Porter to obey that order I asserted, as I do now, (and the evidence shows it,) that there was not one solitary infantry soldier in his front—nothing but Robertson's and a portion of Stuart's cavalry; and the expectation of Pope was that he should move on this road, [indicating,] throw his right in there, [indicating,] and connect with our left. The maps that have been used all the time for the purpose of showing that Porter could not comply with the order are maps showing the positions at six o'clock. Schenck occupied these woods right up here [indicating] at two o'clock—he so swore and so do other witnesses; right up here where our left rested; then two of our batteries were there, [indicating,] and two of Longstreet's batteries were here, [indicating,] at six o'clock and afterward, when Reynolds and Schenck had withdrawn back to this line, [indicating,] our forces formed a line in this direction, [indicating,] So you can see that from the time the battle commenced early in the morning until our troops crossed they first drove a portion of Jackson's army back and pressed them further in here, [indicating,] afterward, later, Jackson's forces, aided by Longstreet's three divisions on Jackson's right, drove our left back, threw it back into this position, [indicating,] So it threw a portion of these troops up here, [indicating,] That is exactly the state of the case and exactly the evidence.

I have no disposition to deceive anybody. I want to state the case just as it is. Fitz-John Porter, to have complied with that order, even at twelve o'clock or at two o'clock at the time he was moving from Gainesville or forming his line, would have had to move two miles beyond Dawkins Branch.

I wanted to explain that, so that we should all understand the facts in reference to the position of the troops. Now I wish to call the attention of the Senate, for one moment only, to another matter. I am not going to repeat one scintilla of the evidence I have used heretofore; and there is a great deal more testimony that I have not had time to cite, but I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Indiana, for he failed to read it, to the evidence of Mr. Bond.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The Senator will observe that the Senator from Indiana is not in his seat.

Mr. LOGAN. I observe that.

Mr. RANDOLPH. And he is not coming back to the Chamber today.

Mr. LOGAN. I call the attention of the Senate. I am not certainly compelled to stop.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I can only remind the gentleman that the Senator to whom he proposes to address himself in reply is not here.

Mr. LOGAN. I will say to the Senator that he is here himself, and I will direct it to the Senate and not to the Senator from Indiana. This is for the Senate. Now, I will read a portion of the testimony of Mr. John Bond. He says this, speaking of Fitz-John Porter about one or two o'clock:

Q. What did you then do?

A. I then retired to Manassas Junction.

Q. Where did you come to a stop?

A. I first met a lot of troops, and I met a group of officers; one of them said, "Where from, sergeant?"

Mr. EATON. What day?

Mr. LOGAN. The 29th. This witness in speaking of his retirement and the retirement of others—I will give substantially what he says—speaks of retiring from that place to Manassas Junction. I have not time to read the evidence and will not detain the Senate, but they will find by reading through this testimony that the witness says that Porter said that he did not care a damn whether his troops got there or not. Now, following that up, I take the evidence of General Mosby who was on the other side, and General Mosby sustains—

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will the Senator allow me? I state before the Senate to-day from my knowledge of General Porter that he never uttered that profane word.

Mr. LOGAN. Oh, well; the Senator need not get excited. I am reading the testimony.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I am not at all excited; but, sir—

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator will allow me to read the testimony, I suppose. Why, Mr. President, every witness that swears here against Mr. Porter, according to the Senator's ideas, must be a liar.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Not at all; I make no such assertion—

Mr. LOGAN. General Mosby, who was then in the confederate service, (and I have his evidence right here, and the Senator will find it on page 842,) sustains every position that I have taken in reference to these troops from beginning to end. I have the names of some seven or eight other witnesses whom I did not call the attention of the Senate to, but I intend to do so if necessary. I do not think it will be, however.

I do not intend to discuss this question more extensively than I have done, except to meet certain points as they come up, if I may be permitted to do it. Now, I say that the evidence does show, and I have it here sworn to in this volume by five witnesses; by General Morell, by Porter's own adjutant-general, by two captains, and by a witness who stands here to-day an honorable man, that this order was received. These witnesses saw Porter receive it. It was sent to General Morell. General Morell swears that the sun was up at the tops of the trees at the time he received the order to attack, showing that the statement that Porter did not receive the 4.30 order of Pope is not borne out by the testimony of his own witnesses. These are facts that cannot be controverted.

Further, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that it is Fitz-John Porter who is on trial here, not General Pope, not General McDowell, and not the court-martial that tried him. The Senator from Indiana spoke of two of the members of that court-martial, Generals King and Ricketts. I know both of those men well. A braver man does not live to-day than General King. General Ricketts is a man who was shot all to pieces and who is upon the retired list on account of his wounds. These men must be denounced here in order to sustain Porter. Why, sir, I did not suppose it was necessary to denounce any honorable man in order to sustain him. I desire to say in answer to that accusation that Fitz-John Porter was tried by a court of which General Hunter was president, one of his own personal and intimate friends.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I declare now, with a full knowledge of the facts, that General Hunter was not. I say it with respect as to the assertion, but he was not the intimate personal friend of General Porter.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well; the Senator can say that. Then I say if the Senator disputes that, I have been told so. I have no knowledge of the fact; but General Hunter is as honorable, as high-minded, and as dignified a soldier as is the Senator an honorable Senator from New Jersey; he is a man of as much reputation to-day as any Senator on this floor, and as good a man.

Mr. EATON. That is out of order.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well, sir, if I am, call me to order. More than that; General Hitchcock was on this court-martial. Will the Senator deny that he was a personal friend of General Porter?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, I say as to the gentlemen who were members of the court-martial that General Porter made his protest before them. After having entered his protest upon certain points concerning the composition of the court, his trial proceeded, and I say now that he personally is probably precluded from criticising that court in the respects that the Senator has mentioned. The Senator has spoken of Generals Ricketts and King. I have reason also for desiring to speak of those gentlemen with respect; and when I spoke of Generals Ricketts and King, or rather of two officers—for I did not name them by name—

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator from Indiana was the one who named them. I was referring to his remarks.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I was constrained to refer to them, though not by name, in order to show that the court-martial was a body that could not, even with the best and most honest purposes, sit fairly upon the General Porter case, because two of the gentlemen composing it had themselves been incidentally concerned in the matters in controversy, and one of the two, General King, had been constrained to go from the bench to the witness-stand and then return to the bench. That is what I said.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well. I only say that a case which has to be sustained by denunciation of other parties is a very bad case.

Now, I desire to answer right here the statement that the Senator from Indiana made yesterday, that General King was one of the actors on the 29th. The Senator said yesterday he would show that he was. The dispatches of General Porter were directed to McDowell and King, because he did not know who commanded King's division; that was the only reason. King on the 29th was not in command of the troops and General Hatch was, and the evidence shows it. So there is an error there.

Again following that court-martial that has been assailed here in the Senate Chamber from the time this case commenced, take them all, each and every one, and they are honorable men. Mr. GARFIELD, who has recently been elected to the United States Senate to take his seat by the side of the Senator from New Jersey, was a member of that court, as able a man as either of the gentlemen who have advocated Fitz-John Porter, and I think equally as honorable. Certainly he was a soldier, and neither of these Senators was. Sir, it will not do to assail every man in connection with this case in order to bolster up the reputation of the officer who was tried and sentenced.

Following up the assault on the court-martial, the attack is continued upon General Pope and upon General McDowell, and all the blame is to be laid upon them in order that this man shall escape from the punishment inflicted on him by the judgment of the court-martial. Sir, that is begging the question. The questions to be decided are, first, on the law, whether Congress has the right to do this; next, if it has the right, does the testimony justify the doing of it? On these propositions and principles should this case be decided, and on none other. But the very moment that you assail every man connected with the case, that moment you admit you have no chance unless you can break down parties that are not before you and are not passing under your judgment.

This much, sir, I desired to say, no more, for I have occupied the time of the Senate longer than I should have done, but merely to correct the statement in reference to this map and in reference to the position of these troops. With that statement and reply to what has been said in reference to the attacks or assaults that have been made upon these men, I have accomplished all that I desire to do.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Before the Senator from Illinois takes his seat may I ask one question?

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly; a dozen if you desire.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I presume he admits that General Schofield, General Terry, and General Getty are at least the equals of any other three gentlemen in the military service in honesty, loyalty, and in intelligence; and these three generals declare in substance in their finding in this case that General Longstreet and his force was in front of General Porter from twelve o'clock on the 29th of August all through that afternoon. Now, the Senator from Illinois has said—

Mr. LOGAN. You rose to ask me a question.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I rose to put a question, and I propose to state it in my own way. The Senator from Illinois has stated repeatedly, I think quite erroneously, that during the whole of the afternoon of the 29th, that debated afternoon, General Longstreet was not in front of General Porter. Now, Mr. President, we all see that this is a very, very important point, because if General Longstreet was not there then Porter's duty under the joint order was of an entirely different character from that performed. Now, sir, I ask the Senator from Illinois once more whether he asserts, in the face of the assertions and finding of Generals Schofield, Terry, and Getty that Longstreet was there, that he was not?

Mr. LOGAN. Now I will answer the question. I assert that Longstreet was not on the road leading from Manassas to Gainesville, and no part of his command was there except his cavalry up to six o'clock in the evening. Not only that, but I assert that though you may find fragments from some witness to sustain that view, taking the whole testimony together, it proves exactly what I say and exactly what I have shown by the map before me. Not only that, I now, since the Senator has asked me the question, will answer him in this way: I say taking into consideration the high character of that board which the Senator gives to them, if they are honorable men, if they are learned men, if they are just men, may God give me the power to understand this case as they do, if they are honest men. I say no honest man, unless he is deceived, can report as this board has reported that these twenty-five thousand men were in front of Fitz-John Porter or that any portion of them were. I say that the board in making that report make a report not based upon the testimony, not based upon the facts, but they make a report in accordance with the argument of counsel and not in accordance with the testimony. I assert that, sir.

More than that, when you call my attention to these gentlemen, I know them as well as you do. Of course, they are honorable men; but no more honorable than other men who stand high; no more honorable than was President Lincoln; no more honorable than the nine men, sworn judges, who convicted Fitz-John Porter on sworn testimony.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Partial testimony.

Mr. LOGAN. Testimony of the same character as that brought before this board, a board of unauthorized men, unsworn officers as they say themselves, and they trample under their feet the judgment of nine men, and you try to set them up as more honorable than anybody else! Why, sir, let me say to the Senator that I claim nothing because I am a Senator; I claim nothing because I have been a soldier; but when you undertake to put the judgment of these men over and above the judgment of other men that are equally as honorable, it is not justified. I speak not of myself, but there are men here who agree with me that were just as good soldiers as those men were; and when you undertake by a board of three unsworn men to ride down the judgment of lawyers and military men as honest as they are, I say it is far-fetched to talk about their honor. Honor, sir! We are all supposed to have honor until the contrary appears. But if I were to hunt for honor, and for honorable proceedings based upon testimony and law, I would not search in that report to find it.

Mr. JONES, of Florida, obtained the floor.

Mr. GARLAND. Will the Senator from Florida yield to me for a moment to offer a resolution in connection with this matter? I recognize the fact that he has the floor.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Certainly.

Mr. GARLAND. I offer the following:

The bill for the relief of Fitz-John Porter involving many intricate questions as to the jurisdiction and power of courts under the Constitution and laws of the United States, and being a purely judicial or legal question,
Resolved, That the bill, with all the accompanying papers and the whole subject-matter, be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary for examination, to report by bill or otherwise.

I yield the floor, of course, to the Senator from Florida, and shall give my reasons for that resolution at the proper time.

Mr. RANDOLPH. May I be allowed to say a word? I do trust that this subject which has proceeded so far and is now so fully before the Senate may not have a reference to any committee whatever.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Mr. President—

Mr. WALLACE. The Senator from Florida yielding the floor to me, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-nine minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at four o'clock and fifty-five minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, March 10, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

INTEROCEANIC CANAL.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask unanimous consent to introduce now a joint resolution which I propose, if the opportunity is offered to me, to present as a substitute for the resolution of the Committee on the Inter-oceanic Canal.

Mr. PAGE. I object.

Mr. BURROWS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry, and that is whether under Rule XXIV anything is in order after the reading of the Journal except the regular order?

The SPEAKER. By unanimous consent these matters may be presented.

Mr. BURROWS. Does not unanimous consent suspend the rules?

The SPEAKER. It is equivalent to a suspension of the rules; but anything can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. BURROWS. The third clause of that rule provides, however, the regular order shall not be dispensed with except by a two-thirds vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will examine that point and determine it when it comes up. He is obliged to the gentleman for having called his attention to it.

Mr. REAGAN. All I ask is this may be printed in the RECORD. It will not hurt any one to read it. It takes a different view and I want, if I can get the opportunity, to offer it as an amendment. I do not wish to do so without giving members an opportunity, in the first place, of knowing what it is.

Mr. PAGE. I have no objection to having it read for information.

Mr. REAGAN. That is all I ask.

Mr. PAGE. But not that it shall be considered as pending as a substitute.

Mr. REAGAN. No, sir; I do not propose that.

The SPEAKER. The subject is not before the House.

Mr. REAGAN. I only ask to have it read and printed in the RECORD so that it may be known what it is when it comes up hereafter to be offered as a substitute.

Mr. PAGE. Then I withdraw my objection to its being read.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That while we recognize the general interest of the whole commercial world in the use of a ship-canal or railroad across the isthmus connecting North and South America, and while we will respect that interest if such a line of inter-oceanic communication shall be established, we declare that as the establishment of such a line of communication would practically connect and make continuous the Atlantic and Mexican Gulf and Pacific coast lines of the United States, and as the United States would have a great local, as well as a general, interest in this work in common with the other commercial powers of the earth, and as the political control of such a line of communication would be vitally necessary to her commercial interests and to the preservation of her territorial integrity and political independence, we will insist, whenever and by whomsoever such a project shall be commenced, on such political control of it as will give security to our commercial and political interests.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. KENNA, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (S. No. 474) for the relief of William McGovern; when the Speaker signed the same.

WEAVER BILL.

Mr. WEAVER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WEAVER. I hold in my hand the petition of John Miller and 88 others, of Iowa County, State of Iowa, praying this House to take a ye-a-and-nay vote on the "resolutions introduced by Mr. WEAVER and printed in the RECORD of the 27th of February." To what committee does this belong?

The SPEAKER. It belongs to the committee to which the proposition went.

Mr. WEAVER. The proposition has not gone to any committee. I have been seeking recognition for a long time for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can select the proper committee and have it referred through the petition-box.

Mr. WEAVER. I will refer it to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, if there be no objection.

The SPEAKER. The petition is not before the House for that reference. The rules provide for the reference of petitions and prescribe the manner in which they shall be referred. This, of course, must conform to the rules.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. McLANE. I move to dispense with the morning hour to-day in order, if possible, to dispose of the pending bill in the House.

Mr. GOODE. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The question will be taken upon the motion of the gentleman from Maryland to dispense with the morning hour.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 93, noes 54.

Mr. McLANE demanded tellers.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I would like to have the House understand the object of this motion.

Mr. McLANE. The object of it is to give one more hour for debate on the pending bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposed the object of the gentleman was to give an additional hour to debate.

Mr. WARNER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WARNER. I desire to know whether under Rule XXXVIII the rules can be suspended.

The SPEAKER. The rules provide that the morning hour can be dispensed with by a two-thirds vote.

Mr. McLANE. I renew the demand for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. McLANE and Mr. BURROWS were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 108, noes 55.

So (two-thirds not voting in favor thereof) the motion to dispense with the morning hour was not agreed to.

Mr. HAYES. I call for the regular order.

Mr. CONGER. I move to reconsider the vote by which the morning hour was not dispensed with; and also that that motion be laid upon the table.

Mr. HOOKER. It is not necessary to make that motion. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. It is not usual to move a reconsideration of a vote requiring two-thirds.

Mr. WILSON. Can I be allowed unanimous consent to introduce a bill for reference?

Mr. HAYES. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being demanded, the morning hour begins at thirty-five minutes past twelve o'clock.

Mr. HAZELTON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to ask in reference to this point: On the 23th of February, when the House had under consideration Rule XXIV, the question came up—

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HAZELTON. I will come to the parliamentary inquiry directly.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest that the gentleman reserve it until after the morning hour. The Chair does not want the morning hour destroyed in this way.

Mr. HAZELTON. I will ask to be recognized after the morning hour.

JOHN B. SLACK.

Mr. WHITTHORNE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back, with an adverse recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 875) for the relief of John B. Slack; and the same was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JESSE DURNELL.

Mr. WHITTHORNE also, from the same committee, reported back, with an adverse recommendation, the petition of Jesse Durnell, second-class pilot of the United States Mississippi squadron; and the same was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

J. H. MERRILL.

Mr. WHITTHORNE also, from the same committee, reported back, with an adverse recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 1356) for the relief of J. H. Merrill; and the same was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

COLLISIONS ON THE WATER.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I am also instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to report back the bill (H. R. No. 4430) to provide a commission for the examination of existing and proposed rules for preventing collisions on the water, and for framing such rules as shall be in consonance with and in furtherance of the interests of international law, accompanied by a report in writing and a letter from the Secretary of the Navy. I move that the bill and report and letter of the Secretary of the Navy be printed and recommitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. CONGER. Does that bill relate to the merchant-marine service?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. If the gentleman from Michigan will allow me I will state that the bill has reference to the framing of a code of rules for the government of United States vessels on the high seas as well as of the marine or coast service. The object of the bill is to harmonize the rules for both. I ask that the bill be recommitted, and the accompanying report and executive document printed, so that the Committee on Commerce and the Committee on Naval Affairs may consider the matter together.

The SPEAKER. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. CONGER. The point is whether the bill should be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs or the Committee on Commerce, which has charge of all subjects connected with the merchant marine.

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Naval Affairs already have this subject-matter before them, and all they ask is that the bill and report be printed and recommitted.

Mr. CONGER. This is the first opportunity we have of telling whether this matter is properly in the hands of the Committee on Naval Affairs or not.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I will state to the gentleman from Michigan that there is harmony between the chairman of the Committee on Commerce and myself in this matter.

Mr. CONGER. Very well.

The bill and accompanying reports and executive document were recommended to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MRS. AGNES E. FRY.

Mr. WHITTHORNE also, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 495) for the relief of Mrs. Agnes E. Fry, widow of Joseph Fry; and the same was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

DOUBLE-TURRETED MONITORS.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I am also instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to report a joint resolution in response to so much of the President's message and accompanying documents as refers to the condition of the double-turreted monitors now in course of construction. If it be in order, I ask for the present consideration of the joint resolution. It directs the Secretary of the Navy to organize a board, and that board to report back this information to Congress, the information being deemed material in the consideration of bills pending before the committee and the House.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, directed to organize a board, to consist of not less than five nor more than seven officers of the United States Navy, selected at his discretion from the active and retired list, none of whom shall be of a lower grade than captain, which board shall be organized immediately after the passage of this resolution, and shall be charged with the duty of thoroughly examining in person the double-turreted monitors, with a view of determining, first, whether it is to the interest of the Government to complete said vessels, to wit, the Puritan, the Monadnock, the Amphitrite, and the Terror; second, if so, whether it is to the interest of the Government to complete them according to the existing plans, models, and agreements; third, if any change is demanded in order to make said vessels more efficient as war vessels; to inquire into the extent and character as well as cost of such modifications, and also inquire into any other fact material to each of these questions; and of all which they will make report to the Secretary of the Navy, who shall at once transmit the same, with his opinions thereon, to Congress.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee, by instruction of the Committee on Naval Affairs, asks unanimous consent that the joint resolution which has just been read be considered at this time. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and the joint resolution (H. R. No. 237) directing the Secretary of the Navy to organize a board to inquire into the present condition of the double-turreted monitors and the propriety and cost of completing said vessels, &c., was read three times and passed.

SOLICITOR AND JUDGE-ADVOCATE-GENERAL.

Mr. GOODE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 2788) to authorize the President to detail an officer of the Navy or the Marine Corps to perform the duties of solicitor and judge-advocate-general, &c., and to fix the rank and pay of such officer; and the same was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

DOCKAGE OF PRIVATE VESSELS AT NAVY-YARDS.

Mr. GOODE. I am instructed also by the Committee on Naval Affairs to report back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 4787) to provide for excepting from the provisions of section 3617 of the Revised Statutes of the United States the proceeds from dockage of private vessels at the several navy-yards of the United States. I move that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and that the accompanying report be printed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests that this bill has the right to be placed on the House Calendar.

Mr. GOODE. It involves indirectly an appropriation of money, as it may take money from appropriations made under existing law.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

CAPTORS OF THE RAM ALBEMARLE.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 3489, for the relief of the captors of the ram Albemarle, a bill (H. R. No. 5045) to refer the claims of the captors of the ram Albemarle to the Court of Claims; which was read a first and second time, with the accompanying report ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

MOVABLE TORPEDOES.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts, also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 5046) to provide for experiments in movable torpedoes; which was read a first and second time, with the accompanying report ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PROFESSORS OF LANGUAGES AND DRAWING IN NAVAL ACADEMY.

Mr. BREWER, from the same committee, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. No. 231) to establish upon a permanent footing the professorships of modern languages and of drawing at the United States Naval Academy.

The SPEAKER. To which Calendar does the gentleman desire to have this bill referred?

Mr. BREWER. To the House Calendar.

Mr. GARFIELD. When the Calendar shall be reached, suppose it is found that a point of order would lie against this bill?

The SPEAKER. Any time before the actual consideration of a bill a point of order would lie against it under the very terms and language of the new rule.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. In view of that intimation, though the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. BREWER,] and probably the Committee on Naval Affairs, might agree that the bill reduced expenditures rather than increased them, as there may be a technical objection to the bill, I ask my colleague on the committee to consent that it may be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. BREWER. I have no objection to that reference.

The bill, with amendments, was accordingly referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

PROFESSORS OF MATHEMATICS IN THE NAVY.

Mr. BREWER, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 672, a bill (H. R. No. 5047) relating to the appointment of professors of mathematics in the Navy; which was read a first and second time, with the accompanying report ordered to be printed, and referred to the House Calendar.

SUFFERING POOR IN IRELAND.

Mr. COX, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, to whom had been referred a joint resolution (H. R. No. 140) expressing sympathy for the sufferings of the Irish people and for their attempt to secure the blessings of self-government; a joint resolution (H. R. No. 141) expressing sympathy for the Irish, and asking the President to urge upon the English government measures for their relief from landlord rule; a joint resolution (H. R. No. 193) providing national aid for the relief of the suffering poor in Ireland, and making an appropriation therefor; and the memorial of the Saint Paul Chamber of Commerce in behalf of an appropriation for the people of Ireland, reported the same back, together with a joint resolution as a substitute therefor (H. R. No. 238) providing national aid for the relief of the suffering poor of Ireland, and making an appropriation therefor; which was read a first and second time, with the accompanying report ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. COX. I ask that the minority of the committee, if they shall see proper to do so, be given leave to submit at any time the views of that minority in writing, to be printed with the report of the majority.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR OFFICERS.

Mr. KING, from the same committee, reported back, with amendments, the bill (H. R. No. 4675) to provide for the payment of diplomatic and consular officers while in the United States under orders from the State Department.

The SPEAKER. Is there a written report accompanying this bill?

Mr. KING. There is not.

The SPEAKER. The new rule requires that there should be one.

Mr. COX. I ask that the gentleman have leave to file a report during to-day.

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent can be given to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. KING] to file a report on this bill to-day. The new rule, which the gentleman probably has overlooked, requires that there shall be a written report to accompany each bill reported from a committee.

There was no objection.

The bill and amendments were referred to the House Calendar, and the report when filed ordered to be printed.

TONNAGE DUTIES.

Mr. RICE. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to report back with amendments the joint resolution (H. R. No. 96) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to make final adjustment of the claims of certain foreign steamship companies arising from the illegal exaction of tonnage duties, with a report, accompanied by the views of the minority of the committee. I move that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and that the report of the majority, together with the views of the minority, be printed.

Mr. CONGER. This bill relates to public laws or to public treaties, and should be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. RICE. I have no preference as to which Calendar it shall go to, but the claim grows out of acts in contravention of public treaties.

Mr. CONGER. Although it may be for the benefit of these particular steamship companies, it modifies the general law.

Mr. COX. It is not a public bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill seems to be for the benefit of private individuals. The Chair does not think it changes any treaty stipulation; in fact it could not do that.

Mr. COX. It proposes to refund certain moneys to steamship companies.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised that a similar bill in the last Congress was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. CONGER. I understand that it is to relieve certain vessels from the operation of certain provisions of law through the intervention of treaty stipulation.

Mr. RICE. Not at all.

Mr. CONGER. Then I am mistaken.

Mr. COX. It is to pay certain claims of steamship companies for illegal tonnage duties exacted of them.

The joint resolution was accordingly referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report, with the views of the minority, ordered to be printed.

RAILROAD BONDS OF YANKTON, DAKOTA.

Mr. MULBROW, from the Committee on the Territories, reported back a bill of the following title; when the committee was discharged from the further consideration of the same, and it was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

A bill (H. R. No. 3513) legalizing the election held in the city of Yankton, Territory of Dakota, at which the proposition to issue the bonds of said city in aid of the construction of a certain railroad was submitted, and authorizing and directing the issuance of said bonds pursuant to said election.

TERRITORIAL PRISON, IDAHO TERRITORY.

Mr. MARTIN, of West Virginia, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 3717) relating to convicts in the territorial prison of Idaho Territory; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

SESSIONS OF TERRITORIAL LEGISLATURES.

Mr. HUMPHREY, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 1760) amending section 1852 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM OF MONTANA.

Mr. BOUCK, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 1319) to reorganize the judicial system of the Territory of Montana; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

CARE OF CRIMINALS IN THE TERRITORIES.

Mr. BOUCK, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 3932) to authorize the Legislative Assemblies of the Territories to provide for the care and custody of criminals; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

TERRITORIAL JUSTICES OF THE PEACE.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Illinois, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 2157) amending sections 1926 and 1927 of the Revised Statutes so as to extend the limits of the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in the Territories of Washington, Idaho, and Montana; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. YOUNG, of Ohio, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 3004, a bill (H. R. No. 5048) relating to justices of the peace in the Territories; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and ordered to be printed, together with the accompanying report and the original bill.

REMOVAL OF INDIANS TO INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 2674) to prohibit the removal of Indians from the States or other territory of the United States to the Indian Territory; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

TERRITORIAL PRISON, YUMA, ARIZONA.

Mr. CRAVENS also, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 3474) making appropriation for the completion of the territorial prison at Yuma, in the Territory of Arizona; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JUDICIAL COMPENSATION—DAKOTA TERRITORY.

Mr. CRAVENS also, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 3224, a bill (H. R. No. 5049) providing additional compensation to the judge of the first judicial district of the Territory of Dakota, to be paid by the counties composing said district; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. CRAVENS. I ask that this bill be referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report printed.

The SPEAKER. If any additional compensation is to be paid out of the Treasury the bill must go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CRAVENS. The bill does not provide for any payment by the Government of the United States, but only by the counties composing the judicial district.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report printed.

WIDOWS OF SOLDIERS OF WAR OF 1812.

Mr. WHITEAKER, from the Committee on Pensions, (Committee on Revolutionary Pensions under the former rules), reported back adversely the joint resolution (H. R. No. 39) construing act of Congress approved March 9, 1878, so as to entitle widows of the soldiers of the war of 1812 to a pension notwithstanding a second marriage, provided they were widows at the date of said act or at the time of application; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Subsequently,

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, asked unanimous consent that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

ANN ATKINSON.

Mr. BLAND, from the Committee on Pensions, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 3406) granting a pension to Ann Atkinson, of Washington, District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

MORRIS L. FARRINGTON.

Mr. BLAND, from the same committee, reported back adversely the petition of Morris L. Farrington for his father's back pay as an invalid pensioner of the war of 1812; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

PENSIONERS UNDER ACT OF MARCH 9, 1878.

Mr. DIBRELL. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions to report back, with an amendment, a bill (H. R. No. 703) to prevent the withholding of pensions from pensioners under the act of March 9, 1878. This bill was reported at the extra session, and upon the point being made that it was a public bill it went over. This is the first opportunity we have had since to report it. It is for the benefit of soldiers who were dropped from the pension-roll on the charge of disloyalty under the act of 1871. There are only a few of them; and I hope there will be no objection to the present consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that this bill be considered at the present time.

Mr. CONGER. Does this bill restore Jeff. Davis to the right to a pension?

Mr. DIBRELL. Jefferson Davis is not a pensioner.

Mr. CONGER. Does it restore his right to a pension?

Mr. DIBRELL. It applies to soldiers of the war of 1812. He was not in that war, I believe. If the report is read I think there will be no objection.

Mr. CONGER. I guess the bill had better be considered in the regular way.

Mr. DIBRELL. If the gentleman wants to show his malice toward the southern people, he should not make it apply to the soldiers of the war of 1812.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman has just made a remark which, if the reporters took it down, I desire to characterize as unworthy of him or the occasion.

Mr. DIBRELL. I am responsible for all I say, here or elsewhere.

Mr. CONGER. "Elsewhere" is good.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

MRS. LIZZIE M. MITCHELL.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. No. 4220) granting a pension to Mrs. Lizzie M. Mitchell; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM GURLEY.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 5050) granting an increase of pension to William Gurley; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FAVORABLE REPORTS.

Mr. MASON, from the same committee, reported back favorably the following bills; which were referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying reports, ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. No. 4284) granting a pension to William Downs;

A bill (H. R. No. 4285) granting a pension to Catharine Henry; and

A bill (H. R. No. 285) providing for the increase of the pension of General Ward B. Burnett.

MARY E. S. FUREY.

Mr. MASON also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 5051) granting a pension to Mary E. S. Furey; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARGARET BRUSTER.

Mr. MASON also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 5052) granting a pension to Margaret Bruster; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ANNA HULSER.

On motion of Mr. MASON, from the same committee, that committee was discharged from the further consideration of a bill (H. R. No. 162) granting an increase of pension to Anna Hulser; and the same was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PETER M. HALWICK.

On motion of Mr. MASON, from the same committee, that committee was discharged from the further consideration of the application of Peter M. Halwick for a pension as second lieutenant Company E, One hundred and fifty-sixth New York Volunteers; and the same was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

PAYMENT OF ARREARS OF PENSIONS.

Mr. HATCH, from the same committee, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. No. 2949) to provide for the payment of arrears of pensions to the widows and minor heirs of persons who died in the United States service during the late war of the rebellion, or who have since died from wounds or injuries received or contracted in said service.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. HATCH. That is a public bill and should go to the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. Does it not appropriate money or require an appropriation to be made?

Mr. HATCH. It requires it to be made, of course, under the general appropriation bill, but this is merely declaratory of existing law. The bill, as presented, only construes existing law and does not appropriate any money.

The SPEAKER. It will go, then, to the House Calendar.

The bill was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. HATCH also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back, with an amendment, a bill (H. R. No. 4023) to amend an act approved June 18, A. D. 1874, entitled "An act to increase pensions in certain cases," to further increase and regulate pensions for the loss of a leg or an arm; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. HATCH. I ask by unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, [Mr. COFFROTH,] who has been confined to his house by indisposition since last Monday, shall be permitted to file the report in this and the next two cases, and that when filed they shall be ordered to be printed, to accompany the bills.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection to that request, and it is so ordered.

DECEASED PENSIONERS.

Mr. HATCH also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. No. 3074) to regulate the payment of arrears and accrued pensions of deceased pensioners; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BOUNTIES.

Mr. HATCH also, from the same committee, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. No. 3075) amending the act in relation to the payment of bounties, approved April 22, 1872; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADDITIONAL CLERKS, INTERIOR AND WAR DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. HATCH. I now ask, Mr. Speaker, by unanimous consent that the Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 3258) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior and Secretary of War to employ additional clerks for the balance of this fiscal year to expedite the settlement of pension applications, and for other purposes, be taken from the Speaker's table; and I have been directed by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to recommend they be concurred in.

Mr. DUNNELL objected, but afterward withdrew his objection.

The first amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

Strike out the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to employ eighty additional clerks from or after the 1st day of January to the 30th day of June, A. D. 1880, at a salary of $100 per month each, for service in the Pension Department, and that he be, and he is hereby, authorized to rent available room and purchase furniture for the use of said additional clerks, at a cost not exceeding $13,900."

And in lieu thereof insert the following:

"That there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be available during the current fiscal year, the sum of $48,000 for the employment of additional clerks in the Pension Office, but the salaries of said clerks shall not exceed the sum of $100 per month; also, for rent of additional office room for the Pension Office, the sum of $4,900, and for contingent expenses of the office, $9,000, making in all, $61,900."

The amendment was concurred in.

The second amendment was read, as follows:

On page 9, line 18, after the word "pensions," insert:

"And the sum of $32,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the use of the War Department for said purposes, and shall be applicable immediately for the purposes of the current fiscal year."

Mr. HATCH. The committee recommend concurrence in that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out all after line 18 on page 1 down to and including line 2 on page 2, and insert:

"That there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $4,800 for the employment of twelve additional clerks in the office of the Second Auditor of the Treasury, at a salary not exceeding $100 per month for the remainder of this current fiscal year, to be available immediately, which clerks shall be employed exclusively in matters relating to pensions."

Mr. HATCH. The committee also recommend concurrence in that amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. HATCH moved to reconsider the vote by which the several amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM TURMAN.

Mr. TAYLOR, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill (H. R. No. 5053) granting a pension to William Turman, guardian of William W. Brewer; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARY A. COUKEN.

Mr. TAYLOR also, from the same committee, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. No. 3392) granting a pension to Mary A. Couken; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SAMUEL C. VAN HOUTEN.

Mr. TAYLOR also, from the same committee, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. No. 3810) for the relief of Samuel C. Van Houten; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FRANK W. HARNEY.

Mr. TAYLOR also, from the same committee, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. No. 2843) for the relief of Frank W. Harney; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FAVORABLE REPORTS.

Mr. CALDWELL, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the following bills; which were referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying reports, ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. No. 1567) granting a pension to Pius A. Coomes; A bill (H. R. No. 3203) granting a pension to Sarah A. M. Chamberlain; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2917) for the relief of Thomas McKinster.

Mr. LEWIS, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. No. 3540) for the relief of Edward Howard; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. No. 4156) to extend the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act for the relief of certain pensioners," approved March 3, 1879, to certain other pensioners; which, with the accompanying report, was ordered to be printed, and referred to the House Calendar.

AMENDMENT OF PENSION LAW.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio, also, from the same committee, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. No. 4496) to amend the pension law; which, with the accompanying report, was ordered to be printed, and referred to the House Calendar.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio, also, from the same committee, reported back adversely the following petitions; which were ordered to lie on the table, and the accompanying reports printed:

The petition of Nancy A. West, for a pension; and The petition of D. W. Rose, of Dunkirk, Hancock County, Ohio, accompanied by the petition of 87 other soldiers, asking for pension.

LOUIS GROVERMAN.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio, also, from the same committee, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. No. 4499) granting a pension to Louis Groverman; which, with the accompanying report, was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

JULIA FOLLANSBEE.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio, also, from the same committee, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. No. 4324) granting a pension to Julia Follansbee; which, with the accompanying report, was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

JAMES W. M'BRIDE.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio, also, from the same committee, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. No. 4501) granting a pension to James W. McBride; which, with the accompanying report, was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

FRANK RICKEY.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio, also, from the same committee, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. No. 4329) granting a pension to Frank Rickey; which, with the accompanying report, was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

GEORGE W. PARRIS.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio, also, from the same committee, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. No. 4497) granting a pension to George W. Parris; which, with the accompanying report, was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

JOHN A. MORRIS.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio, also, from the same committee, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. No. 4500) granting a pension to John A. Morris; which, with the accompanying report, was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

HENRY MEINKEN.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio, also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 5059) granting a pension to Henry Meinken; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARY BLOWERS.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio, also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 5054) granting a pension to Mary Blowers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ANTHONY HALPIN.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio, also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 5055) granting a pension to Anthony Halpin; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BELINDA CURTIS.

Mr. HAZELTON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 2407) granting a pension to Belinda Curtis, widow of Major-General S. R. Curtis; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WIDOW OF CAPTAIN CHRISTOPHER M. HAILE.

Mr. HAZELTON also, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 496) for the relief of the widow of Captain Christopher M. Haile, United States Army; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN W. DAVIS.

Mr. HAZELTON also, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 1724) increasing the pension of John W. Davis; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHARLES W. BALDWIN.

Mr. HAZELTON also, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 1087) granting a pension to Charles W. Baldwin; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ARTHUR CONETY.

Mr. HAZELTON also, from the same committee, reported back, with an adverse recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 3684) granting a pension to Arthur Conety, of Milwaukee, county of Milwaukee, State of Wisconsin; which was laid on the table, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MRS. ELIZABETH UPRIGHT.

Mr. HAZELTON also, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 1107) granting a pension to Mrs. Elizabeth Upright; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

THOMAS U. ROTHROCK.

Mr. HAZELTON also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 5056) granting a pension to Thomas U. Rothrock; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MRS. ELIZABETH GRAVES.

Mr. HAZELTON also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 5057) granting a pension to Mrs. Elizabeth Graves; which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

EDUCATION OF COLORED PEOPLE.

Mr. GOODE, from the Committee on Education and Labor, reported back, with adverse recommendations, the bill (H. R. No. 2571) to encourage and aid the education of the colored people in the several States and Territories by the appropriation of the unclaimed bounties and pay of the colored soldiers, and the bill (H. R. No. 4342) designed to aid the colored youth of the several States and Territories by the appropriation of certain unclaimed pay and bounty moneys now in the Treasury of the United States; and the same were laid on the table, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. WILLIS. The Committee on Education and Labor have had under consideration various bills with regard to Chinese immigration and have instructed me to report, as a substitute for the bill H. R. No. 335, a bill (H. R. No. 5058) to restrict the immigration of Chinese to the United States. I am further instructed by the committee to ask that some day be set apart for the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky desires that this bill be made a special order.

Mr. CONGER. I object.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask that the bill go to the House Calendar.

The bill was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the House Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

ENFORCEMENT OF EIGHT-HOUR LAW.

Mr. VAN AERNAM, from the Committee on Education and Labor, reported a joint resolution (H. R. No. 239) to provide for the enforcement of the eight-hour law; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

UNIVERSITIES IN THE SOUTH.

Mr. TILLMAN, from the Committee on Education and Labor, reported back, with an adverse recommendation, the resolution of the General Assembly of North Carolina in favor of the establishment of two universities in the South; and the same was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

FREE KINDERGARTEN, WASHINGTON, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. TILLMAN also, from the same committee, reported back the memorial of Mrs. Louise Pollock, praying for the establishment of a free kindergarten in the city of Washington, and moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that it be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia. The motion was agreed to.

ASSAY OFFICE IN ARIZONA.

Mr. STEPHENS, from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 3003) to establish an assay office in the Territory of Arizona; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ASSAY OFFICE IN DAKOTA.

Mr. STEPHENS, from the same committee, also reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 1306) to establish an assay office at Deadwood, in the Territory of Dakota; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOSTETLER. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. HOSTETLER. Then I call for the regular order.

Mr. CLYMER. I rise to a privileged motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLYMER. I move to reconsider the various votes by which bills reported adversely during the morning hour have been laid upon the table; and I also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

Mr. CONGER. I hope that will not be done. There are some reports which members may desire to examine, and after examination may desire to have referred to the calendars.

Mr. CLYMER. It is a privileged motion, and I hope it will be agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. Before that is done I demand that the bills which were laid upon the table be referred to their appropriate calendars. That is the privilege of a member.

The SPEAKER. It is rather late to demand that now.

Mr. CONGER. It can be done at any time before any action is taken on the bills.

The SPEAKER. There has been action; they were laid upon the table.

Mr. CONGER. That was by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. It was upon the motion of the gentlemen reporting them.

Mr. CONGER. There was no action of the House upon that.

The SPEAKER. There was assent by the House, and the Chair announced that they would be laid on the table and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed.

Mr. CONGER. There was no inquiry as to whether or not there was objection.

The SPEAKER. That is not the fault of the Chair, nor does it affect the order of the House.

Mr. HOOKER. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. This is the regular order. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLYMER] to reconsider the various votes by which bills reported adversely during the morning hour of to-day were laid upon the table, and that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

Mr. CONGER. That would prevent any bill being taken from the table hereafter?

The SPEAKER. It would.

Mr. HOOKER. Does the motion apply to all bills laid on the table this morning?

Mr. CLYMER. It applies to all bills reported adversely this morning.

Mr. HOOKER. Then I hope the motion will not be agreed to.

The question was taken on laying on the table the motion to reconsider; and upon a division there were—ayes 43, noes 81.

Before the result of this vote was announced,

Mr. CLYMER called for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

So the motion to reconsider was not laid on the table.

Mr. McMAHON. What becomes of the motion to reconsider? Is it still pending?

Mr. CLYMER. I withdraw the motion.

AGREEMENT WITH THE INDIANS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I have the honor to transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of the Interior, containing an agreement signed by the chiefs and head-men of the Ute Indians now present at the seat of Government. The stipulations of this agreement appear to me so reasonable and just, and the object to be accomplished by its execution so eminently desirable to both the white people of the United States and the Indians, that it has my cordial approval, and I earnestly commend it to Congress for favorable consideration and appropriate legislative action.

RUTHERFORD B. HAYES.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, March 9, 1880.

Mr. HOOKER. I move that the message just read, with the accompanying documents, be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

SUPPLIES FOR ARMY POSTS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to the purchase of subsistence supplies for Army posts; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ISAAC P. BALDWIN.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the commissioners of claims, recommending the reappropriation of $24.60 to settle the account of Isaac P. Baldwin; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

WAGON-ROAD IN WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to a wagon-road from White Bluff Landing, Upper Columbia River, to Camp Chelain, Washington Territory, and recommending an appropriation for the same; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

SAINT JOSEPH AND DENVER CITY RAILROAD.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, in response to a resolution of the House concerning the Saint Joseph and Denver City Railroad Company; which was referred to the Committee on Pacific Railroads.

REPORT OF MISSISSIPPI RIVER COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the report of the Mississippi river commission.

Mr. CONGER. I think that should go to the Committee on Commerce. It is a report from a board authorized to examine and report upon the subject of the improvement of the Mississippi River from the Falls of Saint Anthony to the Gulf.

The SPEAKER. It is a report made in pursuance of the provisions of an act passed June 23, 1879.

Mr. CONGER. Since that time the rules of the House have been so changed that the subject of the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi River and its tributaries is referred to the Committee on Commerce. I therefore move that the communication, with accompanying documents, be referred to the Committee on Commerce, and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

TENTH GENERAL REPORT OF CLAIMS COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the commissioners of claims, transmitting their tenth general report; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. BEALE, for five days, on account of important business.

POLITICAL CONTRIBUTIONS.

Mr. HOSTETLER. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being demanded, the House resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2266) to prohibit Federal officers, claimants, and contractors from making contributions for political purposes. The gentleman from New York [Mr. RICHARDSON] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. YOUNG.]

Mr. YOUNG, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I certainly did not intend to make any remarks on the bill now pending before this body in relation to civil-service reform, as so called, but after listening to the elaborate and carefully prepared speech of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. HOUSE,] a speech remarkable in many respects, but especially so in that while it took the distinguished gentleman about two hours to deliver it, one hour and forty-five minutes by the clock was devoted to an introduction of the remarks he had to make on the bill before the House.

This bill is intended to make it an offense against the law for any public officer to contribute any part of his means for political purposes. I listened very carefully to the learned gentleman, and when he had finished I had failed, probably from a want of intelligent apprehension, to discover a single cogent reason why the bill should become a law; and I failed to catch in any expression he made use of how he himself intended to vote on the bill. In the course of his sometimes humorous and always bitter philippic against the Administration's policy of civil-service reform, so called, the gentleman took occasion, not unadvisedly, because he read his speech from manuscript, to insinuate a charge of collusion to perpetrate a fraud to my friend and constituent, Hon. E. F. Noyes, the present minister of the United States to France. This he did by quoting from the testimony of McLin, Cocke, and others, given before the Potter investigating committee, a committee that was organized by a democratic Congress to undertake the stupendous task of covering up the frauds and rascalities of the leaders of the democratic party in their defeated effort to steal or purchase the electoral vote of several States. If I understood the gentleman aright, and I sat very close to him, he asserted that McLin had testified before that committee that Governor Noyes, while in Florida, had represented that he was sent thither by Governor Hayes; that he spoke for Governor Hayes; and that any promises he might choose to make would be honorably fulfilled as soon as Governor Hayes was inaugurated President. And further, he stated that Governor Noyes did make a promise to McLin and others, and that in pursuance of that promise the President in due time had appointed the said McLin to the office of justice of one of the Territories. This declaration on the part of the gentleman not only pained me but amazed me, because the official record of McLin's testimony must be greatly distorted indeed to make it capable of such a construction. I will go farther, and say it must be falsified to arrive at any such conclusion.

Now, let us look at the record. On page 124 of volume 2 of the testimony relating to Florida, this question was asked McLin by Mr. SPRINGER, of the committee:

Question. What, if anything, did Governor Noyes say in that conversation, or any subsequent one, with regard to the carrying out by Governor Hayes of any promise made by him?

Answer. As I stated on Saturday, I do not remember that Governor Noyes directly made promises of anything further than that the republicans of Florida were deserving of all credit for the manner in which they had conducted the campaign, and that the members of the canvassing board would be provided for. Something of that kind, but it was rather in a general way.

Now, in looking over all the testimony of McLin I find that this is the only declaration made by him which would give color to the charge made by the gentleman as to Governor Noyes's agency in the matter of promises. In this connection it must be remembered, as the record will show, that in all the subsequent interrogations put to McLin, as to the presence of a third party when that supposed or implied promise was made to McLin, there was no evidence to show that any one was present. Indeed, McLin himself denied that there was.

Now, turning to the testimony taken by the same committee, we find that on page 495, of volume 1, Edward F. Noyes was sworn and examined, and testified as follows, which I will ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 23, 1878.

EDWARD F. NOYES sworn and examined.

By Mr. HISCOCK:

Question. What is your present employment?

Answer. My official position is that of United States minister to France.

Q. What civil and military positions have you held?

A. I entered the Army in 1861 as major in an Ohio regiment, and was made colonel of that regiment in the summer of 1862. I served with it until the 4th of July, 1864, when I was wounded in battle and lost a limb, which necessitated my returning to the North. After two amputations I reported for duty again, I think on the 1st of October, and was assigned to the command of Camp Dennison, in Ohio, by General Hooker, who was then in command of that military district. I remained in command of the camp until April, 1865, when, in my absence, I was elected city solicitor, who is the chief attorney of the city of Cincinnati. My resignation was therefore accepted in order that I might enter on the duties of that office. Before the expiration of the term, which was two years, I was elected judge of one of the State courts—the probate court of Hamilton County—and I remained on a bench for three years. In 1871 I was elected governor of Ohio, and served for two years. I was renominated and failed of election—Governor Allen being elected at that election. I have held no other office until I was appointed minister to France.

Q. You have been always identified with the republican party?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In the fall of 1876, during the last canvass in Florida, were you at Tallahassee, and in attendance on the canvassing board of that State?

A. I was.

Q. Previous to your going there did you have any communication with Mr. Hayes in regard to your going there, or did you go there at his request at all?

A. I had no communication with him; I went without his request, and, so far as I know, without his knowledge.

Q. Then you went simply as a republican, and as a representative man of the party to look after the interests of the party?

A. If you will permit me, I will state precisely how I came to go.

Mr. HISCOCK. Please to do so.

The WITNESS. There was a meeting of prominent republicans at the office of Mr. Bateman, United States district attorney for the southern district of Ohio. At that meeting Mr. Richard Smith, of the Cincinnati Gazette, was present and told us that he had received telegrams announcing the fact that democratic politicians from the North were assembling at New Orleans; and he, with other republicans present, thought that it was with the purpose of taking from Mr. Hayes a State which they believed fairly belonged to him. It was thought that some republicans from the North, of some prominence, should go there to look after it. Various names were suggested, my own among the rest. And finally Mr. Job E. Stevenson, a former member of Congress from that State, said that he would go if I would. And after that meeting, and that very night, without any communication with Mr. Hayes or anybody else, Mr. Job E. Stevenson and myself started for New Orleans. I do not recollect (I have tried to recall it, but cannot do so) whether Mr. Stanley Matthews went with us or met us there; but he was there at the same time. After remaining two or three days, during which nothing was done except to arrange preliminaries with the democratic visitors, (no testimony having been taken and nothing done with reference to the canvass at all, and regarding which I have no knowledge excepting what I have seen in the papers,) various gentlemen came down from the North, republicans, in quite a large number. Among them were Senator Sherman, Mr. GARFIELD, Mr. Van Allen of New York, Mr. Kasson of Iowa, General Wallace of Indiana, and Ex-Governor Will Cumbach of Indiana. Finding that there were so many present, and regarding my presence there as in no wise necessary, I prepared to go home to Cincinnati, purchased my ticket, had my lunch-basket packed, and got my sleeping-car ticket. About that time Mr. Eugene Hale received a dispatch from the chairman of the republican national committee, stating, in substance, (I presume that the dispatch is before you,) that there was great danger that Florida would be stolen away from us, and saying, "Send strong committee to Tallahassee." It was difficult to get anybody to go. It was a long journey and a circuitous one, and for some time nobody would consent to go. At last Mr. Kasson and General Wallace said that they would go if I would go along with them, whereupon, without having been specially designated by name, I started with those two gentlemen for Tallahassee. That is the whole story of my being there. While there I did not receive one line or word from Mr. Hayes, by telegraph, letter, or otherwise, and I did not communicate with him in any way by letter or by telegraph.

Q. When did you arrive there?

A. I cannot fix the date, but I presume the date fixed by Mr. Chandler is the correct one.

Q. Commence now and in your own way and in your own language state to the committee what you did at Tallahassee; what connection you had with the canvass; what communication, if any, you had with any member of the canvassing board; and in short, what your labors there were.

A. When I arrived in Tallahassee it was my intention to have no active part in what should take place there, but simply to observe, and, if possible, to secure an honest return of the result in that State. But it was soon made known to me that there were no republican lawyers in that State who could manage the affair before the courts (for there were many court proceedings) or present the case properly to the canvassing board. As Mr. Chandler stated yesterday, I believe the only republican lawyer of any prominence who was there was Mr. Emmons, who was taken very ill a day or two after we arrived, so that he was utterly useless to us, and who very soon afterward died. I was importuned by the local republicans there to undertake to prepare the case, as the democratic lawyers were preparing the case on the other side. On the other side, as lawyers were present the gentlemen named by Mr. Chandler yesterday: Mr. Saltonstall, of Massachusetts; Mr. Biddle and Mr. Sellers, of Philadelphia; Mr. Thompson and Mr. Hay, of Pittsburgh; Mr. Brown, of Georgia; Mr. Wolf, of Cincinnati; Mr. Perry Smith, of Chicago; Mr. Mantou Marble, of New York, and others; and I observed that among them were many able lawyers. We had very few among the republican visitors there, and none of the ability of those gentlemen. Being importuned, I finally consented to take part, to receive the evidence, to classify it, to prepare the case, and to argue it before the returning board, and, if it was requisite, before the courts. I was not required to speak in court, and did not. Mr. Barlow, of New York, having been assigned to the position of leading counsel before I arrived there, conducted the arguments before the court. It has already been stated, I think, that the charges against one county or the other by one party or the other were set out in what may be denominated pleadings, if you please, a full statement of the objections made to each county by one party or the other. My impression is that that included one-third or perhaps one-half of all the counties of the State. I do not recollect the number, but it was a very large number. Several were assigned to me, but I had very little to do (except in the way of consultation) with any county other than Alachua, which includes this Archer precinct No. 2. I undertook to find out what were the facts about that. I was informed that two of the inspectors had made affidavit that there was fraud there involving about 219 votes.

The CHAIRMAN. Mention their names.

The WITNESS. I get them confused a little, but I think their names were Dukes and Moore. Dukes and Moore, I think, were the two. They subsequently made other affidavits denying the truthfulness of the first.

The CHAIRMAN. Both of them?

The WITNESS. I think both of them. They finally came on the stand and said that the first affidavits were true, and that the second ones were false. In other words, they swore in so many ways that I placed no confidence whatever in what they stated, and so I argued to the board of canvassers. On the other hand, those other two election officers, one the clerk and one inspector, had consistently sworn that the return was true and correct as made; and in its favor was the fact of its being the regular return signed by all the returning officers at the time without protest. I asked many republicans (I cannot tell you how many, but several certainly) to satisfy myself at the time whether or not there was anything wrong about that precinct, and I satisfied myself perfectly that it was entirely right as it had been returned. But, not being content with having the testimony of those two election officers, (contradicted as it was by the testimony of the other two,) I desired in preparing the case to know from the electors themselves how many of them had actually voted the republican ticket; and we sent down there to get the evidence. I do not recollect who went down, or how many were employed in taking it, but my recollection is that of the three hundred and ninety-nine republican votes which were counted and returned we proved about three hundred and forty or three hundred and fifty; and when I inquired why they could not get them all they said that the electors had scattered in various directions, and that in the limited time it was impossible to get every one. But we came so near to it as to make the democratic theory absolutely impossible that two hundred and nineteen republican votes had been added to the return. That satisfied me, and it seemed to satisfy the canvassing board. From the inconsistent and contradictory evidence of two of those election officers, and from the consistent testimony of the other two on our side, and from the affidavits of these three hundred and forty or three hundred and fifty voters who swore that they voted the republican ticket in that precinct, I was satisfied, and the canvassing board seemed to be satisfied. Now, no mortal man ever told me or intimated to me while I was in Florida that there was anything fraudulent about that return, except what was sworn to before the canvassing board, and has been made public. What I mean is, I had no possible information of anything fraudulent derived from any source whatever—none.

Mr. HISCOCK. Did you at that time, and in that matter, honestly and conscientiously believe that the theory which you advanced and which you argued for, in favor of the return from that county, was right?

The WITNESS. I believed it thoroughly, and I now say that we made a case that would satisfy any unprejudiced court in Christendom.

Mr. HISCOCK. At the time you were there did you press Mr. Dennis to be a witness?

The WITNESS. I asked Mr. Dennis to be a witness and be sworn, and for this reason: Mr. Dennis, from beginning to end, had insisted on the truthfulness of that return and had undertaken to prove it, and had proven it to my satisfaction. He was thoroughly acquainted with the county. He knew the people who lived there. He could testify as to the persons whose names appeared on the return, and I therefore desired that he should appear as a witness. He says that on several occasions I intimated to him that I would like to have him as a witness. That is entirely probable; I do not know. He says that he never made any reply to it but once, and that then, in some form of words which he does not undertake to give, he meant to convey to me the impression that if I put him on the stand he should injure my case. I do not doubt his word when he says that he meant to convey that impression. I solemnly swear that he did not convey that impression to me, and it was said in the presence of General Lew Wallace, who is now in the room and will testify.

Mr. HISCOCK. What impression did you get from what he said?

The WITNESS. This, and this only: I had already learned that his life had been threatened, and that he considered himself in very great danger. One instance had impressed itself on my memory, namely, that when his life had been threatened he had called together in a church, or somewhere, all the colored people of the vicinity and had them kneel down and raise their hands and swear that if he were killed they would lay waste in every direction and avenge his death. That made an impression on me. Knowing, therefore, the danger which he and others regarded him as being in, the impression that I got was that he did not wish to testify so as to bring himself in contact with anybody, especially, perhaps, because he himself was a candidate for the senate and his own election was at stake. That was the only impression I had.

Mr. HISCOCK. While in Florida, did you have any conversation with any members of the canvassing board with reference to their duty or with reference to what they were going to do?

The WITNESS. Oh, yes, I had. I said to Dr. Cowgill and to Mr. McLin that all that I wanted of them was to do their duty honestly and fairly. I said to them that if the State had honestly cast its vote for Tilden it was their duty so to declare, and that if the State had honestly cast its vote for Governor Hayes we wanted it; but that we expected nothing of them except what honest men could do. That is what I said to them.

Mr. HISCOCK. Did you ever say anything else other than that to them?

The WITNESS. I never did. I never made one of them a promise, nor intimated a promise, nor held out any inducement whatever to have them declare that State for Governor Hayes rather than for Governor Tilden.

Mr. HISCOCK. Either before or after the canvass?

The WITNESS. Not before the final decision had been rendered.

Mr. HISCOCK. Did you afterward?

The WITNESS. Yes. After the vote of Florida had been cast, Mr. McLin came to me greatly depressed, and said to me that he did not know what was to become of himself or his family; that he had so excited the hostility of the democrats there that he could no longer live in Florida in peace; that he was poor and sick, and was almost in despair. I said to him, "Mr. McLin, you have done your duty honestly and fairly, as I think. I shall take great pleasure in saying so to Governor Hayes if he shall be declared President of the United States; and I will take pleasure also in recommending you for some position where you can take care of yourself and family." About the time I was going away I also said to Mr. Cowgill, the other republican member of the board, that I had been greatly impressed with his honesty of purpose and with his dignified and manly bearing during that excited canvass. I said, "If ever I can be of any use to you in any manner state it frankly and command me freely." In addition to that I will say that I did more than some politicians do. I kept my word, and I did recommend both those gentlemen, to the extreme of my ability, to the President of the United States, and I am very sorry that my advice was not taken, and that they were not appointed to good places. If I had had influence enough with the Administration to have them appointed they would certainly have been appointed.

Mr. HISCOCK. Except as you have stated, did you ever have any conversation with them at all?

The WITNESS. None. I never saw Mr. McLin one minute alone in my life to talk with him on any subject until the final vote of Florida had been cast—never.

Mr. HISCOCK. Did you on any occasion previous to the canvass being finished, to either of those gentlemen represent yourself as the special friend of President Hayes, and did you, in any form of words, (as General Butler says,) convey the impression, or seek to convey the impression, that they would be taken care of, or that they would have positions in the event of Mr. Hayes being returned President?

The WITNESS. Never.

Mr. HISCOCK. Have you anything else that you desire to state?

The WITNESS. No. I will answer any question that may be asked me regarding the whole of it. I want the scope of the examination to be very broad, including every act and thought and word of mine while I was in Florida. I do not know but that, in justice to myself, I ought to produce here the original of a letter which I received from Mr. McLin nearly two months after the close of the canvass. I think that the letter has been brought to the attention of the sub-committee in Florida by a copy, but the original letter I now have, and I desire to offer it and to make it a part of my testimony.

The witness here read the following letter, which was marked "Exhibit C N," and which differs in a few unimportant respects from the copy as published on page 101 of the report of the sub-committee in Florida:

"TALLAHASSEE, FLA., January 27, 1877.

"DEAR SIR: Lamentable changes have taken place since we parted on the 6th of December last. Then we were hopeful and happy in the pleasant assurance that Governor Hayes would be inaugurated our next President. Now we are humiliated with the near approach of defeat. Not an honest defeat, but a defeat that will be brought about by cravenly submission and sheer cowardice. As to Florida, recent developments show that democratic fraud and villainies were even greater than we had any idea of at the date of the canvass. The Senate committee held sessions at Gainesville, and succeeded in proving up all the democratic votes, while even Mr. Fleming, the smart witness, could not testify as to twenty democrats who voted at Archer precinct No. 2. The republicans who were proven to be dead were produced in the flesh, and testified that they voted at said precinct. But, my dear governor, what does all this amount to when we have such men as Barlow among our great leaders, and when Senators cravenly quake in their boots when they hear the rebel yell. If Tilden is inaugurated it will be through the sheer cowardice and treachery of men that we were pleased to look upon as great and good men. At the present writing there does not seem to be a gleam of hope. Four years will quickly pass away with the republicans of the North, but with us of the South they will roll with the weight of centuries. I fear, indeed, that the black cloud of democracy will never be removed. I feel sick at heart for the loyal men, black and white, and I feel sick for myself. If my health would permit I would gladly seek a more congenial latitude. As it is I must brave the tempest of proscription, and meet the fate that is in store for me. Some of my friends have united in recommending me to the President for appointment to the office of United States district judge for this State. The State executive committee, members of the old cabinet, and other friends have joined in this request. I would be pleased to have you say a good word to the President in my behalf. However, I pray you do not think that I prefer any claim on account of the recent canvass. I only performed my duty conscientiously, and if it proves unavailing I will never cease to regret it as long as I live. My reasons for seeking the appointment are urgent. My contest for a livelihood with a proscriptive democracy will be a very unequal one, and my health will not permit me to live in a colder climate. You can thoroughly appreciate my situation and the magnitude of the triumph should I be honored with the appointment. The office will probably be filled at an early date, and I am necessitated to apply at once. If I fail in this there is nothing left. A kind word spoken by you to the President will be of great service.

"Hoping that a gleam of light may break through the thick folds of surrounding darkness, and that Governor Hayes may be inaugurated in accordance with the will of the people,

"I remain yours, very truly,

"Hon. E. F. NOYES,
"Cincinnati, Ohio."

"SAM. B. McLIN.

The WITNESS. I want to say one thing here; I believed then that Mr. McLin was an honest man, and I believe it yet.

Mr. MORRISON. This letter was written after Mr. McLin had performed service as a returning officer?

The WITNESS. It was written two months after the whole thing had closed. Mr. MORRISON. And before the inauguration of President Hayes?

The WITNESS. Yes.

Mr. MORRISON. And while Mr. McLin was an applicant for office under the Grant administration?

The WITNESS. Yes.

Mr. SPRINGER. Was that application made to the Grant administration?

The WITNESS. Certainly.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. McLin did not expect Hayes to come in, and therefore he was hurrying up his application.

The WITNESS. I have another letter from him which brings it up to the inauguration of Mr. Hayes. It was written on the 3d of March, the day before the inauguration.

(The witness thereupon read the following letter, which was put in evidence and marked "Exhibit C O:")

"TALLAHASSEE, March 3, 1877.

"DEAR SIR: Supposing that you are in Washington rejoicing with the nation over the inauguration of Governor Hayes, I embrace the opportunity of thanking you for your kind response to my letter, and at the same time expressing to you my soul-felt gratification over the ultimate triumph of Governor Hayes.

"The party may expect much in the way of purification and elevation from our noble President and the nation will experience four years of unexampled prosperity.

"Let joy reign supreme at the inauguration. I very much regret that I cannot be present and drink in a flood-tide of happiness. As it is I am happy now, surrounded by the meanest democrats the world has ever seen.

"Truly,

"SAM'L B. McLIN.

"Hon. E. F. NOYES, Washington."

Mr. YOUNG, of Ohio. In view of this testimony given under oath by Governor Noyes; in view of the fact that there is not a particle of testimony to corroborate the assertion that he made any promises to any person while in Louisiana or Florida on behalf of Governor Hayes; in view of the fact confessed that the letters of McLin to Governor Noyes—which are a part of the testimony—contained no allusion to any promise nor any demand for the fulfillment of any promise, it seems to me a willful distortion, to put it mildly, to assume even by innuendo that Governor Noyes misrepresented himself, or was in any dishonorable collusion with any person to effect a fraud.

Sir, when I remember the career of Governor Noyes from his humble boyhood up to his present exalted position, it makes me sad to think that on this floor partisan acrimony will lead a distinguished gentleman to assail for party purposes such an honorable record.

An orphan boy at the age of thirteen, entering a printer's office to obtain his bread, and by his industry securing the confidence of his employer so soon that he was enabled to lay up a little money, looking forward to the time when he could use that money to obtain an education; studying hard, burning the midnight oil in his preparation for college, with scarce any assistance in his studies; working by day and giving general satisfaction to his employer, at last he was enabled to enter the preparatory school of Dartmouth College, from which institution he graduated in due time in an honored position in his class.

Striking out to seek his fortune in the then comparatively Far West, he entered a law office in Cincinnati, Ohio, and, giving his services as a clerk, he was enabled to live until he acquired a knowledge of his profession. He had but entered upon a brilliant career in that profession when the bloody malcontents, who had been for years seeking an opportunity to dissolve this Union, fired upon Fort Sumter and tore the flag of our Nation from the flag-staff of that fortress and trampled it in the dust.

It is not my purpose now to pursue the history of the war that followed that traitorous beginning. It is written in blood in nearly every State of this Union. Its terrible effects are felt throughout our land to-day as a great blot on the nation's prosperity, and I only allude to it in passing to say that among the first of the young patriots who buckled on the sword and sprang to the defense of our liberties and our nationality was the heroic and brilliant young lawyer, Edward F. Noyes. His career as a soldier adds to the luster of the achievements of the patriotic sons of his adopted State, a State which furnished a Grant, a Sherman, a Sheridan, a McPherson, and scores of other great captains, but among them all I will not concede that there is a brighter halo of patriotic glory than that which encircles the head of General Edward F. Noyes, considering his opportunity. His career as a soldier ended with the loss of a leg in a gallant charge made on the anniversary of the nation's independence on the memorable Atlanta campaign.

His civil career is no less distinguished than his military career. He has held by the choice of the people many important offices of trust, and it is not recorded truthfully that he ever betrayed the confidence of the people who trusted him, but it is recorded that he never held an office the duties of which he did not discharge with signal ability.

Mr. Speaker, I had the honor to serve with him in the field. I knew him more intimately as a citizen than I did as a soldier. I am proud indeed to call him my friend, and I am still more proud to believe that he is mine. Living closely together in the same city for more than twenty years, meeting him almost daily either in business relations or socially, hearing the expressed opinions of his fellow-men as to his integrity and worth, regarded as a generous, high-toned gentleman of brilliant attainments, a man whose veracity I never heard questioned until I heard the insinuation in that regard of the gentleman from Tennessee yesterday, does it surprise you that I should in my place resent the insinuation on behalf of my distinguished constituent, holding one of the highest offices in the gift of the Government, who is absent and cannot answer for himself? No, Mr. Speaker, when I reflect that this insinuation which seeks to besmirch the character of my friend comes from a gentleman who, when Governor Noyes was in the forefront of battle fighting for the preservation of our country, was at that time either in the legislative councils of the rebel confederacy or was in command of a rebel battalion doing his best to overthrow this Union, I cannot be silent.

The gentlemen on this floor from the Southern States exhibited in their speeches of last summer, and have commenced by the gentleman from Tennessee in this present session, a bitter feeling of dislike and distrust of northern men, all the time professing the hypocritical desire to let sectional and partisan animosity die the death, and they deplore the continuance of acrimonious debate on national questions when indulged in by gentlemen on this side of the House. They ask us to forget the past. We have already forgiven them. They are continually deploring the want of liberality on our part if we should by chance allude to the late rebellion, but no opportunity is lost by these very distinguished gentlemen to stir up the fires of dissension and hate by attacking the motives of gallant men who are their peers in all that makes up true manhood and their superiors in all that makes up true patriotism.

Now, Mr. Speaker, with the indulgence of the House, I should stop here, as I have given no particular thought to the subject of civil-service reform as it may be affected by the bill under discussion, and I have not the advantage of having the speech delivered yesterday by the gentleman from Tennessee before me, as it appears from the RECORD that it is withheld for revision. But from my remembrance of its general tenor, outside of its political nastiness, I think I can to some extent agree with him as to the futility of the attempt on the part of this Administration under our present system of government in making the system as laid out, but not carried out, a success. That the President is earnestly honest in his ideas of civil-service reform I do not doubt. I disagree with him, however, in believing that his election was an indorsement of his policy on that subject as shadowed forth in his letter of acceptance, for I believe that without any such a declaration he would have been as triumphantly and as fairly elected as he was. I firmly believe that, under our system of government, subject to the mutations incident to our popular elections, such a scheme is totally impracticable. I sincerely believe in the old Jacksonian doctrine, that "to the victors belong the spoils," and unless the system of civil-service reform could be incorporated into the fundamental law of the land, which would make its observance binding on all parties, that it must result in a failure. I believe with the President that the elevation and purification of the civil service of the Government would be hailed with approval by the people of the United States, but I hold, as an article of political faith, that this reform depends wholly on the character of the Administration for the time being in power and within the party to which that Administration belongs. Under a monarchical form of government, or an empire, the system blocked out in 1870 by what was known as the civil-service commission is possible, because under such governments the emperor or king never dies, and the tenure of office of public servants is not affected, except, perhaps, in a change of ministry; but in our country and under our institutions, as the President well says in his annual message:

Every citizen has an equal right to the honor and profit of entering the public service of his country. The only just ground of discrimination is the measure of character and capacity he has to make that service most useful to the people. Except in cases where, upon just and recognized principles, as upon the theory of pensions, offices and promotions are bestowed as rewards for past services, their bestowal upon any theory which disregards personal merit is an act of injustice to the citizen as well as a breach of that trust subject to which the appointing power is held.

In the light of these principles, it becomes of great importance to provide just and adequate means, especially for every department and large administrative office where personal discrimination on the part of its head is not practicable, for ascertaining those qualifications to which appointments and removals should have reference. To fail to provide such means is not only to deny the opportunity of ascertaining the facts upon which the most righteous claim to office depends, but of necessity, to discourage all worthy aspirants by handing over appointments and removals to mere influence and favoritism. If it is the right of the worthiest claimant to gain the appointment, and the interest of the people to bestow it upon him, it would seem clear that a wise and just method of ascertaining personal fitness for office must be an important and permanent function of every just and wise government. It has long since become impossible, in the great offices, for those having the duty of nomination and appointment to personally examine into the individual qualifications of more than a small proportion of those seeking office; and, with the enlargement of the civil service, that proportion must continue to become less.

Sir, I believe in these sentiments to this extent, that the examinations for fitness, as suggested by the President, should be confined solely to persons seeking office whose political principles and sympathies are in full accord with the Administration in power. I think there is no gentleman on this side of the House but who will agree with me that between an enemy of the Administration and a friend of the Administration, all else being equal as to qualification or fitness, the preference should be given to men in full accord with the principles of the party in power. The gentleman from Tennessee, in his speech of yesterday, and I beg him to correct me if I misquote him, not in words, but in sentiment, ridicules the idea of the President's profession to civil-service reform in the matter of the dispensation of his official patronage, naming quite a number of persons who had been rewarded for political services to the republican party and to the present Administration previous to his inauguration. For my part, if there is anything that I can commend in the President more than another it is the fact that he took care to provide for his political friends of the South for the sacrifices they made in standing up for the right and resisting the attempted democratic frauds that sought to cheat the people of the nation out of their legitimate choice for the office of Chief Magistrate. If the President had acted on this policy more generally to his friends in the North who had made sacrifices of time and money, he would have been commended on all sides, even by his enemies, for such action. As it is, the majority of the people of this nation hold him in high esteem for what little he did by rewarding the brave men who were socially ostracized because of their honesty by a people whose political rancor leads too often to the use of the knife of the assassin or the bullet of the bulldozer. He could do no less than he did for the men mentioned by the gentleman from Tennessee and retain the respect of a justice-loving people, because

We hate ingratitude more in a man
Than lying, vainness, babbling, drunkenness,
Or any taint of vice whose strong corruption
Inhabits our frail blood.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the President is charged with insincerity in not carrying out his pet principles of civil-service reform when his attention is called to cases of violation of his civil-service order of June, 1877, but the people who carp at him for this forget that since our country has had the misfortune to have had a democratic majority in Congress they have religiously withheld any appropriation always asked for to put in motion in good faith the machinery of civil-service reform. In 1871, 1872, and 1873 appropriations were made, attempting to carry out the system inaugurated by the commission appointed under the act of 1870, but since 1874 no appropriations have been made, and the President, alluding to this fact in his last annual message, calls attention to his recommendation contained in his message of December, 1877, and repeats it for the purpose of resuming the work of the commission. But it is not likely that this Congress will appropriate the money asked for to make the experiment. The gentleman from Tennessee dwelt particularly on the construction of the civil-service order, and succeeded, to his own satisfaction at least, in torturing that order into political disfranchisement of every man and woman holding an appointive office. If I remember rightly, he assumed that that order prohibited any office-holder from expressing a political opinion, from belonging to any political club, from making a speech, from attending a convention, not only as a delegate, but as a spectator, from writing a political article, and from contributing any money for political purposes. In short, that an office-holder would not be prosecuted if he were known to have voted, but in all else that pertains to the liberty of a citizen, the fact of his holding an office disqualified him. I am not surprised at the gentleman's anxiety to put a construction on this order to suit himself, for it has been construed by a thousand people in as many different ways, to suit the exigency of each construction.

It is very much like the suit of clothes, as the story goes, which a man bought at auction, and which, being of different measures, constrained him to eat either much or little, as the case might be, to make them fit. I confess that the order strikes me as being somewhat ambiguous, and I worried with the problem of its meaning for some time, but took an occasion to ask the President the full understanding and scope of the order, and he was pleased to define it to me, and I think I can state this authoritatively, that it meant simply "this, and nothing more:" that it intended to take the machinery of party politics out of the hands of civil officers of the Government; that under that order an appointee of the Government would not be permitted to be a delegate to any party convention; that he should not be an officer of an election, and that he should not be compelled to pay an assessment rated by a percentage on his salary for party purposes, but that an officer of the Government who could make a speech or write an article in favor of his party was at liberty to do so, always provided that it would not interfere with the discharge of his public duties, and that an officer or employé of the Government, although not assessed for political purposes, was at liberty to give his own money, in any quantity he pleased, in aid of his opinions or his party, and that he should be also as free as any other citizen to refuse to make such gifts, without fear of weakening his tenure on that account.

The gentleman from Tennessee dwelt at considerable length on the hardship of the officers who had subscribed money for political purposes, and stated that over $100,000 had been subscribed by this class of people to help the republican party. Of course there is not a man or woman in the public service but who knows better than to believe such twaddle. What they gave freely, because they loved the cause it was given to support, and I presume they felt it necessary to be liberal, because they had Sammy Tilden's "bar!" to fight. But it is an undeniable fact, which I can substantiate with indubitable proof if I had the time, that there were hundreds of clerks in all the Executive Departments in this city and in many of the Federal offices throughout the country who refused to subscribe one penny, and yet they were not dismissed the service, and I want to assure the gentlemen on the other side who are so anxious to pass this bill making it a crime to subscribe money for political purposes, that if it should become a law the subscriptions by the good people who hold office, to sustain the party and the principles which it represents, would be just as liberal and perhaps more so, than if no such act was in existence on our statute-books.

If this law could be made applicable to the democratic city governments as well as to the Federal offices, and it were practicable to enforce it, what a grand relief it would be to the poor democratic policemen, firemen, and street-cleaners of New York and other democratic cities where a regular assessment is made and collected from their poor pittance of pay to run the democratic party machine.

Considerable stress was laid upon the fact that the gentleman from Tennessee saw a subscription book circulated in the Treasury Department to raise means for the republican party a year or two ago, and that the first name at the head of the list was that of John Sherman, a Cabinet officer, who was supposed to be another civil-service-reformer pretender. I am not surprised at this revelation, because Mr. Sherman would give every dollar he has in the world if it were necessary to secure and perpetuate the ascendancy of the republican party. His whole life has been devoted to its principles, and for this reason particularly was his name paraded in a spirit of obloquy, because he happens to be mentioned at this time as a prominent candidate of his party for the Presidency. If there is any one man more than another in this nation whom the democracy fear, it is John Sherman.

For more than thirty years he has been identified with the politics of Ohio and the nation. Elected in 1855 to represent his district (then the thirteenth) in the Thirty-fourth Congress, he was made chairman of the committee to investigate the Kansas troubles and in his report placed himself and the free-soil party on the side of right and justice, and by his acts arraigned the pro-slavery party against him—a very unpopular thing to do, but showing him to be on the side of the oppressed without regard to race or color. In 1861 we find Mr. Sherman elected to the United States Senate, taking the seat of Salmon P. Chase, who resigned to accept the appointment of Secretary of the United States Treasury. In those dark days stood John Sherman the colleague of Ben Wade. In a debate three days before the battle of Bull Run, Mr. Sherman said:

It is not the purpose of this war to subjugate a State or political community; but I will go as far as any other living man to uphold the Government against all rebellious citizens, whether there be one or many of them in a State. If nine-tenths of the people of any State rebel against the authority of this Government its physical power should be brought to reduce those citizens to subjection. The Government survives; and I have no doubt the State of South Carolina and the State of Florida and the State of Virginia will be represented on the floor long after the honorable Senators and I have filled the mission allotted to us.

Of course such utterances did not please the democracy. Mr. Sherman also voted for all measures to uphold the national supremacy and furnish men and munitions of war to put down the rebellion, which of course was distasteful to the democrats. The shock of war was ended; then came the counting of the cost financially. The manner of paying the national debt was the then all-absorbing topic of the nation's thought. Many strange fallacies were put forth by the democrats, who seemed as bent on retarding the honest payment of our dues as they were on resisting the payment of troops and the prosecution of the war. Mr. Sherman, as chairman of the Committee on Finance in the Senate, said in a speech before that body:

The honor of the country, the good faith of the nation, the interest of the laborer, of the rich and the poor, and of all classes demand that we should resume specie payment as early as possible and place all the obligations of the Government upon a solid basis of gold and silver coin.

Mr. Sherman has persisted in this belief and has accomplished resumption fully and completely, standing a Gibraltar of financial strength, against which the waves of rebellion and unsound currency have dashed with almost resistless fury.

This is the man you have reason to fear because he is pure and brave in the discharge of his duties, and cannot be intimidated by democratic bombast or rebel yells.

The gentleman from Tennessee took occasion to extol the power and glory and grandeur of the office of President of the United States, in all of which I heartily agree with him. To be born a king or emperor or czar is of itself a mere accident, but to be selected by the people to fill the high office of President of this great Nation, to be clothed for a time with power as great as that wielded by any potentate on earth, is an honor which must challenge the respect and admiration of mankind. When we confer on a citizen this great honor it must not be forgotten that with it we clothe him with great and grave responsibilities. To rule over forty millions of people, to administer the laws for the protection of all men in their rights, is at all times no easy task. But it strikes me that to have a representative of the people speak from his place on this floor, attacking and maligning the present incumbent of that great and dignified office and characterizing him as "a fraud," and characterizing the instrumentalities by which he was declared elected as corrupt, is, to say the least, in very bad taste, and not calculated to add much respect or dignity to legislative discussions. However, when we look behind these declarations we must remember that this is election year for members of Congress, and that such declarations were intended to make an impression of fealty to the prevailing sentiment of the people behind the man who uttered them. This people, I conscientiously believe, (I refer to the mass of the gentleman's constituency,) do not know that the electoral commission which considered all the facts in dispute in relation to the election, and declared Governor Hayes the legally elected President, was a measure of democratic origin and democratic hope until the declaration of 8 to 7 (=15) became a political puzzle which has wrought the democratic soul ever since.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I claim to be a liberal man, with charity toward all, and I cannot, therefore, wholly condemn the gentleman's speech, considering his stand-point. He could have had but two objects in its utterance at this time while considering such an insignificant measure as the bill before us. The first to make himself stout by pandering to the political bitterness of his constituency to the republican party, and, second, to inaugurate a Tilden boom by trying to revive the idea at this late day that Tilden was legally elected once and must be again. I have the kindest personal feelings toward the gentleman, but I take this occasion to assure him that while I do not doubt his return to this House "by a large majority," he will never live to see the day when such an effete specimen of moral depravity as Sam. J. Tilden will be elected President of this great nation. [Applause and laughter on republican side.]

One word more. As to his abuse of the Administration, so carefully prepared by weeks of study I have no doubt, I have only to say that from the President down to the lowest member of his Cabinet, if there be any gradation in rank, they will be remembered when Sam. Tilden is forgotten, except for his perfidious rascalities. The President and every member of his Cabinet are courteous gentlemen and manifest that to every man who approaches them without regard to their knowledge of their political antecedents. They are dignified, they go to church on Sundays and do other good things that some of their democratic predecessors did not do. Hayes's administration has been cautious and conservative, and if not very brilliant, it will be conceded it has been highly respectable. It has been well represented abroad, the pledged faith of the Government to its creditors has been maintained, and the national debt has been largely reduced. Under the financial management of John Sherman refunding operations have been successful, resumption of specie payments has been achieved not only without disturbing values, but, following in its train, has brought about a prosperity which the nation never knew before.

I thank the gentleman from New York, General RICHARDSON, for giving me so much of the short time allowed him in this debate, and I thank the House for its indulgence in listening to me so attentively. [Applause.]

During the delivery of the foregoing speech, when ten minutes had expired, Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York, yielded five minutes more, at the termination of which,

Mr. YOUNG, of Ohio, said: Will the gentleman indulge me a few minutes longer?

Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York. I cannot. My time is all promised.

Mr. YOUNG, of Ohio. Inasmuch as the gentleman to whom I am trying to reply was allowed to speak for two hours and more, I think this side should have full opportunity to respond.

Mr. KEIFER. How much more time does my colleague want?

Mr. YOUNG, of Ohio. About ten minutes.

Mr. KEIFER. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to finish his remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. TOWNSEND, of Illinois.) The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] asks unanimous consent that his colleague be allowed to finish his remarks, the additional time not to come out of the hour of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. RICHARDSON.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. YOUNG, of Ohio, resumed and concluded his remarks.

Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I had believed that this bill which so long vexed the extra session would not again be pressed upon the attention of the country and the House; for I thought that wisdom had surely been learned by the last spring's experience, and prudence by the last fall's defeat. I do not stand in my place to resist either by voice or vote any efforts that may be made to render it impossible to extort unwilling money from officers or employes of the Government for political or other purposes; but I do stand here to resist any and all efforts to deprive them of their inalienable right to use their own as they will, which is denied to them by the provisions of this bill.

It is a truism that in a government by the people the largest liberty should be granted the citizen to express his views on every subject, and thus we find in the Constitution of the United States and in the constitution of every State in the Union the provision guaranteeing the freedom of speech and freedom of the press; and it is declared in many of these instruments that the citizen may speak, write, and publish his views on every subject. So fully has this right been recognized, so sacredly has it been observed, that criminals, although deprived of the right to hold office, of the right of suffrage, of the right to sit on juries and to testify in the courts of justice, have never yet been denied the right to discuss political questions or to pay their money in furtherance of such discussion, or, indeed, in the furtherance of any political object, in the same manner and to the same extent as other men.

But this bill makes it unlawful for the officers and employes of this Government to pay for political information; makes it unlawful for them to pay for publishing their sentiments on any political subject, and debars them from engaging in political discussions or in political work, however innocent it may be, that require for their prosecution the expenditure of money. It seems to me that a measure could not be proposed or conceived more despotic in its character, more subversive of popular rights, more destructive to personal liberty, and less in harmony with the spirit of our institutions and the practice and traditions of our people.

It has been supposed that freemen owned what they earned (perhaps this is the distinction between them and slaves) and that they could not be deprived of their property or their right to enjoy it unless by due process of law; that their property could not be taken or destroyed even for a public purpose without compensation. But the value of property is in its use. Let its use be arbitrarily restricted, much or little, and to that extent is the property destroyed and the owner deprived of its enjoyment, without process and without compensation.

The money paid from the public funds to the individual who labored to earn it is no less his property than if paid to him for interest on United States bonds; and if the right resides in Congress to restrict the expenditure of money because it has lain in the vaults of the Treasury, ought it to be exercised in the one case and not in the other? To be sure, the employe of the Government is compelled to toil for his daily bread, and the bondholder may dress "in scarlet and fine linen and fare sumptuously every day," yet before the law they are equal; and if discrimination is to be made ought it to be in favor of capital, that can always take care of itself?

United States Senators and Representatives, as well as the officers of the Government, are the servants of the people. Their time and services belong to the people, and they are paid their salaries from the money of the people; and by parity of reasoning, if there is any reason or principle in this thing, they ought to be included within the provisions of this bill, and yet is there any gentleman on this floor who will claim that they are? It would be an interesting and instructive spectacle to behold a country postmaster, because he had contributed a few dimes toward the expense of a political gathering held in his neighborhood, driven from his office under and by virtue of a law made by men who may, with impunity, spend all they own, and all they can borrow, to be returned to Congress! Do despots make laws for themselves or for other men? Pass this bill, let it become a law, and the ex-confederate may still use his money and his shotgun, if reports are true, in behalf of the democratic party. And where is the democrat who will find fault with him? But two hundred thousand Union soldiers whose claims are now pending before the Commissioner of Pensions violate the law if they spend one cent for political purposes. Should they pay for a conveyance to carry a disabled comrade to the polls, they forfeit, in the terms of this bill, the pittance due them for wounds received and disease contracted in fighting a rebel crew, or starving in prison-pens. [Applause on the republican side.] And yet these are they who on a hundred battlefields testified their devotion to country, and but for whose efforts these halls would be silent to legislation; and they are now to be branded as malefactors by the laws of the very Government they preserved for exercising rights so freely enjoyed by traitors who by all the machinery of war attempted to destroy it. [Applause on the republican side.]

In this Congress, during this session, political disabilities under which our democratic friends labored, for indiscretions committed some time since, were removed, and not a voice was raised against it except on two occasions, and you all know that was against the form and not the substance of the application. And is it now proposed to impose disabilities and restrictions upon the officers and employes of this Government because they are republicans? Is that democratic reciprocity? [Laughter on the republican side.] Is that retrenchment? Is it reform? Or is the word not yet coined that fitly expresses this infamy?

This bill destroys rights of property, smothers free discussion, and makes it a crime for one class, who are neither convicted nor guilty of a wrong, to do that which is permissible and legitimate in every other citizen. Caucus may decree and Congress may enact this iniquity, but that which is more powerful than caucus or Congress, public opinion, will condemn it; for the intolerance which robs and crucifies the citizen because he holds a political faith not in harmony with that of the majority of this House will, and ought to be, execrated by good men everywhere. And the effort to enact this intolerance into law is a greater outrage than "bulldozing" or the attempted larceny of a State government. It will be received and accepted as another evidence that the democratic party will leave untried no means, however infamous, to inaugurate the rule of the minority.

Gentlemen, if you can afford to pass this bill, you have the power; the constitutional and moral right to do it I deny; but rest assured that upon an appeal to the sovereigns, to the people, they will demonstrate that they know how to reverse and revoke arbitrary decrees; that they know how, not by democratic methods—fraud and violence—but legitimately, to preserve their rights when they are thus wantonly assailed. [Applause on the republican side.]

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. My colleague [Mr. ERRETT] desires to submit some remarks on the pending bill; but as he is not well and his voice is weak, he desires they may be printed in the RECORD as part of the debates.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and it is ordered accordingly.

Mr. ERRETT. This bill proposes two enactments: first, to prevent assessments upon office-holders for political purposes; and, second, to prevent contributions for similar purposes. The first point has already been attained by executive order, prohibiting any assessment upon any one holding office under the General Government, and the provisions of this bill prohibiting such assessments are therefore unnecessary and uncalled for. The second point, as I undertake to show, is entirely beyond the legislative power of Congress, and is an invasion of private rights which no legislative body has the power to make while acting under a constitutional form of government.

An assessment upon an office-holder for political purposes is one thing, while a contribution from such office-holder for such purposes is an entirely different thing. One is an enforced levy, the other is a voluntary gift. Congress has a perfect right to say that office-holders under the laws of the United States shall not be levied upon or forced to pay sums for any purpose except that of taxation for the support of government; and if it were not that such levies are already prohibited there would be no objection to that part of this bill; but Congress has no right to say to any one, be he office-holder or otherwise, that he shall not do with his own money whatever seems best to his own judgment.

An office-holder is simply an employé of the Government. He is employed to do certain work for a certain compensation; and when he has done that work and received that compensation, the money he has received is his own, and in no way subject to the order or control of the Government. It is as much and as absolutely his own as a piece of land which he has bought or any piece of property he has acquired. Government can tax it for its own support; but it cannot say to him what he shall or shall not spend it for. It cannot say to him that he shall spend it for flour, or meat, or clothing; nor can it say to him that he shall not spend it for cigars, tobacco, snuff, liquor, or any other object of governmental dislike. He may lay out his weekly or monthly earnings all in buying cabbages, if he chooses. If he has religious preferences, he may give liberally to his church or to charitable funds; and if he has also political preferences, he has as good a right of his own free will to contribute of his means to help his party as he has to contribute to his church, his lodge, or his charitable society. The money being his, and his only, Congress cannot prescribe to him how he shall or shall not spend it. When the Government has paid him for his work its control over the money it has paid him is gone. He can keep it, or give it away, or spend it, as seems best to him, without regard to lamentations here or elsewhere.

The recognition of any other rule would be both ridiculous and tyrannical. When the Government goes into the market and buys food or clothing for the Army or for the Indians, or stone or building materials for its public buildings, it is supposed to get value for value when it has received what it has paid for. When the payment is complete, the buyer and seller stand on equal ground. The buyer can do as he pleases with what he has bought, and the seller has the same liberty with the proceeds of what has been sold. It would be ridiculous for any government to turn round to the seller and say: "You shall not use this money which is paid you for such and such a purpose." No government that I know of has ever attempted that style of folly; and certainly any free government that would try it would disgrace itself in so doing.

And if Government cannot do this with its customers from whom it buys materials, it cannot do it with those from whom it buys official labor. A clerk employed at $1,200 a year is supposed to render twelve hundred dollars' worth of service therefor; and when he has rendered it and been paid for it, he and the Government are equal. He has rendered service which the Government can use as it chooses; and he has been paid for it in money which he can use as he chooses. To assume any other ground is to assume the right of the Government to follow the money it pays, in every case, into every hand that receives it, and to say what it shall be spent for, and how, and when, and where, as well as what it shall not be spent for; and when that right is recognized, we have recognized a despotism as unlimited as the Russian autocracy.

Under the exercise of such a right Congress may, as it chooses, say to all the subordinates of Government that as the use of spirituous liquors is injurious to the body, debasing to the soul, and destructive of social order, no one of them shall, under heavy penalties, contribute his money to the purchase or use of spirituous liquors. It may also direct that as tobacco, in all its forms, is filthy and unhealthy, no Government employé shall use his means in buying or using it. And it is not beyond the bounds of probability that a Congress may hereafter be found willing to say to all office-holders that as some particular religious society is obnoxious in its doctrines or forms of worship, it shall be unlawful for any such office-holder to contribute anything to the support of that society. Certainly Congress has as much right to issue such prohibitions as it has to prohibit voluntary contributions to political parties.

Contributions for political purposes are not in themselves corrupt. A very large part of the expense of political parties is for perfectly legitimate purposes. A voluntary gift to party funds by an office-holder is not, therefore, necessarily to be regarded as corrupt or corrupting. Bad uses have undoubtedly been made of money in elections; but the contributions of office-holders, as a general rule, are used only for the legitimate expenses of political campaigns. There is no good reason why the office-holder, whose sympathies are enlisted in the success of his party, should not contribute, if he chooses, as freely to the triumph of his political principles as to the triumph of any good cause, provided he does not so contribute with a corrupt motive or for a bad purpose. If in so doing, and in so exercising his undoubted right, he commits any crime, he is fully answerable therefor, and it needs no such law as this to punish him.

The right of an office-holder to do as he pleases with his own is one hitherto unquestioned, and is to my mind unquestionable. His salary, when it is paid him, is his own, and Congress has no right to tell him what uses he shall or shall not make of it. The right of a man to be undisturbed in his house, his property, his person, and his papers is not more clearly apparent than his right to do as he likes with his own when it has come into his possession. Congress is right enough in saying to him: "You shall not be taxed for political purposes, nor shall you be forced to pay anything you do not want to for such purposes," because it is his right to be free from all such taxes and forced levies; but when he has been paid his hire for his labor his right to spend it in his own way is too clear for question. For these reasons I shall vote against this bill as an unwarranted and dangerous exercise of legislative power.

This bill is pressed by one party in Congress simply to cripple another party in its modes of action, and is, in fact, an attempt to secure a political advantage by act of Congress. The party seeking the passage of this bill has for many years resorted to both political assessments and political contributions; and if it should succeed in getting into power would be prompt, it may well be supposed, in repealing the bill, as it is contrary throughout to both its theory and practice. It is at best a mere political expedient, and, regarding it as such, I put my voice on record against it.

As an evidence of the prevalence of levying political contributions under a democratic administration, I append the following from the testimony of Cornelius Wendell, esq., before a congressional committee, March 22, 1860. Mr. Wendell was, under Buchanan's administration, the Public Printer, and he testified as follows:

Question. Have you been engaged in doing printing for the Government?

Answer. I have; for the past six years.

Q. Have you been called upon to contribute largely for political purposes?

A. I have been asked to contribute, and have voluntarily contributed whenever, in my judgment, it would be beneficial to the [democratic] party.

Q. Have you any knowledge of what amount you have contributed, annually, or for the time you have been engaged in Government work?

A. During the past four years I have, perhaps, contributed over $100,000 to what might be considered party purposes.

Q. Can you tell what amount you expended in the first district of Pennsylvania, Colonel Florence's district?

A. I could not tell exactly. My judgment is that it was rising $3,000.

Q. In whose hands was that money put for the first district? Was it all put in the hands of one person?

A. No, sir; if my memory serves me, I gave Mr. Horwitz—

Q. What is his first name?

A. I do not know; he was the editor of a German paper. I made a little arrangement with him to bring out our German citizens. I think he is now the editor of the Pennsylvania. I also put some money into the hands of Mr. Megargee.

Q. Which Megargee?

A. Sylvester J. Megargee; and, I think, some to Mr. Severns.

Q. What is his first name?

A. Joseph. My impression is that I put some in his hands.

Q. Did you furnish any directly to the member from that district?

A. I cannot say positively that I did furnish any to Colonel Florence; I may have given him some, but it does not occur to me now; I was paying him as the friend or agent of the Argus, a certain stipend out of the printing; but whether I gave him directly for election expenses, or whether it was to him as the agent of Mr. Severns of the Argus, in whom he took a warm interest, I cannot say.

Q. Do you think of any other person in that district to whom you furnished money?

A. I do not know.

Q. In what year was the most of that furnished?

A. The great bulk of it was furnished in 1858, at the last congressional election.

Q. Do your books show the amount you furnished in 1858 in that district?

A. No, sir; the charges are generally against Mr. Severns of the Argus; he was to have a certain percentage on certain Government printing to sustain his paper; in the amount I mentioned I include what I have paid to sustain papers to promulgate the word; what I have given individually for expenditures in different districts for printing, bringing up voters, bands of music and general election expenses, I could not tell where the money went to. I could say for instance, I put $500 in such a district; I could not follow it farther.

Q. Did you not pay more than that amount to the Argus alone?

A. Oh, I paid the Argus some seven thousand and odd dollars, including what might have been used for election expenses; how much that was I could not tell exactly; my idea is that about $2,000 of the money was expended in the district, and the balance for the paper; but I could not say positively about that.

Q. Was this in 1858?

A. Yes, sir; about $7,000 during that summer; the aggregate given to Mr. Severns was over $7,000 if my memory serves me. I have the figures.

Q. Who was it that made the arrangement by which he was to get that money?

A. Well, sir, my knowledge has been that it was through the President. I was doing all the printing here, and Mr. Rice, of the Pennsylvanian, claimed a portion of it, and then Mr. Severns did, and through friends, Mr. Bigler, Colonel Florence, and other friends, it was arranged that they should have such a percentage of the work, that I should pay them so much. The reason given was that the patronage of the city was lost owing to the triumph of the opposition, and the papers must be sustained in some way, and therefore they must have a portion of this work. I paid during the year, I think, to Mr. Rice between $11,000 and $12,000, and to Mr. Severns, including what I suppose was used for electioneering purposes, about $7,000.

From this it will be seen exactly how democratic administrations did when in power, and it is fair to infer that if we are ever to have another we shall have one that will direct political assessments to be levied and spent under arrangements made with a democratic President in proper person.

Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York. I now yield for twenty minutes to my colleague, [Mr. CROWLEY.]

Mr. CROWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I did not expect to mark my entrance into congressional life by speaking on a so-called civil-service bill, and were it not for certain provisions of the measure now under consideration I certainly should not occupy the attention of this House for one moment. I have not any set, prepared speech to deliver, but I have to say that the provisions of this bill are crude, ill-digested, impracticable of execution in many respects and unconstitutional in others. The Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, instead of confining itself in this bill to the civil service, extends its operations to the military and naval services. Instead of bringing in a measure which would look to restraining assessments and involuntary contributions of money from those in the civil service, it has reported a proposition which includes every officer, every clerk, every employé of the Government of the United States in all its branches and ramifications.

And what is this bill? It contains four sections, only three of which need to be commented upon. The first section provides that if any officer, clerk, or employé in the Government of the United States does, first, contribute or pay any money for political purposes; or, secondly, if he pays any assessment or percentage on the income or emolument of his salary; or, thirdly, if he gives, lends, or advances any money, property, or valuable thing with the intent, assent, permission, knowledge, or understanding that the same may be applied to political purposes, he shall be immediately dismissed from the office, clerkship, or employment he holds.

Mr. Speaker, under the Constitution and laws of the United States, the President is an officer of the Government of the United States; and if he makes a contribution for political purposes, who is going to dismiss him from his office? You might as well say that the officers, the clerks, and the employés of the Government shall not be permitted to make contributions to religious or charitable or literary societies as to say that they have not the constitutional right to make voluntary contributions of their own property and earnings to political or for political purposes.

Further, the third section of this act requires and says that if the head of a Department (which includes the heads of all the Executive Departments of the Government) shall come in possession of the knowledge that any officer, clerk, or employé of his Department has contributed money for political purposes, it shall be his duty to dismiss that clerk, that officer, or that employé; and if he fails to do it he shall be subject to indictment, to imprisonment, and to fine. What a provision! If the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service cannot hatch or engender any greater evidence of statesmanship than that they had better immediately abdicate their positions.

Why take the officers of the Treasury Department as an illustration. There are two Assistant Secretaries; there are Comptrollers and Auditors; there is the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and there are other officers therein, all appointed upon the nomination of the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Is there any power on the part of the Secretary of the Treasury to dismiss any one of these officers if such officer contributes money for political purposes? Suppose that one of his assistants should contribute money for political purposes and it should come to the knowledge of the Secretary of the Treasury and he should not dismiss him. You go before the grand jury of the District of Columbia under this bill, and if you can find a district attorney of any experience who would say, upon his honor and legal experience, to the grand jury that the Secretary of the Treasury was liable to indictment, and the Secretary should be indicted and brought in, what would be his plea to that indictment? He is asked, Are you the Secretary of the Treasury? Yes. Was your assistant an assistant in office? Yes. Did he contribute money for political purposes? Yes. Did it come to your knowledge? Yes. Then what have you to say why you should not be convicted because he has not been dismissed? Why, his plea would be there is no law of Congress that authorizes anybody but the President of the United States to remove an assistant secretary of the Treasury, and you cannot convict me for not doing that which I have not the right or the power under the law to do. Well, what more than that? Congress heretofore, in legislating upon the question of the tenure of office in 1867, by section 1767 of the Revised Statutes, provided that—

Every person holding any civil office to which he has been or hereafter may be appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall have become duly qualified to act therein, shall be entitled to hold such office during the term for which he was appointed, unless sooner removed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, or by the appointment, with the like advice and consent, of a successor in his place, except as herein otherwise provided.

And then, by section 1772, Congress in its wisdom has further provided that every removal, appointment, or employment made, had, or exercised contrary to sections 1767 and others thereafter following shall be treated as follows:

SEC. 1772. Every removal, appointment, or employment, made, had, or exercised, contrary to sections 1767 to 1770, inclusive, and the making, signing, sealing, countersigning, or issuing of any commission or letter of authority for or in respect to any such appointment or employment, shall be deemed a high misdemeanor, and every person guilty thereof shall be imprisoned not more than five years, or fined not more than $10,000, or both.

The person who attempts to remove such an officer so appointed shall upon conviction be subject to fine and imprisonment. And yet you make it the duty under this bill of the Secretary of the Treasury and all the heads of the various Executive Departments of the Government to do an act which the law does not allow them to do, and you propose to punish them if they do not do it, with an act upon our statute-books punishing them if they do remove certain officers so appointed.

I say this third section of this proposed bill is an absurdity and a contradiction. Now come to section 4. That section provides that if any person having a contract with the United States or any officer shall make any contributions for political purposes all his rights shall be forfeited. Why I appeal to lawyers on the other side of the House that you are running right in the teeth of the Constitution of the United States—that clause which says Congress shall not pass any bill in regard to attainder or ex post facto law. His rights have become fixed before he makes his contribution. They are his property and you cannot deprive him of them by any congressional enactment or law, but because he subsequently makes a political contribution you propose to deprive him of all his rights. Further than that, any person who has a contract three months before his contribution or three months after shall forfeit all his rights.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I say he shall forfeit "all his rights," because the section is so bunglingly drawn that it will bear this construction. It may be so argued with much propriety under the terms of this section, because the language is that any person who does these things "for any political purpose shall be deemed to have forfeited all rights," not limiting or circumscribing the forfeiture under such contract, but absolutely.

Mr. HERR. They might hang him.

Mr. CROWLEY. Then it goes further, and there is where comes in the argument of my colleague who represents in part the State of New York—it provides that every claimant against the United States who makes contributions shall in like manner forfeit his claim, and shall not have the right to recover or receive anything on the same.

If the House will pardon me for a moment, by way of illustration take the case of a person who applied for a pension. The application has not been granted. The claim is pending; and while it is pending if the claimant makes any contribution for political purposes he will forfeit his right to that pension.

Then your bill makes no provision as to how these forfeitures shall be determined, as to whether a man's property shall be taken by judicial proceedings or otherwise. There is no provision whatever made as to that.

Mr. Speaker, I have heard the argument advanced upon this floor by different gentlemen that Congress is usurping the rights of States; that we of the National Government are consolidating the powers of the Government and taking away rights which the States should possess and ought to possess under the Constitution. Let me say to my political friends on the other side of the House, if this is not one of the most gigantic strides in that direction, I fail to know what could be considered as such. Take the State of New York. Let us suppose that some eminent citizen, some eminent democrat if you please, say Mr. Seymour, is running for the office of governor at a time we elect no presidential electors, when we elect no Representatives in Congress, when we elect no members of the Legislature who shall take part in the election of a Senator to represent the State of New York in the Senate of the United States? He makes a contribution for political purposes, which under the laws of the State of New York he may do, because the laws of the State of New York make it legitimate to make contributions to bring the halt and the blind and the sick to the polls, or to make contributions for the printing of tickets, for the circulation of documents, and for holding of public meetings. Mr. Seymour has a contract while thus running, and makes a contribution for political purposes, to be used wholly in the State of New York, and legitimately. You say by this bill that in such a case where the Government of the United States is not interested at all he shall forfeit all his rights under that contract. I say that such legislation as this is unworthy the wisdom of an American Congress. I do not put it on republican or democratic grounds. But I say your bill is crude; it is ill-digested; it is impossible to execute, and it is unconstitutional.

If you pass the bill I do not believe it will ever be signed. Gentlemen here know very well that I have no authority whatever to speak for the Executive in any respect; but I do not believe if this law were passed it would ever receive the Executive signature. And if it did, it would go upon the statute-book like many other high-sounding laws which have gone upon the statute-books of the National Government and of the respective State governments and there remain a dead letter.

If the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service want to do something in the interest of civil-service reform let them report a bill to this House which will open admissions into and promotions in the civil service to competition, so that it may be open to all political parties and persons. Let the bill appoint a commission which shall be independent of party so far as you can make it under our Constitution and form of government, who shall have the supervision and arrangement of the rules in regard to the civil service of the Government of the United States. Then say that no officer or employé of the Government shall be compelled to pay political assessments or involuntary contributions; and I will go as far as any member on the floor to support a bill of that kind. But I should consider I was not representing the will of my constituents, I should consider that I was not acting in obedience to public policy, I should consider that I was not acting in accordance with the Constitution of the United States, if I were to give my assent to a law of this character.

I respectfully ask the gentleman having charge of this bill on the other side of the House to consider some of these legal propositions in connection with the first, second, and third sections to see whether this bill is constitutional if you pass it. [Applause.]

Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York. How much time have I left?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Eight minutes.

Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York. I give one minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. CLAFLIN.]

Mr. CLAFLIN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the first section by striking out in the third line the word "employé" and inserting "any member of Congress or other person receiving a salary from." In the twelfth line strike out the word "employés" and insert the words "members of Congress or persons receiving salaries." And add to the section after the word "hold" the words "and shall be ineligible to any office of honor or emolument for two years thereafter under the United States Government."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Massachusetts offers that amendment simply for the information of the House.

Mr. CLAFLIN. I offer it that it may be considered pending.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is not in order now. It can only be offered for information at present.

Mr. GARFIELD. There is no previous question pending now to prevent the amendment being offered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understood that the amendment was read at the present time simply for information.

Mr. GARFIELD. It is offered in good faith.

Mr. CLAFLIN. I offered it to be voted on at the proper time.

Mr. WHITE. If that is the case, then I offer an amendment to come in at the end of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. To whom does the gentlemen from New York [Mr. RICHARDSON] yield?

Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. HAYES.]

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, the bill now before the House contains so much that is palpably absurd and nonsensical that it ought not to receive a moment's attention by the members of this body, but should be promptly condemned without a hearing. The fact that a bill is reported favorably by the able Committee on Civil Service Reform ought, under ordinary circumstances, to give it some claim to our attention, but so glaring are the defects of this bill that even the indorsement of a majority of this committee cannot give it sufficient character or respectability to entitle it to any consideration at our hands. Yet, as certain gentlemen on the other side seem to think the bill a good one and are determined to press it to a vote, I desire to trespass upon the time of the House for a few moments while I point out some of the defects of the bill and state some reasons why it should not pass.

THE OBJECT OF THE BILL.

The main object of the bill, which is clearly set forth in the first section, is to prevent the various officers of the United States Government and the clerks and employés in the various departments of that Government from making any contributions of money or any other valuable thing to assist in carrying on a political campaign. Now, sir, a moment's consideration will show not only how ridiculous such a proposition is, but that Congress has no right to interfere in such a matter. Here it is proposed that the United States shall by legal enactment determine how the individual citizen may and how he may not dispose of what he has earned by his labor and what belongs to him as his individual property. The proposition is for the American Congress to constitute itself the guardian of the individual citizen and the director in the use and disposition of his property. A moment's thought will show that this is reversing the whole theory and practice of our Government during all the years of the past. Thus far in the history of this Government we as a people have believed in the doctrine that the individual citizen should have the utmost liberty in managing his own private affairs. We have maintained the "rights of property" as among our dearest rights. We have supposed that when a person honestly earned a dollar he had the right to dispose of it as he thought best. But it appears that in all this we have been laboring under a mistake. This new democratic doctrine informs us that the individual citizen has not the right to dispose of his own property, but must depend upon Congress to direct him in the matter.

A HIGH-HANDED OUTRAGE.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we have heard much during the past few years about the republican party disregarding the rights of the people, but, sir, I defy any democrat to point to a single instance where that party has ever even hinted at such a high-handed outrage as this—such a gross infringement upon the rights of citizenship. I venture the assertion that never before in all our history as a government was such an outrageous proposition as this seriously made by any man of average common sense. Why, sir, has it come to this, that what a citizen of this Government honestly earns by hard labor is not his to use as he sees fit? Has it come to this, that when an officer of this Government or a clerk in any of the governmental Departments walks up and draws his money at the end of each month as pay for services rendered the Government, he is to be told that he has not the control of that money, but must look to a democratic Congress to tell him what disposition he must make of it? Such an idea is abhorrent to the sense of personal right which is possessed by every American citizen, and yet this is just what is proposed by the bill now under consideration. If Congress has a right to say that an officer of this Government shall not spend a portion of his money for political purposes, it has the same right to say that he shall not spend it for house-rent, for a new coat, for a dress for his wife, for provisions for his family, or for helping forward any benevolent enterprise. There is the same principle involved in the one case as in the other cases. But will this democratic Congress dare to bring forward a bill prohibiting the officers and employés of the Government from spending their money for house-rent, clothing, provisions, and benevolent purposes? They will scarcely do this, and yet they not only bring forward this bill, but urge its passage, knowing that it has no more right back of it than such a bill as I have suggested would have.

A TRUE INTERPRETATION OF THE BILL.

But, sir, I wish to call the attention of the House to section 2 of this bill. This section is certainly a master-stroke of legislative ability. In this section this democratic Congress, in clear and decided tones, announces to the head of each Department of this Government that he must get printed and have posted up in each room and upon each door of his Department an order, telling the employés of that Department that they are absolutely forbidden to contribute any money or other valuable thing for campaign purposes under penalty of being turned out of their places in case they do so contribute. Now, what is the meaning of all this? Simply that this democratic Congress is assuming powers which it does not possess. It is striking a death-blow at some of the dearest rights of American citizenship. Correctly interpreted this order would read thus:

"To the officers and employés of the United States Government: Gentlemen, as you are not endowed with sufficient ability to manage your own affairs and control your own property, we, the democratic majority of the Forty-sixth Congress, have constituted ourselves your guardians. For years our hearts have yearned over you, longing to do you good, but never have we been able to make a practical manifestation of our good-will toward you until now. Being in full possession of each House of Congress, we have taken this method to demonstrate to you that we are deeply interested in your welfare. We have felt for some time that you were incompetent to manage your own affairs, and so we have kindly stepped in to manage them for you. As you read this order which we have caused to be posted up in a conspicuous place in your room, bear in mind that hereafter you are to spend your money only as we shall direct. This may seem to you to be an infringement of your personal rights, but it is not. We believe that your highest good demands this course, and we trust you will readily and willingly submit to our control. We do not like to threaten, (for we always aim to govern through love rather than fear,) yet if you do not see fit to obey us in all these respects and allow us to determine how you shall and how you shall not spend your money, we shall take occasion to dismiss you from the position you now hold and, if possible, put some good democrat in your place."

Now, Mr. Speaker, I submit to any sensible man if this is not a fair interpretation of this bill, brought in here with such a great flourish of trumpets by the gentleman from Indiana, chairman of the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service?

The idea sought to be enacted into law by the passage of this bill is monstrous—abhorrent to every American citizen who has a true conception of his personal rights. Why should the man who happens to hold a Government office be alone singled out and forbidden to contribute of his money to campaign purposes? Has not he as much interest in good government as any other citizen? If he hold political views in harmony with those of a certain political party, is he not just as much interested as any other citizen in seeing those views disseminated and the party which advocates them placed in power? Why, sir, if this democratic Congress has the right to say that a Government officer or employé shall not contribute money for campaign purposes, it has the right to say that any and every citizen shall not. Would it not be well, then, for the able Committee on Civil-Service Reform to bring in a bill prohibiting all contributions of money or other valuable thing for campaign purposes? Such a bill would strike at the root of the matter and would affect all classes of citizens alike.

A LITTLE CHEAP POLITICAL CAPITAL.

But, sir, what is the object which the friends of this bill have in view in urging its passage? There can be but one object, and that is to manufacture a little cheap party capital. Ever since the democrats obtained control of the lower House of Congress six years ago, they have kept up a continuous howl about civil-service reform. During the campaign of 1874 they proclaimed in every democratic newspaper in the land, from every stump, and at every corner grocery that the republican party was most outrageously corrupt, that the Government at Washington in all its Departments was being run in the interest of all sorts of rings and jobbers and rascals, and that the people of the country were being robbed of millions of dollars every year by republican officials. They said to the people, "If you will again intrust us with power we will put an end to this robbery and rascality and will give you an honest administration." Well, the people listened to them and gave them control of this House. They came to Washington determined to expose republican rascality and to institute a thorough reform in all Departments of the Government. Have they done this? They certainly have worked hard in that direction. For five years they have labored day and night through their committees, which have ransacked every nook and corner of every Department and bureau of the Government to detect some republican crookedness and rascality, something that they could hold up to the people as proof of their many and oft-repeated assertions that the republican party was corrupt. But thus far that "something" has not been discovered. Their numerous, persistent, and basely partisan investigations have only served to show the people that the republican party is to-day what it always has been, a party characterized by the strictest honesty and the bitterest hatred of every species of rascality.

These investigations have shown that the republican party has managed our governmental affairs so ably, economically, and honestly that there was nothing left for the democrats to reform. This, of course, leaves the democrats in a sad predicament. They started out to prove two things—first, that the republican party was corrupt; and second, that the democracy were reformers of the most pronounced and genuine kind. As yet they have proven neither, and this fact worries them exceedingly. In the first direction they have met with so little success that they have about given it up; but they are terribly anxious, in view of their loud professions and for the sake of their party in the coming presidential campaign, to do something to convince the people that they are practical reformers. For months they have been studying over the question how best to accomplish this end; and at last this bill is brought forward, and the gentlemen on the other side fondly imagine that it is just the thing they want to help them out of their difficulty. "Is it not proof sufficient that we are in earnest in our professions of reform," they innocently ask, "when we favor such a bill as this? We can show up the evil of political contributions, and, although we may not be able to get sufficient out of the matter to prove the republican party corrupt, we can denounce the practice, endeavor to put a stop to it, and thus demonstrate to the people our honesty in making such loud professions." This is one great reason why this bill is brought in here and its passage urged with such persistency and vigor.

A WEAK ATTEMPT TO CRIPPLE THE REPUBLICAN PARTY.

But, sir, there is another reason why this bill is brought forward just at this time. We are approaching an important presidential election, and the gentlemen on the other side are urging the passage of this bill, hoping that, if they can get it enacted into law, it will greatly damage the republican prospects of success at that election. The measure, in fact, is only one of their many weak attempts to cripple the republican party. It is a notorious fact, that ever since the democrats obtained control of this House in the Forty-fourth Congress they have spent the greater portion of their time in scheming and plotting to break down the republican party. For this they have labored by day and planned by night. For this they have caucused and counseled both in season and out of season. For this they have charged us with corruption and rascality, and to bolster up their charges have invented all sorts of stories which they themselves knew had no foundation in fact. They have organized investigation after investigation and have gone into every bureau and department of the Government, fondly hoping to find something rascally and dishonest in our management of public business which they could hold up to the people in proof of the many false and infamous charges they had brought against us. They created the Potter committee and sent it forth with the earnest expectation that it would bring to light some outrageous frauds that we had committed during the campaign of 1876 which they could use against us in 1880. They sought to tear from the statute-books the election laws that we had enacted to prevent fraud at the ballot-box so that by illegal voting, repeating, and stuffing ballot-boxes, they might be enabled to secure a President in 1880. And now, having failed most ingloriously in all these vile and infamous schemes, they bring forward this bill, hoping to pass it and thus cut off a portion of our supplies for carrying on the coming campaign.

A BILL BEFITTING THE DEMOCRACY.

They say that the President, some of his Secretaries, and some of the clerks in the Departments have ventured to pay a few dollars each into the republican campaign fund on various occasions, and this they declare must be stopped at once and forever. None of these men shall hereafter be allowed to make a voluntary contribution of this kind under any circumstances. According to this modern democratic doctrine the money that a man earns by the labor of his hands or the sweat of his brow is not his. He has no right to put his hand into his pocket and pay it out as he sees fit, but must rely upon a democratic Congress to tell him how he may spend it. Such a proposition is infamous. This bill which contains it is a fitting finale to the many detestable schemes that have been concocted by democratic brains during the last few years. It is such a bill as we might expect a life-long democrat to get up and the democratic party to champion. Its language is such as befits a democrat, and it is characterized by a spirit highly becoming the degenerate democracy of these latter days. What better can we expect from a party that has always been most bitterly opposed to free speech, a free press, and a free ballot? A party that will stamp out free discussion wherever it has the power; that will shoot down in cold blood any man who dares to step out and oppose democracy; that will drive men from the polls, or murder them, unless they will vote the democratic ticket, is a fit party to champion such a measure as this. Yes, gentlemen, this bill is thoroughly democratic in both letter and spirit. Go on and make it a law if you will; but bear in mind that all the infamy which attaches to such unjust legislation will rest upon your shoulders. Bear in mind that if this measure gets upon our statute-books at all it will get there by means of democratic votes alone, and, like many other democratic laws, will stand there only to proclaim the consummate folly and shame of the democratic party.

WHY DID NOT THE DEMOCRACY PRACTICE REFORM WHEN IN POWER?

But, Mr. Speaker, the question naturally arises why it is that the democracy have become so thoroughly alarmed in regard to this matter of political contributions just at this time? Why have they never manifested any interest in the matter before? If it is such a great evil for a clerk in one of the Departments to pay a few dollars into a campaign fund, why have not these gentlemen discovered it long ere this? If political contributions on the part of Government officers and employés have such a demoralizing and corrupting influence upon the civil service of the country as democrats now declare they have, why did not the democracy wake up to the fact when they were in full control of all departments of the Government, and go to work and enact a law to prevent them? Why, sir, the great democratic party held full sway in this country for many long years, but did any one ever hear of a democrat ever even hinting that there was anything wrong in political contributions or bringing forward a bill to put a stop to them? It is a notorious fact that the democracy always have acted upon the principle that to the victors belong the spoils, and that those of their party who were fortunate enough to get the offices should foot the bills for campaign purposes. There was no deviation from this principle during all the thirty years that the democracy were in power. To show more clearly what was the democratic practice in regard to political contributions, or rather assessments, for such they were under democratic rule, I quote from the report of the Covode committee in regard to the campaigns of 1856 and 1858. The first testimony that I shall refer to is that of Isaac West, who was inspector in the custom-house at Philadelphia in 1856. His testimony will be found on page 23 of the report, from which I take the following:

Testimony from Covode report.

Question. Were you there (in custom-house at Philadelphia) at the time of the election of 1856, when Mr. Buchanan was elected?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Q. What do you know about moneys being raised off the employés of the custom-house on that occasion?

A. There was a certain tax levied upon the persons connected with the custom-house.

Q. What amount on each person?

A. A certain percentage. On a person receiving $1,095 a year, I think the tax for the presidential election was from $30 to $33.

Q. What about the other election?

A. The amount was not so great for the State election.

Q. How much was that?

A. That I do not recollect. It strikes me that it was from $5 to $7; something like that.

Q. The two, then, would amount to in the neighborhood of $40?

A. Yes, sir; in that neighborhood.

Q. Did all the employés pay?

A. I never knew one to refuse.

Q. What was the impression—that it was rather obligatory upon them to pay?

A. That seemed to be the impression.

The testimony of George Plitt on the same page is to the same effect:

Question. Did you know anything about a portion of this money being raised off the employés of the Government in Philadelphia in the custom-house and elsewhere?

Answer. Well, I think there was at that time, but I am not certain; that is our general custom.

On page 556, &c., will be found the testimony of B. F. Slocumb, from which I take the following:

Question. Are you a clerk in the General Land Office?

Answer. I am, sir.

Q. Do you know of any assessment of money upon the clerks and other employes of the General Land Office for political purposes?

A. Well, sir, I remember myself to have contributed money on one or two occasions—a small amount.

Q. Do you or not know that all the clerks were assessed for political purposes?

A. I do not know whether you would call it an assessment or not. There was a sort of subscription made by the clerks in the Land Office, for political purposes, I suppose.

Q. How and in what manner were these assessments made—in proportion to their salaries or otherwise?

A. I do not know whether it was with regard to salaries or not.

Q. Well, what amount of percentage was the contribution?

A. I do not know exactly. I think I was receiving at the time a fourteen-hundred-dollar salary, and the amount I paid was $2.50.

Further on Mr. Slocumb states that he was in the same office in 1856, and contributed money that year for political purposes.

From the testimony of J. L. Cramer, which appears on page 560 and onward, I take the following:

Question. Are you a clerk in the General Land Office?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know of any assessments made upon the clerks or employes there for political purposes?

A. I have asked the gentlemen—a portion of them—to contribute for that purpose.

Q. How was that contribution made? Was it a certain percentage on the salary?

A. In one instance it was; a small per cent. was asked of the gentlemen.

Q. Do you recollect what per cent. it was that was levied that year?

A. I can only tell from my own proportion. My recollection is that I paid $3.20 on a salary of $1,000.

Q. Did you collect in 1858?

A. I collected on two occasions; it strikes me that one was in 1856 and the other was in 1858.

Q. Do you know for what State or for what purpose that money was collected either in 1856 or in 1858?

A. I think the money in 1856 was collected to be appropriated to pay some balance to be supplied in Pennsylvania.

Q. By whose authority was it done? Who was it that requested or directed you to perform this duty?

A. I took the paper around at the request of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Q. Did all the clerks pay their assessments?

A. Nearly all that I called upon. I believe there were but one or two exceptions.

Following the testimony already given is the testimony of Mr. Vedder and Mr. Lucas, clerks in the Land Office, to the same effect.

On page 572, and following, I find the testimony of Stephen G. Dodge, as follows:

Question. Can you give any information as to the manner of raising money in that (the Pension) Department for political purposes?

Answer. I know that a contribution was raised in the Pension Office, I think it was in 1856, to aid the administration party in the State of Maryland.

Q. To what did your contributions or assessments on you for that year (1858) amount?

A. It amounted to $30 on the Lecompton business.

Q. Anything for elections?

A. For the election in Maryland—I think it was the Baltimore City election—it was $5.

Q. And how much for the subscription to the "Constitution"?

A. That was $6.

That James Buchanan, democratic President of the United States, knew all about these assessments, and approved of this method of raising money for campaign purposes, appears from the following testimony of Cornelius Wendell, page 576:

CORNELIUS WENDELL.

Question. I wish to ask you a few further questions concerning the elections in Pennsylvania. When you had interviews with Mr. Buchanan previous to the election in Pennsylvania in 1858, did you not freely talk with him in regard to the use of money to carry certain districts?

Answer. I talked to him freely as to the use of money in elections; I do not remember as to any specific districts; I talked about the expenses of elections generally, the large amounts used; yes, sir.

Q. Did you not tell him that you were compelled to use large amounts of money?

A. I cannot say that I was compelled.

Q. That you were using large amounts of money?

A. He was cognizant of the fact that I contributed largely for elections.

Q. What was the character of the several letters from Pennsylvania that he read you portions of during one of the interviews you had with him about carrying certain districts? How was it to be done?

A. I think most of them wanted material aid; they made suggestions as to aid required in different districts generally, and the political affairs of their several districts.

Q. Did Mr. Buchanan object to carrying elections or helping to carry them in that way?

A. Never to me.

Now, sir, this testimony shows what the democratic practice was in regard to political assessments when the democracy were in power in this country, and have we any evidence that they would not repeat this practice if they were given power again? Have they given us any proof that they have changed in any particular for the better since 1856? I think not. They are no more of a reform party to-day than they were then. They cry "reform" with the utmost vigor, but they are careful never to practice it. Why, sir, since this bill was reported to this House the democratic employes both of this House and the Senate have been called upon to contribute, and have contributed, to the campaign funds of the democratic party. That was during the important campaign in Ohio, and these men were called upon to help that campaign along after the regular old democratic style.

PREACH ONE THING AND PRACTICE ANOTHER.

How is this, I ask, for a party that makes such loud assertions in condemnation of political contributions? We find gentlemen on the other side rallying to the support of this bill, indorsing its principles and urging its passage with all the vigor and eloquence they can command, and yet they turn right around while doing these things and violate every principle of the bill. On this floor they advocate one thing, while outside they greedily rush to the practice of the opposite. They stand up here and condemn what we republicans do, and yet turn right around and do the same thing. Oh, democracy, thy other name is humbug!

But, sir, no one who is familiar with the history of the democratic party is surprised at their action in this matter. It is only what might be expected. In fact, we should all be disappointed if that party did not act in this matter with its usual inconsistency. It is to-day, and has been for years, the habit of the democracy to preach one thing and practice another. There never was a party in the country that is such a model as to precept or such a failure as to example. There is not a virtue in the whole catalogue that it has not claimed as its own, while there is not a vice that it has not unhesitatingly practiced. For fear some of the gentlemen on the other side may have short memories, I invite their attention to the following list:

They have cried reform, while they have been practicing all sorts of rascality. They have declared in favor of economy, while they have indulged in the most inexcusable extravagance. They have announced themselves in favor of liberty, while they have upheld the vilest and most degrading system of slavery that ever cursed the earth. They have prated about the necessity of educating the individual citizen, while by law they have made it a high crime to teach a human being to read. They have advocated free speech and a free press, while they have crushed out both without the least hesitation. They have talked loudly about the rights of the individual citizen, and yet they have never hesitated to violate those rights whenever it suited their convenience. They have waxed eloquent over the poor laboring-man, while they have oppressed labor and degraded the laboring-man. They have always proclaimed themselves as the special defenders and guardians of the Constitution, and yet they have not hesitated to violate the Constitution whenever it suited their purpose. They have paraded their honesty before the country, while their actions have shown them to be destitute of every honest principle. They have talked long and loud about the necessity of a free and honest ballot, and yet they have forged thousands upon thousands of fraudulent naturalization papers, voted thousands upon thousands of illegal voters, reduced republican majorities to minorities by bulldozing, repeating, tissue ballots, and false counts; driven legal voters by hundreds from the polls; shot down men like dogs because they refused to vote the democratic ticket; stolen scores of republican congressional districts by force and fraud, and robbed republican majorities of representation on this floor by turning their legally-elected Representatives out of their seats and giving those seats to democrats who had no shadow of a right to them. In fact, there is not one single sound political principle that they have not advocated in word while they have violated it in practice. And this is democracy not only as it was, but as it is. Gentlemen on the other side declare it wrong for Government officers and employes to make contributions to campaign funds, and even urge the passage of a bill forbidding such contributions, and yet while doing this they call upon the Government employes in this building to come forward with their money and assist in helping forward the democratic campaign in Ohio. Such gross inconsistency no one would expect to see manifested in the actions of any party but the democratic party.

STOP ALL POLITICAL ASSESSMENTS.

But, Mr. Speaker, if the officers and employes of the National Government should be prohibited from making contributions to campaign funds, why should not the same prohibition be made in regard to the officers and employes of a State government? If the principle is right in one case, it is certainly right in the other. And yet I will venture to assert that not a single democrat on this floor was ever known to advocate the application of this principle to State officers and employes. It is, as every one knows, a universal custom with both democrats and republicans to call upon not only their State, but their county and municipal officers, to assist in defraying the expenses of their political campaigns. If democrats are opposed to this custom, why have they not made their opposition manifest in the States, counties, and cities where they have resided? Many of the gentlemen on the other side who favor this bill have been members of legislative bodies in States where the democrats had full control, not only of the Legislature but of all the State offices, and yet I venture to say that not one of them in his capacity as a State legislator ever brought forward a measure forbidding political contributions on the part of State and county officers, or even hinted by word or act that he was in favor of such a measure. If there is one, let him indicate it now or forever after hold his peace. No, sir, there is none. Even the distinguished gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MCLANE] who made such a forcible speech in favor of this bill near the close of the extra session last summer is silent. What, then, are we to conclude?

Not that the gentlemen on this floor, who support this measure, support it because at heart they believe in it, but because they imagine that if they can make it a law they will be enabled thereby to cripple the republican party in the presidential campaign of this year. They imagine that, if they can stop the political contributions on the part of Government officers and employes, the republican party will be greatly embarrassed for want of funds, and that Tilden, or some other man, with his barrel, will thus be enabled to win in the presidential race. But I would advise these gentlemen not to lay any such flattering unction to their souls. You may pass this bill and as many more similar ones as you like, but you will scarcely be able to make a free track over which your candidate may ride into the presidential office. The republican party will put its candidate in the field, will have all the money necessary to fight his battles, will rally with enthusiasm and determination to his support, and will elect him, notwithstanding all your efforts to cut off our supplies, to make free fraud upon the ballot-box lawful by repealing the election laws, and to prevent the use of the Army to keep bulldozers, rifle-clubs, red-shirts, white-liners, and other armed and lawless democratic organizations from interfering with the right of American citizens to vote.

NO PROOF OF REPUBLICAN CORRUPTION.

Having said this much, sir, I now wish to say a few words in reply to what the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSE] said in his speech of yesterday. That gentleman seems to proceed upon the idea that the republican party is utterly corrupt and dishonest, while the democratic party is a party whose honesty is beyond question and whose virtue is as bright as the new-fallen snow. But, sir, if the republican party is so fearfully corrupt as the gentleman asserts, why is it that the democrats have never been able to lay their hands upon that corruption and expose it? I am aware, sir, that for the last dozen years there has been a perfect horde of democrats dogging the steps of the republican party and howling, as loudly and fiercely as possible, about republican corruption and rascality, but I am also aware that not in any one single instance have they proven that the republican party was corrupt or dishonest. Every gentleman on this floor will remember that the democracy have come before us every campaign since the war, crying out against republican extravagance, dishonesty, and unwarranted expenditure of the people's money. To listen to their cry, one would think that all the bummers, dead-beats, and thieves in the country had fled from the democratic fold and were safely housed with the republicans, controlling the policy of our party and running it for their particular benefit. I admit that there have been corrupt men in our party. Every party which is in power any length of time attracts to itself a class of men who are without principle and who sometimes manage to crowd themselves into the front rank. But if such men have appeared in our party, these three things can be said of them: First, they have come to us from the democratic party; second, their rascalities have always been exposed by us as soon as they were discovered; and, third, as soon as their rascalities were made known, they have gone back to the democracy and begun to prate about republican corruption and dishonesty.

Now, what I want to say is, that the republican party is not responsible for the rascality of any one of its members unless it indorses that rascality, and I defy any one to point to a single instance where it has indorsed such rascality. The fact is, our party has been the only party that this country ever had which has dared to take hold of rascality in its own ranks and weed it out. In this particular it differs widely from the democracy, who instead of exposing and punishing corruption in their own ranks always attempt to cover it up. In all the many years of their power in this country, who ever heard of their punishing a single one of the many thieves and rascals who served them in an official capacity. Their policy has always been to conceal the misdemeanors of democratic officials for fear exposure would injure their party. The republican party, on the contrary, while laboring to give the people an honest and efficient Government, has always been willing that the acts of its officials should be known and read of all men. During the campaign of 1872 there were some very grave charges made against republican officials, and as soon as the Congress that was elected that year assembled the republican majority went to work to investigate these charges. They looked into the Credit Mobilier matter and found that Mr. Ames, republican, and Mr. Brooks, democrat, both leading members of the House, were mixed up in that huge swindle, and these two men were severely censured. They also investigated the War and Navy Departments where everything was found satisfactory. A committee, having on it two democrats, looked into the Treasury Department and after a thorough investigation brought in a unanimous report that they could not find even a "minor irregularity" there.

INVESTIGATIONS OF THE FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

But notwithstanding this clear record of our party, the democrats came into the Forty-fourth Congress crying "Economy and reform," and determined to do all they possibly could to detect some irregularity among republican officials. Starting out with the assumption that everything connected with our administration was corrupt, they began a system of investigations, with a view of disparaging republican rule and republican officials, which was so basely partisan and unjust that no party but the democratic party would ever have undertaken it. The confederate majority in the House were anxious to elect a President in 1876, and to help them in this great work they needed a little party capital. Hence, as soon as they had organized the House in December, 1875, they set their committees to work investigating republican officials. In their wild hunt for republican rascality all important legislation for the good of the country was neglected. The question of funding the national debt, the cheap-transportation question, the currency question, the tariff question, and many other questions vital to the industries and prosperity of the country were all passed by as of no consequence in comparison with the great question of manufacturing a little capital that would assist the democracy in electing a President. To make their work thorough no less than eighty-three resolutions of investigation were adopted, besides a legion of resolutions making inquires of the various Departments. Twenty-five standing committees and eight select committees organized themselves into scandal-making machines and raked all the highways and byways ever trod by a republican official, to find, if possible, some bit of crookedness that could be used against our party. Every man we had kicked out of office for incompetency or dishonesty, every cashiered officer of the Army, and every nameless vagabond they could reach was invited, solicited, and urged to come forward and testify as to what he knew about republican corruption.

"Partly for revenge, partly for witness fees, and partly for cheap notoriety, these birds of evil omen flocked to the Capitol, thronged the corridors, took possession of the committee-rooms and the committees, prompted questions, invented answers, retailed old scandals picked up second-hand as the dead refuse of the street, to be eagerly swallowed by the many democratic mouths that stood agape for such carrion food. The common rights of individual citizens were grossly violated, the sanctity of private correspondence outraged, telegraphic messages unlawfully forced from their proper keepers, citizens imprisoned by order of the democratic House for no valid reason, and all the rights of private individuals secured by the Constitution trampled down by these democratic hunters after republican rascalities. Secret sessions of the committees were held, parties charged with wrong-doing kept in ignorance, and the poor privilege granted to all criminals of an open investigation and of meeting witnesses face to face was denied." And after eight months spent in hunting for republican rascality and republican knaves, what did they find? Our party had been everywhere arraigned before the great tribunal of the people by these self-styled "reformers," and now subjected to such an investigation as only partisan hatred could inspire, what was the result? Not a single dollar of the people's money stolen and not a single republican official shown to be a defaulter.

INVESTIGATIONS OF THE FORTY-FIFTH CONGRESS.

But notwithstanding all this fruitless effort, this neglect of public business, and this useless expenditure of money, the House of the Forty-fifth Congress, as soon as it was organized in the fall of 1877, plunged into the investigating business as recklessly as its predecessor had done. Under a sweeping resolution introduced by Mr. Glover, of Missouri, and passed, a horde of investigators was turned loose upon the various Departments, to interfere with public business, insult their heads and scandalize the nation by an assumption of frauds that had no existence except in the brain of some democratic partisan. It is well-known that in the House of Representatives there are regular standing committees on expenditures in the State, Treasury, War, Navy, Post-Office, and Interior Departments, on Public Buildings, and in the Department of Justice, besides a Committee on Public Expenditures. Each one of these committees is charged by law with the duty of inspecting affairs in its own Department, and this ought to be sufficient. But this Glover resolution, starting out with the assumption that all these Departments were perfect cess-pools of corruption, instructed these committees to proceed at once to investigate them to ascertain if some crookedness could not be discovered. When this resolution came up in the House, it was thought best by the republicans to have it amended, and accordingly Mr. Hale offered an amendment to the effect that before the committee proceed to investigate any Department "the charges upon which such investigation is based shall be presented to the House in writing, with the names of such officers as are charged with improper or unlawful proceedings and a particular statement of the charges against them," said charges to be signed by one or more members of the House, stating that he or they believe the charges to be true. But this amendment was promptly voted down. The democrats could not present specific charges against any particular officer in any of the Departments. They had heard some fellow, who had been kicked out of some Department for incompetency or rascality, say that he believed there was something wrong in that Department, and upon such an unreliable statement they set their committees to work to see whether or not the statement was true.

Having gotten their machinery in full operation, the house awaited the result with some anxiety. Now and then some story was set afloat to the effect that this or that committee had struck a trail and expected in a few days to discover something startling. But day after day rolled away, and the something startling never came. Glover and his committees went into all the Departments, examined hundreds of witnesses from the chief down to the lowest clerk, and after continuing this sort of work with the utmost vigor during the entire session of eight months, what was the result? Absolutely nothing that shows the least rascality or dishonesty on the part of any republican official. The whole scheme resulted in such a complete failure that the Glover report has never yet been printed.

GLOVER DISCOVERS DEMOCRATIC CROOKEDNESS.

Even the democrats themselves were disgusted with it. The most that was discovered in the way of crookedness was to the detriment of the democracy. Instead of discovering republican rascality, Glover was always stumbling upon some rascality on the part of his reformed democratic brethren. Some members of his committee, who happened to look into the Doorkeeper's office, thought they discovered a little official crookedness, and when the matter was investigated, it was found that the "reformed" democratic Doorkeeper had overstepped the law and had appointed to office a dozen or two more hungry democrats than the law authorized, being absolutely bulldozed into this irregularity by democratic Congressmen who had special friends that must be supported at the public expense. These committees also discovered that a noted democratic reformer who was elected to Congress in 1876 by the most shameful frauds ever perpetrated, and whose majority, or thirteen of them at least, were arrested and sent to the penitentiary for illegal voting—that this great "reformer" had drawn pay for an imaginary clerk and put the money quietly away in his own pocket. They discovered, moreover, that a certain high-toned committee, which was made up of the choicest spirits in the democratic congressional camp, and which was sent down to Louisiana to bring to light and expose republican frauds in that State, prepared itself for the great work before it by laying in a lot of choice wine, brandy, and cigars, which cost nearly $200 and for which the "dear people" had to pay. Glover was always running across some democratic crookedness where he least expected it and just where he did not want to find it. He went into one of the Departments one day and happened to discover a little something wrong. "What is this?" inquired he, feeling sure that he was now in a fair way to capture the scalp of some rascally republican. The matter was promptly and fully explained to him. "But what has become of the man who perpetrated this wrong?" "Oh! he was turned out of office about a year ago for stealing," was the reply. "But where is he now?" inquired the determined Glover. "He is now employed by one of your sub-committees as an expert to hunt up republican frauds," was the answer.

And so it was. The men who had been turned out of office for crookedness flocked to these committees and were employed by them to hunt down republican officials who would not tolerate or overlook their rascalities. Mr. Glover found it utterly impossible to detect anything wrong in the Departments. His investigations not only vindicated republican officials of all charges made against them, but they disappointed and annoyed democrats. The Washington Post, the national democratic paper, in speaking of what was accomplished by Mr. Glover, uses these words:

The fact remains that Mr. Glover has caused a large outcry and produced very little wool by his shearing processes. Having annoyed his own party friends to the extent of his capacity, it is to be hoped that he will now give the country something for its money and show up some of the corruption and rascality of the gentlemen who ran the Government into the ground and tried to break it off.

NOT PAID THE TAXPAYERS, BUT HAS PAID THE REPUBLICAN PARTY.

And now, in view of the exceeding meager results reached, I ask if these democratic investigations have paid? The investigations of the Forty-fourth Congress cost the tax-payers of the country no less than half a million of dollars, and those of the Forty-fifth Congress doubtless cost five hundred thousand more. Besides this, much valuable time has been wasted on this miserable business which ought to have been devoted to legislation for the good of the country. The whole course pursued in these investigations shows that the democracy are willing to squander any amount of the people's money if by so doing they can secure a little party capital. Their cry of economy and reform means nothing more than getting the republican party out of power and the democratic party in power. The true meaning of this cry is well set forth in a speech of Representative WHITTHORNE, of Tennessee, which he made in the House of the Forty-fifth Congress a few days before adjournment, when he said: "What is civil-service reform? I am in favor of it, if it means putting republicans out of office and putting democrats in." This sentiment is indorsed by every democrat in Congress, and it was to effect this change—to secure the offices of the Government for these leading democrats, that, while crying economy and reform, they undertook these investigations which have cost the people at least a million of dollars. And I ask, has this reckless and unwarranted expenditure of money paid? It has not paid the tax-payers who have had to foot the bill, and I do not think it has paid the democracy who have utterly failed to accomplish what they set out to accomplish. But it has paid the republican party, for it has shown that party to be thoroughly and reliably honest. No party in this country ever went through such a fearful ordeal and came out so completely vindicated. For five long years the democratic majority in Congress have labored night and day to blacken the character of that party, but they have labored in vain. All that party malice and hatred and venom and greed for office could do to discover something wrong in our administration of the national finances has been done, but nothing was discovered. The record of our party was found to be clean. Not a penny of the people's money had we stolen and not one of our officials had been unfaithful to his trust. In view of these democratic investigations, I feel prouder of the republican party to-day than ever. I accept the result of these investigations with gratification, for they show that there has never been a period in our history when the revenues of the Government have been so wisely managed as since the republican party has been in power.

THE DEMOCRATIC RECORD.

But, sir, the gentleman would have us believe in the purity and guilelessness of the democratic party. I have already shown what the record of that party was before the war in regard to political assessments, and I now make the assertion that the record of that party in every respect, both before and since the war, is a record blotted and stained all over with corruption and rascality. The democracy had control of this Government for thirty years, and yet so badly did they manage our governmental affairs that the people would tolerate them no longer, and in 1860 arose and hurled them from power. Such a determined and widespread uprising on the part of a great people is not without cause, and such a wholesale condemnation of a party is not expressed unless it is merited. The reason for this radical revolution every intelligent American citizen understands. The democratic party had been tried and found wanting. It had had a grand opportunity to distinguish itself in managing governmental affairs, but had most signally and ingloriously failed. In the course of a thirty years' lease of power it had shown itself to be entirely destitute of those qualities which are necessary for any party to possess in order to make its administration a success. Its whole career was marked with inability, dishonesty, and the basest kind of partisanship. Look at its history and tell me what it ever did when in power to indicate that it would be safe to intrust it with power again. Tell me what grand scheme it ever devised, what laws enacted, or what principles advocated which would convince any intelligent, honest, and unpartisan man that it possesses any fitness for the position to which it asks to be elevated. Its history tells not only what the party was, but what it is to-day. It shows that, instead of being a party of honesty and ability, it is a party of dishonesty and weakness. During all its long public career its motto was always party success. To build up party it was always willing to sacrifice everything that stood in its way. To perpetuate its rule it was willing to lay aside both its honesty and love of country. Party success is the god which the democracy have always worshiped with more than jesuitical devotion, and upon whose altar they have sacrificed all that entitled them either to the confidence or the respect of the American people.

SAME OLD PARTY.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this old party, which the people of this nation hurled from power in 1860 on account of its incompetency, is now before us asking to be intrusted with power again; and the gentleman from Tennessee has fired the first gun in its behalf—and the question which I ask is: Has this party changed for the better since the people declared it so utterly unfit to manage the affairs of this Government? Has it become possessed of any more honesty than it then had? Is its partisanship any less violent and base? Has it changed either in its spirit or its leadership? I make the assertion that the democratic party, in every objectionable particular, is the same to-day that it was in 1860.

Who were the leaders of the democracy in 1860 and during the war? In the North they were S. J. Tilden, Horatio Seymour, FERNANDO WOOD, A. G. THURMAN, GEORGE H. PENDLETON, Thomas A. Hendricks, and D. W. VOORHEES, and in the South Jefferson Davis, A. H. STEPHENS, Robert Toombs, BEN. HILL, L. Q. C. LAMAR, J. B. GORDON, ISHAM G. HARRIS, WADE HAMPTON, and ZEB. B. VANCE. To-day these men are not only leaders in the democratic party, but leaders whom the party has singled out to load with special honors. They are men whom the party has put forward as its most prominent and trusted representatives. This one fact has a wonderful significance. It speaks volumes in regard to the attitude of the democratic party to-day as compared with its attitude in 1860.

If the party has changed for the better, if it has acquired any particular fitness to govern the nation which it did not possess in 1860, it would be the most natural thing in the world for it to remove from its leadership the men through whose advice and management the party was brought into such disgrace and the country so nearly ruined. But the party absolutely refuses to remove these men. On the contrary, it clings to them with more tenacity and devotion than it manifested before and during the war. It is a remarkable fact, and one that should not be forgotten by any man who stood by the Government during the rebellion, that when the democratic party to-day has an especially important and honorable office to bestow, it bestows it, if in the South, upon the men who were the most radical advocates of secession, who were especially conspicuous in helping on the rebellion and who have been the most unwilling to accept the results of the war, and if in the North, upon the men who were the most open and pronounced in their sympathy with the rebel cause, and who did the most to embarrass and cripple the Government in its efforts to crush treason and save its own life. Look at a few of these men:

The leader of the democrats in the United States Senate, and a prominent candidate for President, is A. G. THURMAN, of Ohio, a man who was a Vallandigham democrat during the war, and who, in the State democratic convention in Columbus in January, 1861, offered the following resolution:

That the two hundred thousand democrats of Ohio send to the people of the United States, both North and South, greeting, and when the people of the North shall have fulfilled their obligations to the Constitution and to the South, then, and not till then, will they take into consideration the question of the right and propriety of coercion.

A couple of years ago the democratic Legislature of Ohio was called upon to elect another Senator to serve with Mr. THURMAN, and from the large number of candidates selected GEORGE H. PENDLETON. This Legislature had an admirable opportunity to throw this old leader overboard, but it refused to do it. Among the candidates were General EWING, General Ward, and General Morgan, all of whom did gallant service in the Union Army during the war, but this democratic Legislature passed these Union soldiers by as unworthy to represent the Ohio democracy in the United States Senate and selected as their representative the man who stood up in Congress in 1863 and declared that he would not vote a man or a dollar to assist the Government in prosecuting the war, and who was a candidate for Vice-President in 1864 upon the democratic platform declaring the war on the part of the Government a failure.

The most prominent of the two men who represent the Indiana democracy in the United States Senate to-day is D. W. VOORHEES, a man who was in sympathy with the worst element of Indiana democracy during the war, an element which was active in organizing Sons of Liberty and Knights of the Golden Circle. In 1865 the national democratic convention nominated as its candidate for President Horatio Seymour, a man who encouraged the New York riots of 1863. In the last presidential campaign the democratic standard-bearers were two of the worst copperheads in the country. Mr. Tilden was outspoken in condemnation of the war on the part of the Government, and in February, 1861, declared to the Tweedle Hall convention that he would resist under any and all circumstances the use of force to coerce the South into the Union; while Mr. Hendricks stood opposed to the Government from the beginning to the end of our mighty struggle to save the Union.

But who are the leaders in the South to-day? They are the men who did the most to plunge the country into war and who were the last to lay down their arms when the confederacy went to pieces. That bitter and uncompromising rebel, WADE HAMPTON, is honored by the South Carolina democracy by being elected governor of his State, and is then transferred to the United States Senate. ZEB. VANCE, who declared that he would fight the Yankees until he filled hell so full that their feet would stick out of the windows, is made governor of North Carolina, and then promoted to a seat in the Senate of the United States. BEN. HILL is put into the United States Senate by the democracy of Georgia because he fought gallantly for the rebel cause and then stood up in the lower House of Congress and urged the Government to grant amnesty to Jeff. Davis, when the latter scorned to ask for it himself. Other leading representatives of the southern democracy in the Senate are GORDON, LAMAR, HARRIS, and BUTLER, all of whom distinguished themselves in aid of the rebellion. In the House, the leading man from the South is ALEXANDER H. STEPHENS, who was vice-president of the southern confederacy and who is to-day the chief of the seventy ex-rebels who represent the southern democracy in this body. But towering above all these, facile princeps in the eyes of the southern people, is Jeff. Davis, the ex-president of the defunct confederacy. These are the leaders in the democratic party to-day—the men who dictate its policy and shape its course—and does any one think that the party is a safe party as long as it retains such men as leaders?

DEMOCRACY NEVER REFORMED ANYTHING FOR THE BETTER.

But, sir, I make the further assertion that the democracy have never reformed anything for the better, and as their party is organized to-day never can so reform anything. The party is not a reform party in any sense of the word. How is that party organized? Who constitute its rank and file? Who control it and dictate its policy? The great State of New York has run the national democratic party for the past dozen years. It has dictated the nomination of the last three democratic presidential tickets. And yet the great State of New York is run by the rascals and dead-beats in New York City. Do the gentlemen on the other side desire to know who these men are? If they will listen, I will inform them. I send to the Clerk's desk the following, which I desire to be read. It is written by Brick Pomeroy, and being a good democrat, he should be regarded as the very best of authority.

The Clerk read as follows:

The republican politicians of Washington are adept thieves and somewhat perfect in the art of scoundrelism; but there are here in the city of New York men high in democratic authority—men who, by the use of money liberally expended, expect to control the next national democratic convention—who can, blindfold and with one hand tied behind them, steal more in one hour from the people than all the republicans in the city of Washington could steal in twenty-four, provided they had the chance.

Mr. HAYES. In another article, speaking of the efforts of the New York City democrats to get control of the national democratic convention in 1872, Mr. Pomeroy talks as follows:

If the head sachems of Tammany can manage to secure the nomination of "their man" for President, and then see him elected, there will be inaugurated the grandest administration of theft, corruption, profligacy, extravagance, and crime this country ever witnessed.

The ring of swindlers now holding treacherous power in New York City, under the name of democracy, are doing more to weaken the cause of democracy in the country at large than the entire vote of the city can atone for.

This is Tammany! This is the so-called democratic authority governing New York!

This is the devil's combination of thieves now ruling New York City, not for the good of the many but for the enrichment of the few.

This is the monopoly of the corruptionists now proposing to buy the nomination of the next democratic candidate for the Presidency, that Washington may be included—that some of the leading thieves of our New York officials may be transplanted to newer fields, but under the same management.

It is for the democracy of the country to look to this, to send to the national convention of 1872 men who dare to be honest to tax-payers and principles, or there will be such a defeat and such a disruption and scattering of the democracy as no power on earth will ever rally.

Honest men will not always indorse corruption.

New York, the pig-pen of Tammany, may submit to what its people have not pluck enough to help, but the democracy of the country will not submit to such dictation.

Look to New York!

One hundred and one million dollars in debt.

And what have the people to show for it?

A steam-yacht!

An American club-house!

A race-track!

A supreme court owned by the Erie Railway, with Hon. George Barnard for toll-keeper!

A palace for lying, slippery Dick Connelly, the comptroller, who went into office so poor that he could not qualify in $1,000—who is now a millionaire!

A fortune of $10,000,000 for Peter Bismarck Sweeney, who was a poor man when first appointed city chamberlain.

A palace for Hon. William M. Tweed, the likeliest man in the lot, who has only made $25,000,000 out of the city, by honesty and economy, in ten years.

A fortune of $7,000,000 for A. Oakley Hall, the popinjay mayor, who squawks when his masters pull the strings, and pockets his percentage of the plunder while angling for the nomination for governor.

Six thousand harlots and one thousand nine hundred dens of infamy supported directly from the city stealings.

These are a few of the exhibits for this enormous debt, which must be paid or repudiated.

But, sir, this is not all. I have here a description of the democratic party by Horace Greeley, who headed the democratic presidential ticket only eight years ago. Speaking of the democratic party Mr. Greeley says:

Every one who chooses to live by pugilism or gambling or harlotry, with nearly every keeper of a tipling-house, is politically a democrat.

If there were not a newspaper nor common school in the country, the democratic party would be far stronger than it is.

The essential articles of the democratic creed (are) love rum and hate niggers. The less one learns and knows the more certain he is to vote the regular ticket from A. to Lizzard.

We thereupon ask our contemporary to state frankly whether the pugilists, blacklegs, thieves, burglars, keepers of dens of prostitution, etc., etc., are not almost unanimously democrats?

To smoke is a democratic virtue; to chew is that virtue intensified; to drink rum is that virtue in the superlative.

A purely selfish interest attaches the lewd, ruffianly, criminal, and dangerous classes to the democratic party.

This would amount to six in a bed, exclusive of any other vermin, for every democratic couch in the State of New York, including those at Sing Sing and Auburn.

All do know that there are several hundred thousand mulattoes in the country, and we presume no one has any serious doubt that the fathers of at least nine-tenths of them are white democrats. And we hold that those democrats, if they will have yellow children, might better than otherwise have the mothers respectfully as wives, after the laudable pattern of that eminent democrat, Vice-President Richard M. Johnson.

The brain, the heart, the soul of the democratic party is the rebel element at the South, with its northern allies and sympathizers. It is rebel at the core to-day. It would come into power with the hate, the chagrin, the wrath, the mortification of ten bitter years to impel and guide its steps. Whatever chastisement may be deserved for our national sins, we must hope that this disgrace and humiliation be spared us.

For the last thirty years every American slaveholder on the African coast has accounted himself in politics a democrat. So every one who chooses to live by pugilism or gambling or harlotry, with every keeper of a tipling-house, is politically a democrat. He believes in "laissez faire"—that the world is governed too much; that the best government is that which governs least. He wants "his trade to move without restriction." He joyfully subscribes to the World, and echoes its cry, "Let the people eat, drink, and amuse themselves as they see fit, so long as they do not infringe on the same liberty in others."

Point wherever you please to an election district which you will pronounce morally rotten, given up in great part to debauchery and vice, whose voters subsist mainly by keeping policy-offices, gambling-houses, grog-shops, and darker dens of infamy, and that district will be found at nearly or quite every election giving a majority for that which styles itself the democratic party. Take all the haunts of debauchery in the land and you will find nine-tenths of their master-spirits active partisans of that same democracy. What is the instinct, the sympathetic chord which attaches them so uniformly to this party? Will you consider?

TILDEN AND REFORM.

But, Mr. Speaker, I wish to go a step further in showing up the rascalities of the democratic party. I claim that we have never had a party in this country that has been so utterly unscrupulous in the means employed to gain and retain power. Its history shows that there has been no scheme too vile, no policy too corrupt, and no course of proceedings too rascally and base for the party to adopt, if by so doing it could make votes and bolster up its fortunes. Its record during and since the last presidential election shows it to be the same old party that it was before the war, actuated by the same narrow and selfish motives and seeking the same partisan ends by the same unprincipled and dishonest means. To prove what I say to be true, I invite your attention not only to the course pursued by the democracy during the last presidential campaign, but to the action of the democratic majority in the lower House of Congress during the last session of that body.

Every one remembers how the great campaign for "Tilden and reform" was carried on. Beginning with the Saint Louis convention, where Mr. Tilden was nominated, down to the day of the election, the democracy did not hesitate to resort to all kinds of trickery, rascality, fraud, bulldozing, and murder in order to make certain the election of their candidate. Tilden's nomination was procured by dishonest means. He was nominated with money and because he had money. At the convention a noted democrat appeared as Mr. Tilden's most prominent friend and absolutely went about with rolls of bills in his hands buying up delegates to vote for his chief. In prosecuting the campaign the great cry of "Tilden and reform" was raised and taken up by every democrat in the country and shouted with the utmost vigor—and yet the party trusted for success more in Tilden's barrel than in the humbug cry of reform. Mr. Tilden surrounded himself with a set of political tricksters such as would disgrace any man or any party, and these men, loaded down with money, were sent out all over the country to work up his interests and make success at the polls a certainty. The States of Indiana and Wisconsin were flooded with money which democratic reformers freely used in manufacturing voters for their great leader. The attempt to secure a presidential elector from Oregon for Tilden by the use of money is a matter of history, which no man of ordinary intelligence and honor will deny. In South Carolina also the democracy tried to get a Tilden elector and offered as high as $40,000 for one. But these cases sink into insignificance when compared with the case in Louisiana. Here is a case where a republican elector, after the election was over, was approached by Mr. Tilden's friends and offered $100,000 if he would turn traitor to his party and cast his vote for "Tilden and reform." I affirm that never in the history of our country was a political campaign conducted in such a shameful and grossly corrupt manner as was the campaign of 1876 on the part of the democracy; and it is to the credit of the American people that such a corrupt party was defeated at the polls.

INTIMIDATION AND MURDER IN THE SOUTH.

But not only was money used, but every other base means which democratic ingenuity could invent was resorted to in order to make success certain. The history of the democratic campaign of 1876 in the South is but the history of one of the most gigantic schemes of intimidation, fraud, and murder that was ever undertaken by any party. There is not a single Southern State in which there was anything like a free or fair election. The white-liners and rifle clubs were in full force in every locality and did most efficient service in aid of the democratic cause. At the tap of the court-house bell in Vicksburg, Mississippi, at any hour during that campaign, two thousand fully armed, equipped, and organized ex-rebel soldiers would muster on the streets in ten minutes, under their democratic commanders, ready for any sort of work that the interest of the democratic cause required. In every other city and town in the State there was a similar force always prepared for work at any hour. The white-liners took matters in their own hands, and the result was that Mississippi, which on a fair vote has a republican majority of from thirty thousand to fifty thousand, was carried for "Tilden and reform" by a majority of fifty thousand. And what is true of Mississippi is true of every other Southern State. The armed democratic organizations held full sway, and by terrorism and coercion, and ballot-box stuffing, and murder managed to carry all but three of the Southern States for Tilden. Some of the congressional districts, which are republican by from six thousand to ten thousand majority, were handed over to the democracy by these organizations with the democratic vote largely ahead.

THE SHOT-GUN POLICY STILL IN FORCE.

The shot-gun policy, which worked so well in 1876 and secured such grand results for the democracy, has been continued up to the present time. To-day, under its operation, we see every Southern State in the hands of the democratic party, while the republican party is virtually wiped out. Now, it is a well-known fact that many of the Southern States are thoroughly republican on anything like a fair vote. Give us a free and honest election, and our party would carry Arkansas, Louisiana, Alabama, Mississippi, both the Carolinas, and Florida. Why, sir, it has always been our boast in this land that the majority should rule. But in the South to-day this doctrine is reversed. In almost every Southern State the minority, having by murder, house-burning, and robbing brought the majority into subjection, alone bear rule and have everything their own way. Is this right? Is it according to the principles upon which our Government is founded? Are we to tolerate such injustice?

REPUBLICAN DOCTRINE.

The doctrine of the republican party has been and is, that every citizen should be the equal of every other citizen in the enjoyment of all the rights of citizenship. We have demanded that all our citizens should stand upon the same platform of equality before the law. To establish this principle in the records, in the practice, and in the life of the nation, has been the proud ambition of our party. We have labored diligently and faithfully to so perfect our Constitution and our laws that none should be rendered so powerful by wealth or so exalted by position as to be above the law, and none so humble and poor that the law should not reach down its strong hand to defend and protect them. We have always held to the idea that wherever our flag floats in this land, there the protecting arms of the Government should be stretched out, guarding the interests of the poor as well as the rich, the weak as well as the strong, and securing to every citizen his right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. By these broad and humane doctrines we stand to-day, and demand, as we have often done before, that the republican majorities in the Southern States shall not be disfranchised.

I believe that the republican party is as true in its adherence to these doctrines to-day as it ever has been. We want the question settled at once and forever that every citizen, no matter if he be weak and poor, shall be protected in all his rights. While we are anxious for peace and quiet, we cannot forget that there are some things more desirable than peace and quiet. Agitation and bitter discussion may often be unpleasant, but if they are directed against some shocking injustice, they are far better than the quiet and calm of indifference. "When the public conscience of a nation becomes so seared that it will tolerate peacefully and quietly some gross wrong against any class of its citizens, that nation is on the high road to degradation and ruin. There is always hope for a nation when the people are careful to note and quick to rebuke any infringement upon the rights of the individual citizen. It is the best sign that the national heart is right and the nation safe, when that heart flames out in indignation at the perpetration of any great wrong and demands its correction." Let the people of this nation once adopt the democratic idea that the majority in the South, simply because it is made up of men who are poor, and weak, and defenseless, has no rights which the wealthy and aristocratic and powerful minority are bound to respect, and that moment we abandon all that is best and most desirable in our free institutions.

DEMOCRATIC POLICY IN CONGRESS.

Let us now turn our attention to the democrats in Congress and see the base means to which they have resorted in order to strengthen themselves in power. When the Forty-fifth Congress assembled in October, 1877, the democrats found they had a majority in the House of only twelve, the vote showing 152 democrats and 140 republicans. This majority was too small to suit the leaders, considering that in the preceding Congress they had had a majority of over seventy, and so they set themselves to work to increase it. Believing that the democratic majority would favor their cause, many democrats who had been fairly beaten at the polls came to Washington at the beginning of the session to contest the seats of their successful republican competitors. These cases were taken up and considered, and in every case where any excuse could possibly be framed, the democratic contestant was given the seat. One of these cases was that of Mr. PACHECO, of California. This gentleman had been elected at the November election in 1876 as a republican, and when Congress met presented himself, with his certificate of election duly signed by the governor of his State, and was admitted to a seat. His case had been considered by the several courts of his State, from the lowest up to the supreme court, and all had decided that he was duly elected. The evidence also was such as would convince any unpartisan man that he was rightfully and lawfully entitled to his seat. And yet, upon a strict party vote, or nearly so, he was turned out and his democratic competitor put in his place.

DEAN VS. FIELD.

Another case was that of Mr. FIELD, of Boston. Mr. FIELD, like Mr. PACHECO, had been duly elected, and upon the certificate of the governor of Massachusetts, was admitted to a seat. Yet after holding his place about four months, he was obliged to vacate it to make room for his democratic competitor, Mr. Dean. The excuse given for turning Mr. FIELD out was as follows: According to the law of Massachusetts there may be two counts of the ballots cast at any election. In this there was a count by the ward officers at the several polling places, and also a count by a committee appointed by the board of aldermen of the city. By the count of the ward officers, which is always made in a hurry and in the midst of more or less confusion, Mr. Dean, the democratic nominee, had a small majority, but when the ballots, which the ward officers sealed up and sent to the city clerk, were counted by the committee of aldermen, it was discovered that the ward officers had made a mistake, and that Mr. FIELD, the republican nominee, was fairly elected. This committee which made the recount was composed of two democrats and one republican, and hence would not be apt to count Mr. FIELD in unless he had been fairly entitled to a majority of the votes. Upon the basis of this recount the governor of the State issued a certificate of election to Mr. FIELD and he was accordingly given a seat in Congress. But when Mr. Dean came forward and contested his seat the democratic majority, upon recommendation of their Committee on Elections, voted Mr. FIELD out and Mr. Dean in. Now, the great injustice of this act is seen when we remember that the second count of a vote is the official count, and is the one that always decides a contested election in Massachusetts. It is always considered more correct and reliable than the first count, which has in many instances been found to be wrong.

ACKLEN VS. DARRALL.

Another of these contested cases that came up was from the third district of Louisiana. This district had been represented in the Forty-first, Forty-second, Forty-third, and Forty-fourth Congresses by Chester B. Darrall, a republican. At the election in November, 1876, Mr. Darrall was again elected, and on the 28th of December following received from Governor W. P. KELLOGG a certificate of election, which stated that according to the official count Mr. Darrall had received 15,626 votes, and his opponent, Mr. ACKLEN, 13,523, giving Darrall a majority of 2,103. In the month of February, 1877, after the democratic administration had been duly inaugurated in Louisiana, under Governor Nicholls, a democratic returning board was convened, which proceeded to recount the votes cast for member of Congress in Mr. Darrall's district. Upon the recount of this democratic board Governor Nicholls issued to Mr. Darrall a second certificate, which recited that Darrall had received 15,786 votes and ACKLEN 14,692, giving Darrall 1,094 majority. Armed with these two certificates, one from a republican and the other from a democratic administration, Mr. Darrall was admitted to a seat in Congress. But when ACKLEN appeared to contest his seat the democratic committee took the case under consideration, and soon reported against Mr. Darrall, and he was accordingly voted out by another strict party vote.

PATTERSON VS. BELFORD.

But the case which more fully than any other sets forth the injustice and partisan spirit of the democratic majority in the present House is the case from the State of Colorado. The Territory of Colorado was admitted into the Union as a State on the 1st day of August, 1876. The enabling act of Congress, authorizing the Territory to elect a convention to frame a constitution, had given that convention the power to fix the day for holding the elections of the new State from the time of its admission up to 1880. That act provides:

SEC. 6. Until the next general census said State shall be entitled to one Representative in the House of Representatives of the United States, which Representative, together with the governor and other State officers, shall be elected on a day subsequent to the adoption of the constitution, to be fixed by said constitutional convention.

In accordance with the power given in this section, the constitutional convention provided in the new constitution that "the general election shall be held on the first Tuesday of October, in the years of our Lord 1876, 1877, and 1878, and annually thereafter on such day as may be prescribed by law." The Territory being admitted into the Union as a State on the 1st of August, 1876, there would of course be two members of Congress to be elected at the first election, to be held in October of that year, one to fill out the unexpired term of the Forty-fourth Congress, and one for the Forty-fifth Congress. Judge BELFORD was the republican candidate for both Congresses, and T. M. Patterson the democratic candidate for the same. There was some little question about the legality of holding the election for member of the Forty-fifth Congress in October, but finally the two candidates and their friends agreed that the whole matter as to both Congresses should be settled at one election. Accordingly the two candidates went into the field, canvassed the State, and on the 3d day of October the election came off. The official count showed that BELFORD had received for the Forty-fourth Congress 13,328 votes, and Patterson 12,410, giving BELFORD a majority of 918 votes. For the Forty-fifth Congress BELFORD received 13,483 votes, and Patterson 12,611, giving BELFORD a majority of 872 votes. As I said, both parties went into the campaign expecting that the whole question was to be settled at this election. But after the election was over and Patterson saw he was defeated, he and his friends got together and determined to hold another election in November upon the day fixed by the laws of the United States for holding elections in all the States, except where some other day is fixed by special enactment. This was accordingly done; but the republicans paid no attention to it whatever, and only a few of the democrats turned out, so that the entire vote cast was only 3,580 as against 26,094 in October, and all of these were cast for Mr. Patterson. Now, no one questioned that Mr. BELFORD was elected as a member of the Forty-fourth Congress, and when the last session of that body convened in December, 1876, he was admitted to a seat. But when the Forty-fifth Congress assembled in 1877, Mr. Patterson came up to contest his seat in that body, and the democratic majority awarded the seat to Mr. Patterson. Now, I affirm that no party ever perpetrated an act of grosser injustice than this. There were cast in October for member of the Forty-fifth Congress over 26,000 votes, of which Mr. BELFORD received almost 900 more than half, showing that he was the choice of a majority of the people, but this fact the democrats in the House entirely ignored and gave the seat to Mr. Patterson, who was not only not the choice of a majority of the people, but received at his November election only 3,580 votes. Now, I hold that Mr. BELFORD was legally elected to the Forty-fifth Congress; but if there was any doubt in regard to it, the proper and just way to settle the matter was not to give Mr. Patterson the seat, but to declare that there was no election, and refer the question back to the people, and let them decide it by a new election. But the democrats of the House did not dare to do this. Such an election would have resulted, as the other had done, in favor of Mr. BELFORD; and, fearing this, they gave the seat to Mr. Patterson, who was no more entitled to it than any citizen of Colorado who never thought of running for Congress.

FINLEY VS. BISBEE.

But, sir, I wish to call attention to one more case, that of Finley vs. Bisbee. Mr. Bisbee, republican, had been fairly elected from the first district in Florida, and his credentials being all right he was admitted to a seat at the beginning of the Forty-fifth Congress. Mr. Finley, democrat, contested his seat, but so firmly convinced were the democratic majority that Mr. Bisbee was legally elected and was entitled to the seat that they did not dare to turn him out until about a week before the Forty-fifth Congress expired. Then a resolution declaring Finley legally elected was brought in and passed, and that gentleman was given the seat. Such another act of gross injustice cannot be found in the entire history of this country. That Bisbee was entitled to the seat was acknowledged by the democrats themselves, who allowed him to occupy it for almost two years. The seating of Finley was not only an act of the basest partisanship, but, like all the other cases I have mentioned, was a violation of the very fundamental principle upon which our free institutions rest, the principle that the person who is the choice of a majority of voters shall be entitled to and made secure in the office to which that majority elevated him. Bisbee had done the work for two years. He had been faithful in his attendance upon the sittings of the House and in all his other duties as a Representative. Finley had done no work, and yet just at the close of the Congress he was voted into the seat, drew his pay for the full two years during which Bisbee had done the work and received the usual amount for mileage and stationery, making in all about $12,500 that he received from the Government, for which he returned no equivalent whatever. Finley was in no sense entitled to a single penny of this money, and the giving it to him was nothing less than robbery on the part of the democratic majority in this House that did it. It was stealing $12,500 out of the Treasury of the people and giving it to a democrat who had never earned it and who, on the score of right, was not entitled to a single penny of it.

And this, Mr. Speaker, is your "reform" democracy! This is the way the great democratic party of this country reform things when they are in power. This is one of their many unprincipled and rascally methods to get democrats into office, and thus build up and strengthen an unreliable and small majority. These cases show that they do not hesitate to override the will of the majority in any congressional district, if by so doing they can favor a democrat and add to their own strength. In their national platform of 1876 they declare their "absolute acquiescence in the will of the majority as the vital principle of the Republic," and yet in each of the cases to which I have referred they have refused to acquiesce in the will of the majority and have declared that the will of the minority should rule.

ATTEMPT TO MAKE TILDEN PRESIDENT.

I have already said, Mr. Speaker, that the democratic party was controlled by the same spirit to-day that controlled it in 1860. It cares more for party to-day than it does for country, and is still determined either to rule or ruin. In proof of this assertion I have but to refer to the action of that party since the presidential election of 1876. As you all know, the democracy went into the campaign of 1876 not only determined but expecting to win. As I said before, they resorted to all manner of dishonorable means to achieve success—the shameful and dishonest use of money, bulldozing, intimidation, fraud, and murder. Never did a party get down so low in rascality and corruption to secure any office. But all their trickery and rascality failed to give them success. Hayes was elected, and no sooner was this fact known than the leaders of the democratic host, who had hoped to get office in case Tilden became President, set up a cry of fraud, which has been echoed and re-echoed by the democracy throughout the length and breadth of the land from that time to this. These men, most of whom held seats in Congress, at once began to consult together how they might prevent the counting in and inauguration of Hayes and secure the same for Tilden. Their first efforts were directed toward buying up one or more of the Hayes electors, and as high as $100,000 were offered for one elector in Louisiana. But these efforts proved fruitless, and then a mighty effort was made to bulldoze Congress into counting Tilden in, and thus disregard the wishes of the people as expressed through the ballot-box.

Some of the most violent called upon their friends throughout the country to rise and resist the attempt to put Hayes in the presidential chair, while others pledged themselves to lead one hundred thousand armed men to Washington to inaugurate Tilden. Some of Tilden's chief advisers issued manifestoes, urging the calling of public meetings all over the country for the sole purpose of intimidating Congress and thus force it to count Tilden in. Hundreds of democratic bummers and dead-beats actually came to Washington expecting that their services would be needed and ready to do all they could toward placing in the presidential chair the man whose barrel had been so freely opened to supply the wants of the whisky-loving voters. This sort of thing actually frightened some good republicans. They really thought we were on the verge of another war, and had it not been for the silent man who then occupied the presidential chair, the leaders of the democratic host might have plunged the country into another war. As it was they saw nothing to be gained by such a course, and so they resorted to another plan. They hit upon the idea of a joint commission, hoping that they might so make up this commission and so manipulate it after it was made up as to secure the counting in of Tilden. But in this they were again disappointed. The commission gave all the contested States to Hayes, and he was accordingly declared elected to the office of President.

DEMOCRATS FAVORED THE COMMISSION.

Being beaten at every game they had attempted to play, one would suppose that they would have submitted quietly to the decision of this commission. It was certainly expected that they would. The commission was their own creature. It was proposed by them, and when the resolution providing for it was brought up in the House it was supported in speeches by such leading democrats as Payne, TUCKER, HILL, Hewitt, HUNTON, GOODE, LAMAR, SINGLETON, SPRINGER, and Walker. The most interesting feature of the debate on the part of the democrats was the fact that the decision of the commission was to be accepted by them as final.

Mr. HUNTON, of Virginia, one of the framers of the plan of settlement, said:

With such a tribunal to decide this question absolute fairness in the decision must be expected. Napoleon said: "Providence was on the side of the heaviest artillery." In this case victory will be on the side of the stronger case.

Mr. GOODE, of Virginia, said that——The chief merit of the plan of settlement consists in the fact that it affords a certain guarantee of a safe and speedy deliverance from the military arm of the Government. The successful candidate will be inaugurated according to the peaceful forms of law, and without violence to our republican system of government.

Mr. SPRINGER, of Illinois, said:

There can be little difference between requiring this decision to be final unless rejected by the two Houses, and making it final when concurred in by both Houses, because, sir, no political party can afford to go before the country after rejecting the finding of this tribunal. It will be effectual and final.

Mr. FELTON, of Georgia, declared that—

The commission would free the incoming Administration of all taint of irregularity or fraud.

Mr. LAMAR thought that—

To have solved so dangerous a question so simply, so calmly, and so justly was the highest tribute that could be paid to those principles of constitutional liberty which have trained the American people to such a possibility.

Mr. HARRISON, of Illinois, said:

What may be the result of its [the commission's] working upon the aspirations of the two distinguished candidates for the Presidency I cannot tell, and that, to my mind, is its very best feature. It is in the interest of neither party. The tribunal will be fair and honest.

Mr. O'BRIEN, of Maryland, said:

Peace can only be secured by a decision of the late presidential election which will guarantee to the occupant of the presidential office that he is not regarded as a usurper by a majority of the people. In this view I shall vote for the bill.

Mr. WALKER, of Virginia, said:

Whatever the result may be the American people will bow before it in respectful obedience.

Mr. DAVID DUDLEY FIELD, of New York, said:

While I have thought it [the subject under discussion] beyond question within the competence of Congress I was sure that it [the proposed plan] was a just and honorable settlement and the best method of escape from impending calamity.

The tone of the discussion in the Senate was the same, no one questioning in any way the final effect of the commission's decision. Mr. BAYARD, of Delaware, defending the proposed commission, said:

I have failed to discover wherein anything is compromised; what power that both Houses should possess is withheld? I do not know where the compromise can be, what principle is surrendered; the bill intends to provide an honest adjudication for the rights of all.

Mr. THURMAN said:

This is the act of the two Houses, and this bill contemplates nothing else; and it is just as much in a constitutional sense the act of the two Houses and the decision of the two Houses as if both Houses were of the same political complexion.

Mr. WHYTE, of Maryland, said:

I shall hail the decision [of the commission] as a heavenly message, giving us peace in the land and quietude, until we shall provide by some constitutional amendment to prevent the recurrence of this unfortunate trouble.

Such was the spirit in which the democratic representatives of the people in Congress accepted the plan of settling the electoral controversy.

When the resolution was put to a vote it was carried by 191 yeas and 86 nays, the majority being composed of 158 democrats and 33 republicans, while the minority was composed of 68 republicans and 18 democrats. I say under these circumstances it was to be expected that the decision of this commission would be considered by the democrats as settling the presidential question at once and forever.

POTTER RESOLUTION.

But such was not the case. Notwithstanding the question had been decided against them by their own tribunal, they refused to give up the idea of making their candidate President. Hence it was that, after much deliberation and a vast amount of consultation among the leaders, they brought forward a resolution in the House through Mr. Potter, providing for an investigation into what they were pleased to call republican frauds in Louisiana and Florida, by which they claimed the electoral votes of these States had been secured for Hayes when of right they belonged to Tilden. The object of this resolution was apparent upon its face, and the purpose of those who favored it was shown in their emphatic refusal to allow it to be amended so as to include the investigation of democratic frauds as well as republican frauds. When the resolution was first brought forward, Mr. Hale, in behalf of the republicans, offered an amendment to the effect that this proposed investigation should include all the frauds alleged to have been perpetrated by either party, not only in Louisiana and Florida, but also in Oregon, South Carolina, and Mississippi. But Mr. Potter and his friends did not want such a full and free investigation as this. They knew that such an investigation would ruin all their schemes and crush all the fond hopes they entertained of getting Tilden into the presidential chair. They knew that a full, thorough, and searching investigation would bring to light all the frauds and rascality and intimidation and murder which their party had been guilty of in the campaign of 1876, and hence they refused to accept the amendment proposed by the republicans. By limiting the investigation to certain localities they expected to fix up a good case for Mr. Tilden, and this done, it was their intention to put Mr. Hayes out of office and put Mr. Tilden in. Just how this was to be accomplished does not appear, but that such was their intention is abundantly clear. As proof of this I call your attention to the following facts:

DEMOCRATS DETERMINED TO PUT HAYES OUT OF OFFICE.

A day or two after Mr. Potter introduced his resolution the democrats of the House held a caucus, at which Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee, offered a motion stating that it was not the purpose of the proposed investigation to bring about the impeachment of Mr. Hayes or to disturb him in the possession of his office. This motion was opposed on all sides, and when put to a vote was voted down almost unanimously. Now, I ask why was this proposition of Mr. YOUNG voted down if there was no intention on the part of the democrats to disturb Mr. Hayes in the possession of his office? Its adoption could certainly have done no harm, but would have quieted the apprehensions of a great many of our people and would have placed Mr. Potter and his friends in a much better light before the country than they stand in to-day. But the adoption of this proposition was not according to the programme of the leaders, and so it was rejected. These men wanted to be left free to work up Mr. Tilden's case as they saw fit and to make him President if they could. ALEXANDER H. STEPHENS, who is good authority, and who opposed the investigation, is reported to have said: "I know it was the intention of the leading men to vote Mr. Hayes out and Mr. Tilden in. I talked with them, and know it." Other democrats who favored Mr. Tilden's cause were outspoken in regard to the purpose of the investigation. I have here an extract from the Washington correspondence to the Philadelphia Press, from which I read:

Careful comparison of the views expressed by the democratic leaders upon the objects and purposes of their present course in the House leads to the conclusion that the country is rapidly drifting into a revolution; and it would be well for the law-abiding people in every part of the country to shake off the apathy which enchains them, and anticipate the calamitous state of things which now appears inevitable.

A prominent democrat in the House said to-night: "We will have Hayes out of the White House within six months, or there will be another rebellion."

Another one remarked: "Some night you will hear of Hayes and his family landed at the depot and shipped for Fremont."

Another remarked: "The public mind needs to be educated up to this thing. When Montgomery Blair submitted his memorial and resolution to the Maryland Legislature it was ridiculed by everybody. Now the movement has taken definite shape and is a subject of comment among the people. The object of the Potter investigation is to educate the public mind. The testimony is important only in that direction. Our purpose is fixed. The democratic party will use the machinery of the Federal Government to elect the next President."

Another said: "At the proper time, if necessary, we can concentrate at the Capitol, without attracting attention, enough men to carry out any purpose which the democratic party may have to accomplish."

Another, fixing the time for the initial steps, said: "By December this investigation will have proven the frauds practiced in order to place Hayes in the presidential chair, and we will refuse to receive his annual message. We can control the Senate on that, but, if it cannot be done in December, we will have both Houses after March 4."

Many of the prominent democratic papers in the country believed that the purpose of the investigation was to remove Mr. Hayes from office. The Raleigh (North Carolina) News contained the following:

The object of this investigation is not simply to collect into durable form the evidence of frauds in the stolen States. It is said that the complicity of President Hayes and Secretary Sherman will be clearly established. If such shall be the case, the impeachment of both these high officials is among the possibilities of the immediate future. Indeed, that would be a logical sequence of the investigation.

SAME SPIRIT AS IN 1860.

These facts prove conclusively that Mr. Potter and his friends meant mischief and that they undertook this investigation for the sole purpose of putting Mr. Tilden in the presidential chair. They prove also that these democratic leaders are as ready to-day as they were in 1860 to sacrifice the peace and business interests of the country to the interests of their party. In 1860 they were mad because they did not elect their candidate for President, and they have been mad ever since it was shown that they did not elect their candidate in 1876. In 1860 they plotted revolution and in 1878 and 1879 they plotted revolution again. In 1860 they made war upon our Army and weakened it in every possible way, so that it could not be relied upon to prevent them from carrying out their revolutionary schemes, and for the past five years they have been making a like war upon the Army, crippling it here, cutting it down there, and seeking to make it weak and inefficient everywhere, so that when they attempted to revolutionize the Government the Army could not be used as a power against them. Such being the spirit of democracy to-day, is it at all probable that the democratic party would institute any reform measures of any consequence if we should again intrust it with power?

OTHER REVOLUTIONARY SCHEMES.

But, Mr. Speaker, after witnessing the utter failure of the Potter committee, and after receiving convincing evidence that public sentiment would not uphold them in their revolutionary scheme to put Hayes out of the presidential chair and to put Tilden in, the democrats at once abandoned that scheme and turned their attention to the perfection of plans to carry the presidential election in 1880. During the last session of the Forty-fifth Congress and the extra session of the present Congress the democrats of each House had but one thought in their minds, and that was how they might shape things so as to make certain a democratic victory at the coming election. For this they labored, for this they caucused, for this they planned, for this they threatened, and for this they attempted to strike from the statute-books the election laws which were enacted for the sole purpose of preventing fraud upon the ballot-box. You gentlemen on the other side knew that if you could repeal the election laws you would be enabled to carry the State of New York by an overwhelming majority. If you could take from the President the power to use troops at the polls to preserve peace, you could carry a solid South by your tissue-ballots, bulldozing, and murder. You had determined upon success at the next presidential election, and you had resolved to strike down any and every thing that impeded your way. You proposed to repeat upon a broader scale the dishonest trickery and gigantic frauds that you had practiced in 1868, 1872, and 1876. You said to yourselves that in order to carry New York and Ohio for the democracy, the bummers, dead-beats, and plug-uglies of New York City and Cincinnati must be allowed to vote half a dozen times each instead of only once as they can now do under republican law. You also said that the white-liners, red-shirts, and bulldozers must be permitted to intimidate republican voters, drive honest and peaceable citizens from the polls, shoot down all who dared to oppose the democratic party, and vote tissue-balloons to their hearts' content, in order to make the South solid for the great "reform" democracy.

There was method in all your actions. You had studied the vote in the electoral college. You felt certain that with a solid South, with New York, and with Ohio you could elect your presidential candidate; and to secure these States and make democratic success certain you went deliberately to work and did your utmost to strike down every safeguard about the ballot-box and to open the floodgates of iniquity, ballot-box stuffing, intimidation, and fraud. It was to secure success in 1880 that the democratic majority in this House attempted to bulldoze a republican Senate into passing the appropriation bills with your political riders. It was for this purpose that you threatened to starve the Government if republicans in this House and in the Senate refused to let you have your own way. It was for this purpose that you sought to force the President to sign your bills, political riders and all, which he had announced that he could not conscientiously do. It was for this purpose that you refused to pass the appropriation bills in the Forty-fifth Congress and thus forced an extra session of the Forty-sixth Congress, hoping thus to get these bills through with your political riders attached to them. It was for this purpose that you protracted the extra session for three long months at such an enormous cost to the tax-payers of the country.

THIS ACTION IN KEEPING WITH DEMOCRATIC HISTORY.

To one unacquainted with democratic tactics and methods your action last winter and spring would seem wonderfully strange, but to those who have studied your history nothing could be more characteristic. In taking the course you did in attempting to bulldoze the President and the republicans in Congress by threatening to starve the Government unless you could have your own way, you only manifested the same spirit that has characterized democratic action and democratic legislation for the past quarter of a century. It is a notorious fact that the great democratic party has had but one leading principle of action for the past twenty-five years, and that is to gain power and hold it after they had gained it. For this they have been willing to sacrifice everything that ennobles and dignifies a party. For this they have violated the Constitution, torn down solemn compromises, attempted to force slavery upon a free Territory at the point of the bayonet, and plunged the nation into a cruel and bloody war. They have shown themselves ready and willing to tear down any and everything that stood between them and power, no matter how sacred it was or how necessary to the safety and welfare of the people. And to-day we find them actuated by the same motives and controlled by the same spirit. We see them to-day at their old tricks again, and we cannot but feel that they are as hostile to the common good as ever. In demanding the repeal of the election laws they showed that they were as ready as ever to resort to any means, however questionable, to achieve success. But thanks to the republicans in this and the other House and to a republican President, they were unable to repeal these laws. To-day these laws stand upon our statute-book, and there is but little prospect that the democrats in this Congress will be able to strike them down. Realizing this fact, these gentlemen have turned their attention to other methods for securing a President. The first of these was developed in Maine, where the democracy, by the most dishonest, rascally, and damnable trickeries and frauds endeavored to override the will of the majority, place the minority in power, and thus steal the electoral vote of that State.

Other methods are gradually developing in this House, and will be brought to our attention in due time. What these methods are every gentleman on this floor understands. The plan is to turn republicans from certain States out of their seats on this floor and put democrats in, thus securing the vote of those States for the democratic party in case the election of a President should be thrown into this House. This is the plan that has been studied up during the past summer and that is proposed to be carried out by the leaders on the other side. The only reason why it has not been brought forward before is the fear on the part of the democratic managers that they might commit another blunder by calling it up for action. These gentlemen stand ready to rob the republicans of a Representative from Indiana and one also from Minnesota, and they will attempt to do it just as soon as they become convinced that it will not injure their party.

THE REPUBLICAN PARTY THE PARTY OF SAFETY.

And this, Mr. Speaker, is the party that claims to be the only genuine "reform" party in the country. After having practiced, with unblushing effrontery and boastfulness, the many high-handed and damnable outrages and crimes which I have referred to, they now come forward with a great flourish of trumpets and call up this insignificant measure to prevent a few Government officials and employés from contributing money for political purposes, hoping, by vigorously urging its passage and by talking loudly about "reform," to lead the people to forget their past black and criminal record and to believe that they are all they profess to be in this regard. But, sir, the people are not to be humbugged in this way. They have been deceived too often by the democracy to trust them now. They understand the spirit and methods of the democratic party far too well to believe in any professions of reform that that party may make at the present time, on the eve of an important presidential campaign. No, sir; the democratic is not a "reform" party in any sense of the word, and I ask gentlemen on this floor to look at it as it stands before us to-day, and tell me if there is anything either in its organization, its principles, or its leadership that gives any individual democrat the right to speak of it as a "reform" party? Is there anything in all its long history which gives any indication that it would inaugurate a single reformatory measure if it were again to be intrusted with power? I say not. The party, as it stands before us to-day, is the same in all essential particulars as it was in 1860, and it would be as unwise and dangerous in every particular to put it in power now as it would have been to have continued it in power then. I say this, sir, because I believe it to be true; and I believe it to be true both from what I have noted in this House and from what I know of the present organization, spirit, and leadership of the party. I say it because I believe, as I did in 1860 and 1864, that the only genuine reform party, the only safe party in the nation is the republican party. It was the republican party that we tied to during all the years of the war, and that brought us through in safety, and I believe that party is as necessary to the highest and best good of this great Republic to-day as it was in the darkest days of that mighty struggle. In fact, there has been no time since we achieved our first national victory under our trusted leader, Abraham Lincoln, when it would have been wise or safe to exchange that party for the democratic party. There has been no time since then when the rule of the republican party was not demanded by every interest of the individual citizen and by every principle of good government and national honor. To-day, after having tried the democratic party in the lower House of Congress for five years, we come back to the republican party as our only hope. We feel, as we have not felt at any time since the war, that the democratic party is not a party of safety. We realize more fully than ever that the democracy have learned nothing from the great lessons of the war, and that they are no better fitted, either in ability, honesty, or patriotism, to manage the affairs of this nation than they were in 1860, when the people arose in their might and bade them vacate the high places which they had filled only to dishonor.

Mr. HOSTETLER. I now yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BUTTERWORTH.]

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I claim the floor in my own right.

Mr. McLANE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McLANE. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOSTETLER] in charge of this bill gave notice yesterday that he intended to call the previous question at four o'clock to-day. Of course the hour to which he is entitled to close the debate can be taken by him prior to or after four o'clock. In explanation to a gentleman on the other side whom I now have in my eye, I will say that it was understood that the gentleman from Indiana would take his hour after four o'clock. I desire to ask if my understanding is correct. If so, then the floor is still open to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] until four o'clock.

I rise now for the purpose of having the Chair make the explanation to the House that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOSTETLER] has the right at four o'clock to take the floor and call the previous question, or he has the right to take the floor now for remarks, and at four o'clock to call the previous question.

Mr. CONGER. The Speaker has that under advisement.

Mr. GARFIELD. An event has occurred since then which changes the matter somewhat.

Mr. McLANE. What is it?

Mr. GARFIELD. One gentleman yesterday took nearly two hours of the time of the House. His time was extended by general consent, by the courtesy of the House. If a similar courtesy cannot be extended to this side it would certainly be very unfair.

Mr. ATKINS. I hope the same courtesy will be extended.

Mr. GARFIELD. It will be hardly fair to call the previous question to-day.

Mr. HOSTETLER. In response to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] I will say that, notwithstanding that was an act of the House for which I was not responsible at all, the extension of time was outside of the agreement, yet I want to do full justice to the other side of the House, and I have yielded the next hour to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BUTTERWORTH.]

Mr. WHITE. There was no agreement at all.

Mr. HAYES. During the extra session the other side consumed an hour on this bill; and yesterday they consumed two hours and a quarter.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. The House can judge what understanding existed from what was said yesterday. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McMAHON] said that he would call the previous question at four o'clock, as he was desirous of having a vote taken on the bill to-day.

Mr. McMAHON. I had no right to demand the previous question.
Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I beg pardon, the gentleman said that he would insist upon its being called at four o'clock.

Mr. McMAHON. I said that I would insist upon the agreement being carried out, provided the extension of time would carry the matter over until to-morrow.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. The gentleman said he would not object to the debate extending after four o'clock to-day, but he wanted the vote taken to-day.

Mr. CONGER. There was no agreement yesterday about the time such as that to which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McMAHON] refers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOSTETLER] yield the floor to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BUTTERWORTH?]

Mr. WHITE. That is not the way to put it; the gentleman from Ohio is entitled to the floor in his own right.

Mr. HOSTETLER. Who has the floor?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. HOSTETLER. I want an understanding before there is any yielding in the case. The understanding which was agreed to yesterday by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] and other gentlemen was that the previous question should be called to-day at four o'clock.

Mr. CONGER. It was distinctly stated that there was no such agreement.

Mr. HOSTETLER. The RECORD will show.

Mr. CONGER. I made that statement myself, and the RECORD will show it.

Mr. HOSTETLER. If the RECORD does not bear me out, then of course I have no more to say. In accordance with that understanding I yielded the floor yesterday to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. HOUSE], who addressed the House for one hour. At the expiration of that hour his time was extended, not by me individually, but by unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. KEIFER. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. HOSTETLER. Wait a moment. After the time of the gentleman from Tennessee was extended by unanimous consent it was asked if additional time would be allowed for debate beyond four o'clock to-day. Now, if there was no understanding, no agreement that the previous question should be called at four o'clock to-day, how could additional time beyond four o'clock be asked for?

I will say this: I am willing to concede to the other side the next hour, provided, if the understanding has to be changed from what it was yesterday, we shall be allowed to have a vote this evening at some time, as near four o'clock as possible.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOSTETLER] to the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The only question now before the House is to whom the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOSTETLER] yields.

Mr. CONGER. I know; but I desire to refer to what was said about the agreement. I read from the RECORD of yesterday's proceedings:

The SPEAKER. The bill will go over as unfinished business—not only as unfinished business but by agreement.

Mr. CONGER. I do not desire to be misunderstood—

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not misunderstand the gentleman.

Mr. CONGER. There has been no agreement except the declaration of the gentleman in charge of the bill that he will call the previous question. There has been no agreement on this side of the House so far as I know.

The SPEAKER. The rule of course will control everything in connection with the legislative matters before the House.

Mr. CONGER. I do not wish anything to go by agreement—only by the rules.

And that is the last upon this subject. There never was any agreement as understood by this side of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That question is not now before the House. At four o'clock it will be proper to consider that question. The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BUTTERWORTH.]

Mr. McMAHON. I wish to ask gentlemen on the other side one question. If this debate is allowed to run into to-morrow will they give us a vote then at three or four o'clock?

Mr. CONGER. Let the debate go on; and we will give a vote just as soon as we get through with our remarks.

Mr. McMAHON. I thought the gentleman was anxious to take up the appropriation bill.

Mr. CONGER. Ah! the gentleman, I am informed, was instructed some days ago by his committee to report an appropriation bill forthwith, but has declined to do it.

Mr. McMAHON. I want to give gentlemen on the other side a chance to put themselves on the record upon this political-assessment bill.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman has disobeyed the instructions of his committee.

Mr. HAWLEY. We want to go on the record.

Mr. HAWK. But we want to go on the record intelligently.

Mr. McMAHON. Now, I want to say to gentlemen that if they will give us a vote to-morrow—

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman has not charge of this bill; why is he interfering with it?

Mr. McMAHON. Simply because I have an appropriation bill in charge; and I may have something to say in regard to the time that this debate may run.

Mr. CONGER. I understand that the gentleman's committee instructed him some days ago to report an appropriation bill; and he declines to do it.

Mr. McMAHON. The gentleman is not the repository of the secrets of the Committee on Appropriations; and this matter, like a great many other things, is one he knows nothing about.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This discussion is coming out of the time of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. CONGER. I will say that on this side of the House we are willing to postpone this subject to take up the appropriation bill. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I understand that I have the floor in my own right, and not by virtue of its being yielded to me by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. CONGER. But I presume my friend from Ohio would postpone his remarks until the appropriation bill can be passed, if it be taken up now. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to announce that at fifteen minutes after three o'clock he recognized the gentleman from Ohio; and this debate is coming out of his time.

Mr. CONGER. My proposition is to postpone this bill until the appropriation bill can be passed.

Mr. McMAHON. I was always taught to dispose of the matter in hand before proceeding with anything else. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. McLANE. Before the gentleman proceeds I want my parliamentary inquiry responded to. I asked the Chair whether the gentleman from Ohio had been recognized in his own right, or whether the gentleman from Indiana had yielded to him. The answer is very material; because if the gentleman from Ohio has been recognized in his own right, of course his time will extend till twenty minutes after four o'clock; and the gentleman from Indiana has given notice of his intention to call the previous question at four o'clock.

A MEMBER. As soon as he gets the floor.

Mr. McLANE. I want to understand whether the gentleman from Ohio proceeds in his own right, or in time yielded to him by the gentleman from Indiana. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I understand that I have the floor in my own right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is prepared to answer the inquiry of the gentleman from Maryland, but it would consume time belonging to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KEIFER. Oh, no; the time spent upon a question of order ought not to be charged against the member holding the floor.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH addressed the House. [His remarks will be found in the Appendix.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, announced the passage of a bill (S. No. 1256) to authorize the construction of the Mullan wagon-road between Forts Missoula and Cœur d'Alene; in which concurrence was requested.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOSTETLER rose.

Mr. WHITE. I move that the House take a recess until half past seven o'clock.

Mr. HOSTETLER. I gave notice that at the hour which has now arrived I would call the previous question.

Mr. McMAHON. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McMAHON. It is whether a session has been ordered for this evening; and, if so, for what purpose?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. An evening session has been ordered for the consideration of pension bills.

Mr. WHITE. I have moved that the House take a recess.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is not in order while the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOSTETLER] has the floor.

Mr. BURROWS. I am informed the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions is ill and not able to be here to-night.

Mr. KEIFER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Indiana take the floor?

Mr. CONGER. It is in the power of the Chair to recognize somebody else.

Mr. KEIFER. Is it not in order to move that the House do now adjourn?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not while the gentleman from Indiana has the floor. That gentleman will state for what purpose he has risen.

Mr. HOSTETLER. In accordance with the notice I gave yesterday, I now move the previous question.

Mr. HAWLEY. Oh! do not do that.

Mr. HOSTETLER. That was the understanding come to yesterday.

day, and in accordance with that understanding I now move the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pending the demand for the previous question the motion for a recess is in order; pending which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] moves that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. KEIFER. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. BUCKNER. I renew it.

The question being put on the motion to adjourn, there were—ayes 72, noes 125.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WHITE] that the House take a recess.

Mr. WHITE. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. BROWNE. I renew it.

The question being put on the motion to take a recess, there were—ayes 82, noes 78.

Mr. BUCKNER. I call for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered, 29 members voting therefor; not one-fifth of a quorum.

Mr. WARNER. I rise to a parliamentary question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WARNER. Whether the session of this evening is devoted to pension cases exclusively, or whether it is for the continuation of the debate on the pending bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is for the consideration of pension cases exclusively.

Mr. BUCKNER. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion for a recess.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only 24 members voting therefor; not one-fifth of the last vote.

So the motion for a recess was agreed to.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

Pending the announcement of the vote, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. COX, for to-night; and

To Mr. O'NEILL, till Monday next, on account of important business.

The result of the vote was then announced; and accordingly (at four o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until seven o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

At seven o'clock and thirty minutes p. m. the House resumed its session.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolution of the House under which the session this evening is held.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Thursday evening, at seven o'clock and thirty minutes p. m., March 4, and Wednesday evening at seven o'clock and thirty minutes p. m., March 10, be set apart to receiving reports from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and to consideration and action on pension bills in their order pending in the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, no other business to be transacted.

PENSION BILLS REPORTED.

Mr. HATCH. I desire on behalf of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. COFFROTH], the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, who is detained at his room by sickness, to report from that committee the bills which I send to the desk, that they may be placed on the Calendar and printed.

The SPEAKER. That is in order under the first clause of the resolution of the House under which this evening session is held.

Mr. HATCH (for Mr. COFFROTH) reported back, with favorable recommendations, bills of the following titles; which were severally referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying reports, ordered to be printed:

The bill (H. R. No. 4780) granting arrears of pension to Mrs. Annie A. Hays;

The bill (H. R. No. 3102) granting a pension to Susan R. Johnson; and

The bill (H. R. No. 2007) granting a pension to Mary P. Thompson, widow of James B. Thompson, late captain of Company F, One hundred and ninetieth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Mr. HATCH also (for Mr. COFFROTH) reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions bills of the following titles; which were severally read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying reports, ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. No. 5060) granting a pension to James McMullen;

A bill (H. R. No. 5061) granting a pension to Anderson Langford;

A bill (H. R. No. 5062) granting a pension to Theodore Artz; and

A bill (H. R. No. 5063) granting a pension to Aaron Snyder.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CALDWELL. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar for the purpose of considering pension bills on the Calendar.

Mr. DUNNELL. I understood the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] to say that the chairman of the committee desired that cases which he had reported might be passed to-night.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri did not make that statement; he reported sundry bills on behalf of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. HATCH. I will state to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] that members of the House who presented the bills that are now on the Calendar desire that the Calendar shall be called in its regular order.

The motion of Mr. CALDWELL was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, (Mr. CALKINS in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the pension bills on the Private Calendar.

The first bill in order on the Calendar was stated to be the bill (H. R. No. 3261) granting a pension to Elizabeth Dougherty.

Mr. BAYNE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BAYNE. Are not bills on the Calendar preceding the one just referred to first entitled to consideration?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk has taken the first bill on the Calendar from the point where the Committee of the Whole left off at its last session.

ELIZABETH DOUGHERTY.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Elizabeth Dougherty, widow of Charles Dougherty, deceased, a soldier in the late war of the rebellion, and pay her a pension at the rate allowed by existing laws to the widows of deceased privates killed in the service of the United States and in the line of duty in the said war, from and after the 18th day of April, 1864, the date when the said soldier was killed while in the said service and in the line of duty as aforesaid.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 219) granting a pension to Elizabeth Dougherty, widow of Charles Dougherty, late fourth sergeant of Company C, Sixty-ninth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

The record shows that Charles Dougherty, on the 23d day of August, 1861, was enrolled in the United States service as fourth sergeant of Company C, Sixty-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and that he was honorably discharged on the 31st day of January, 1864, by reason of re-enlistment as a veteran volunteer.

The testimony of Michael Brady and Patrick Desmond, sergeant of the said company, shows that said Dougherty was on veteran furlough in Philadelphia in April, 1864, and had returned to barracks at Chester, Pennsylvania, where the regiment was to be reorganized preparatory to being sent to the front; that while so stationed there the said Dougherty, in company with the above deponent, Desmond, was ordered to proceed to Philadelphia to collect the stragglers. On April 18, 1864, while on board of the cars at Chester, Pennsylvania, in pursuance of the said order, the said Dougherty was rudely pulled off by one of the provost officers while the train was in motion, and thrown beneath the cars, sustaining injuries that resulted in death on the 20th day of April, 1864.

Edward Thompson and James O'Reilly, of the said company, testify to the gallantry and faithfulness of Dougherty while in the service. It is clearly proven that at the time the fatal injuries occurred Dougherty was in the service of the United States engaged in arresting stragglers. He had previously served three years in the Army and re-enlisted.

The marriage of said Dougherty with the petitioner is duly established.

The committee therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon laying the bill aside to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. STEVENSON. I would inquire if the testimony shows what was done with the provost-marshal who treated this soldier in this way?

Mr. WARD. I will answer the gentleman by saying that there is no evidence, I believe, before the committee on that point. It is very clear, as the report states, that the soldier was in the line of his duty and under military orders at the time the injury was sustained by him.

Mr. STEVENSON. I am satisfied the soldier was in the line of his duty and should have a pension. But I want to know, as a matter of fact, what was done with the provost-marshal.

Mr. WARD. The evidence does not show.

Mr. BUCKNER. Has this claim ever been presented to the Commissioner of Pensions?

Mr. WARD. It has been.

Mr. BUCKNER. And refused on what grounds?

Mr. WARD. On the ground that the Commissioner could not, under the technical rules of law as they now exist, allow a pension to this widow and her orphan children.

Mr. CONGER. I am not exactly aware of the rule which the Committee on Invalid Pensions has adopted in regard to the time when the pensions granted shall commence. I would thank some member of the committee to state whether any rule has been adopted by the committee in regard to dating back pensions granted to widows of soldiers who never have received pensions; whether to the time of disability or death of the soldier.

Mr. CALDWELL. I will state for the information of the House that the Committee on Invalid Pensions has adopted this rule in reference to all these bills: that they will report bills granting pensions from the date of the discharge of the soldier, where the disability occurred before his discharge, and from the date of the disability where it occurred subsequent to the discharge. In the case of a widow whose husband has been on the pension-roll the committee will report a bill granting a pension from the date of the death of the husband. In the case to which the gentleman refers I think there has been no conclusive action or resolution on the part of the committee.

Mr. CONGER. Will the gentleman state whether the practice of the House has been to date the pensions of widows back to the time of the disability or death of the soldier?

Mr. CALDWELL. So far as my own personal experience is concerned, my recollection is that it was the purpose of the Forty-fifth Congress to date all pensions from the passage of the bills, without granting any arrears at all.

Mr. CONGER. I had supposed that was the rule. The rule should be uniform one way or the other. Of course I have no choice about the matter.

Mr. CALDWELL. In order that the views of the committee may be clearly understood, I will say that while I had nothing in the world to do with the passage of the bill granting arrears of pensions, yet I hold that since that bill has become the law of the land any pension bill that passes this House should give arrears of pensions just the same as the Commissioner of Pensions grants arrears to the persons applying to him for pensions. That is my belief, and so far as I am concerned that will be the action of the committee.

Mr. ATKINS. Has this case been before the Commissioner of Pensions?

Mr. CALDWELL. It has been, and was rejected.

Mr. ATKINS. Rejected because there was no law authorizing it?

Mr. CALDWELL. So I understand.

Mr. ATKINS. And it is now proposed to enact a law in this case giving arrears of pension?

Mr. CALDWELL. It is the purpose of the Committee on Invalid Pensions to carry out in good faith, and in the letter and spirit, the pension laws of the country. There has been a great deal said here as to the policy of entertaining appeals from the Commissioner of Pensions. I want to be clearly and emphatically understood that I will never vote one dollar for pensions if there can be no appeal from the Pension Bureau; and I believe that is the determination of a number of the members of the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Of the appeals which have been brought to the House from the Commissioner of Pensions I have found that not only the law in letter and spirit but every principle of equity known to the law has been violated by the rejection of those cases. In regard to the policy which has been adopted by some here of objecting to these bills because they are appeals from the Commissioner of Pensions, I want to say that I cannot myself conceive of any greater hardship that can be inflicted upon the soldiers of the country than to have one man clothed with the absolute power of disposing of $30,000,000 without any appeal from his decision. If that is the policy to be pursued here, then I am for one ready now to quit this pension business altogether. But I want the responsibility to rest upon those gentlemen who oppose these bills.

Mr. NEAL. For the purpose of testing the sense of the committee, I move to strike out all after the word "war," in the ninth line, to the end of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the words proposed to be struck out.

The Clerk read as follows:

From and after the 18th day of April, 1864, the date when the soldier was killed, while in the said service and in the line of duty as aforesaid.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) We would like to know the effect of this amendment.

Mr. NEAL. The effect will be that the pension will commence from the date of the passage of the act.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Not from the date of the application?

Mr. NEAL. No, sir. Mr. Chairman, I believe that all these soldiers and their widows who are placed upon the pension-roll by special acts of Congress ought to have arrears of pension to the same extent and with like effect as those whose claims have been allowed at the Pension Office. At the extra session of this Congress this House passed a joint resolution, which I had the honor to introduce, constraining the arrears of pension law so as to give all persons placed upon the pension-roll arrears of pension in the same way as if their claims had been adjudicated in the Pension Office. I believe that to be right. The resolution has not yet been acted upon by the Committee on Pensions in the Senate; for I inquired only a day or two ago of one of the members of that committee, and was informed that they had not yet taken it up for consideration. It seems to me that we ought to pass these bills in the same shape in which they have been heretofore enacted. In the Forty-fifth Congress no bill was passed dating the pension back beyond the date of the passage of the act. This amendment, if adopted, will place this pensioner in precisely the same situation with pensioners who were put upon the rolls by the action of preceding Congresses. If the joint resolution which passed the House without a single dissenting voice shall be passed in the Senate, as I trust it will be by a like vote, then all persons pensioned by special acts will enjoy the arrears of pension to the same extent as if their pension claims had been allowed by the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. STEVENSON. The gentleman will allow me to make a suggestion: I did not distinctly hear his amendment read; but as I understood it the effect of it will be that this particular pensioner and others receiving pensions under pension bills similar in language must run the risk of the passage of an act hereafter placing them upon the same footing as those who received the arrears of pension.

Mr. NEAL. The effect of this amendment, if adopted, will be that persons put upon the rolls by the action of the Forty-sixth Congress will be in precisely the same position as those who have been put upon the rolls by the action of the Forty-fifth, the Forty-fourth, and preceding Congresses. In other words, they will not get any arrears unless Congress should pass the joint resolution now pending in the Senate or some other act giving them arrears.

Mr. STEVENSON. Let me suggest to the gentleman that no possible harm can come from the passage of this bill in the form reported by the committee, because if the resolution to which he has referred should pass, this pensioner and others pensioned under bills of a similar character will get no more than if an amendment of this kind should prevail. On the other hand, in the event of the failure of that resolution, they will be placed on the same footing with those who get the benefit of the arrears.

Mr. NEAL. If this bill passes in the form reported by the committee, then this woman obtains a pension which dates from the death of her husband, while a woman who may have been placed upon the pension-rolls under precisely similar circumstances by the last Congress will draw her pension only from the date of the passage of the act.

Mr. HUMPHREY. If the action of a former Congress was wrong, let us make our own action right.

Mr. WILSON. Let us correct the error now.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I hope the House will vote down this amendment. I do not know what reason there is in the gentleman's argument when he advocates the amendment and at the same time states that he himself presented a joint resolution providing for just what the committee recommend in this bill. Nor do I see by what right or reason we should be judged by the action of the Forty-fifth Congress. It is our duty to act equitably and justly upon these claims. If this bill is correct to-day, it is our duty to pass it. It proposes to give this pensioner all the rights that are given under the general law—nothing more. If the Forty-fifth Congress failed to do this in similar cases, let the joint resolution which passed the House be adopted by the Senate, and then all these pensioners will be on an equality.

I do not wish to occupy the time of the House this evening. I hope that we came here for action; that each bill will be discussed on its merits. I trust the general pension laws and the duty of the Committee on Invalid Pensions will not be discussed.

Mr. HATCH. The gentleman will allow me to remind him, as he was a member of the sub-committee which acted on the subject, that the Committee on Invalid Pensions to-day reported favorably a bill introduced by the gentleman from the first district of Missouri [Mr. CLARDY] giving to the widow the same arrears of pension to which the husband would have been entitled had he made his application and obtained a pension during his life. That bill, which the gentleman no doubt remembers, went upon the Calendar to-day.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. NEAL, it was not agreed to.

Mr. SAMFORD. I understood a question to be asked by the gentleman from Tennessee which I have not yet heard answered by any member of the Pension Committee. That question was whether or not these special acts grant pensions under circumstances and in cases not provided for by the general pension law. I understand a gentleman over the way from the Committee on Invalid Pensions to say perhaps that the Commissioner refuses to grant this individual case because it did not come within the general rule. Then, Mr. Speaker, we are passing special acts which are not provided for by the general law.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Under his interpretation.

Mr. WARD. The claim was rejected, not upon the ground that this man did not come within the pension laws which entitled the widow of a soldier killed in the service to a pension, but that this widow was not able with the evidence she had at hand to bring her case within the technical rules of evidence required by the Department in order to establish her claim.

Mr. SAMFORD. Then I ask the gentleman whether she has brought more evidence before the committee than before the Commissioner of Pensions?

Mr. WARD. I do not know that she did.

Mr. SAMFORD. I would ask the gentleman a further question, whether the Invalid Pensions Committee requires less testimony than the Commissioner?

Mr. WARD. Not at all; but the Invalid Pensions Committee is able to take this inquiry beyond the strict letter of the technical rule. It has been found in this case that this widow and her orphan children were the widow and children of a man who had served three or four years faithfully in the Army; that he had been detailed by military orders upon special duty, still being in the Army, and that the kind of duty he was thus detailed on under those orders was not the species of duty the Commissioner of Pensions thought he could grant a pension for, and when they considered the case they found he was engaged in a kind of service which eminently entitled his widow and orphan children to have the pension the Government gave.

Mr. BUCKNER. I do not suppose there is any gentleman on this floor who would not be willing and anxious that every man who under the law of the land is entitled to a pension, either as a soldier or dependent relative, should have it. The action of this Congress heretofore and its every-day action has shown that we are not disposed to be stinted in that direction, but on the contrary to be liberal. The question is not whether we want to grant a pension or not, but the question is this: to decide who is entitled to a pension.

But as my friend from Kentucky says we are to supervise the action of a tribunal vested by law specially for the purpose of deciding these questions; but whenever he has given a judgment which on the one hand concludes the Government but does not preclude the claimant, if that is the ground, as I understand, on which the Invalid Pensions Committee has acted, I say it is about time we should call a halt in this business.

Why, sir, what precedent have you that will justify this course toward any other branch of this Government? Do you say the same thing in reference to the Patent Office? Here is a tribunal where are six or seven hundred officials presumably skilled in this business, with various officers to help them, with the Attorney-General and his assistants to decide the law, a tribunal invested by law with the decision as to the facts; and the party who presents his claim is, in point of fact, impliedly bound by that jurisdiction, and it is only a matter of grace and favor on the part of Congress when it takes jurisdiction of any matter which has already been decided by the Commissioner.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. We so understand it, and put it on the ground of grace.

Mr. BUCKNER. I wish to say, if that is the ground upon which these claims are to be paid; if, as the gentleman says, the Commissioner has technical objections; if it is upon the ground he does not give the same construction to the evidence the Committee on Invalid Pensions chooses to give, then I say there will be no end to it.

Mr. STEVENSON. In many cases, as many of the members of the House know who have been written to by parties in reference to pensions, the applications have been rejected on technicalities, and sometimes on very small technicalities, by the Commissioner of Pensions; and the only remedy the applicant has, and the only remedy he can have, is to appeal to Congress. The gentleman from Missouri does not mean to take the position that when the Commissioner of Pensions rejects an application upon some supposed technicality then the applicant has no remedy at all. His only remedy is to come to Congress.

Mr. BUCKNER. My idea is this: where it is a question of the weight of testimony, where the Commissioner has decided on the weight of the testimony that the applicant is not entitled to a pension, I say he ought not to have the right to appeal to Congress and Congress ought not to give it; otherwise we should abolish the Pension Office. If, on the other hand, he can show equitable circumstances, or can show circumstances which appeal to the sense of equity and conscience of Congress, then it is a proper subject for investigation here. But for us to come here and give our version as to the weight of testimony when the Commissioner of Pensions after examination has decided, I say if we adopt such a course then there will be no end to this matter.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. State it.

Mr. HUMPHREY. My point of order is that there is a bill before the committee and I have not heard a word said about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is not well taken. The gentleman from Missouri still has the floor.

Mr. HATCH. I desire to ask my colleague a question. He has spent many years upon the bench. I desire to ask if he has never known a case presented to him as judge where the party had no remedy at law, and yet he, as chancellor, could find a remedy that would relieve him?

Mr. BUCKNER. That is the very case which I have made an exception of; and if the gentleman will come in here and say this case is not a question depending upon the weight or strength of the testimony before the Commissioner, as this appears to be, but there are equitable considerations—there are facts outside, and I could mention a great many—then I hold this is a case where Congress ought to interfere, and either the law ought to be amended so as to give jurisdiction to the Commissioner of Pensions, or we should interfere in some other way.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I hope that in the discussion of the theories of the pension laws the merits of this case will not be overlooked. I do not know of a stronger claim in behalf of any widow than this case presents. Here is a man who enlisted, served honorably for three years, who was honorably discharged and re-enlisted as a veteran soldier, and who, while on veteran furlough, being detailed to do a certain duty by proper authority, was killed in the line of duty. Now his widow comes and seeks for a pension. I cannot imagine a better claim than the one presented here, where a widow's husband was killed in line of duty. I do not know what are the technical objections, but I do know that somebody ought to grant this widow a pension; and if the Pension Department does not do it, then Congress should immediately apply the relief.

Mr. ATKINS. I desire to ask the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania a question.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Certainly.

Mr. ATKINS. I wish to ask if he does not think it would be a much better practice, and especially as he is Speaker of this House, for this Congress to address itself to the making of a law that would cover these meritorious cases, and not bring them here before Congress for gentlemen to vote on in order to popularize themselves in their own districts?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I have a right to speak in this case, for nearly all the men who enlisted in this regiment came from the city I in part represent; and I want to say here that that regiment somehow or other was very often placed in the position where David put Uriah. They were in the front of the battle nearly all the time. It was an Irish regiment, and hence I feel some interest in it. But to the point. I do believe if Congress could rid itself of these cases it would be desirable to establish a court to pass upon pension cases; but I never will agree, as the gentleman from Kentucky has so forcibly said, that one man with no judicial authority, as it were, thrown around him shall have absolute power to reject pensioners' claims.

Mr. SPARKS. I wish to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania, whether all the cases reported thus far for pension claims are not from the gentleman's district or State?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) It does not matter where they come from; if the merit of the case prompts its passage, then it should be promptly passed.

Mr. TALBOTT. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. SPARKS. I think it does matter in this—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland has the floor.

Mr. SPARKS. I want to make a rejoinder to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. It does seem to me—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Maryland, but will recognize the gentleman from Illinois after he concludes.

Mr. TALBOTT. I merely desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WARD] a question. He has stated there are technical objections to this case, and that is the reason the Commissioner of Pensions did not grant it. Now I would like him to state what these technical objections are.

Mr. WARD. I will state to the gentleman the husband of the applicant in this case was killed while on a furlough and not, strictly speaking, while in the line of duty.

Mr. SPARKS. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. HATCH. I rise to a privileged question. I desire to move that the committee now rise with a view to offering a motion in the House to limit debate.

Mr. SPARKS. That is not a privileged question, and the Chair promised to recognize me.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the right of any member of the committee to move at any time that the committee rise, and the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois if that is voted down.

Mr. ATKINS. Can you take the gentleman off the floor to offer a motion that the committee rise?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois was not on the floor at the time when the motion to rise was recognized by the Chair.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. SPARKS. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. No business will be done until the committee is in order. Gentlemen will suspend conversation. The gentleman from Illinois will state his point of order.

Mr. SPARKS. My point of order is that a gentleman cannot rise to a privileged question with the view of making that privileged question simply give him the floor for the purpose of making a motion that the committee rise, as the gentleman from Missouri has done.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. SPARKS. If the gentleman from Wisconsin should withdraw himself from the House I do not know that it would do anybody any harm. I think I was on the floor, and the Chair stated he would recognize me.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPARKS] is not well taken. The Chair stated he would recognize the gentleman from Illinois after the gentleman from Maryland had finished his remarks. But before the gentleman from Illinois rose and was recognized, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] rose to a privileged question, and being recognized, the gentleman made a privileged motion, which the Chair thinks is in order.

Mr. HATCH. I withdraw the motion for the present, until the gentleman from Illinois is heard; and I hope that after he has been heard we shall then have a vote.

Mr. SPARKS. I am certainly desirous that the committee should come to a vote on this and every other case that comes before it. But I wanted to answer the argument of the distinguished Speaker of the House. These cases, sir, so far as I have seen, have all come from the State of Pennsylvania. I know that Pennsylvania did not furnish all the soldiers, and you know it. But a Committee on Pensions may be so organized—not intentionally, of course, but so organized—that a locality can be represented and all those from that locality that claim pensions can get through, while the other parts of the country may be neglected. Is it fair to your district, sir, that this House should act upon pension claims coming from one locality alone? There may be influences at work by which parties can get before the Pension Committee, while others may not be in condition to get before it.

Mr. HATCH. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. SPARKS. I will allow the gentleman, of course.

Mr. HATCH. In justice to the chairman of the committee, who is detained at his room by sickness, I desire to restate to the Committee of the Whole that the chairman of this committee, who reported these bills, remained here during the entire Christmas holidays and gave his time with a clerk that he employed outside of the House force to assist him, in considering the bills that had been referred to him as a sub-committee; and that is the reason why so many more of his bills have been reported to the House at this date than have been reported by any other member of the committee.

Mr. SPARKS. Precisely. I was not here during that time. My constituents and those of my colleagues are making their applications for pensions—where? To the Pension Office, an office organized by law to examine and pass upon these matters. Now, when you attempt to make this House the tribunal for granting pensions you might as well dismiss the other tribunal, the Pension Office. If not, a part of these claims will go to the Pension Office and the others will seek this House.

I think I have demonstrated—since I have been a member of this House, and if I have not I have demonstrated nothing—that I am as much in favor of pensioning meritorious claimants as any man in this Congress, but only meritorious ones should be allowed, as all fair-minded men must agree. The Commissioner of Pensions (and I presume he is an honorable man) would tell you, I think, to-day that there are perhaps from 10 to 15 per cent. of the existing pensions that are unjust. Is that not unfair and prejudicial to those pensioners who are really meritorious and entitled to pensions? Sir, a government that will not protect and properly care for those who at the risk of life defend it, ought not to exist. Ours attempts to do this and will do it. Now, sir, if the law is not sufficient, if the law is such that the Commissioner of Pensions can take advantage of technicalities, let us amend it and make it so plain and broad that he cannot do it, so that all who are entitled to pensions can come in on equal terms, and be treated equally and alike—

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SPARKS. After I have completed this sentence.

Or if the Commissioner of Pensions does not discharge his duty efficiently and with impartiality let us make the Administration that appoints him and keeps him in office responsible for his dereliction of duty. Is he failing to discharge his duties properly, efficiently, honestly, fairly, and according to the law? Then it is the duty of this Administration to turn him out and get a man in the office who will do what is right. But I must presume that he is doing his duty. Is your law deficient? Then it is the duty of Congress to enact a law that will cover all fair and honest claims that may be presented.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Introduce such a law and we will put it through under a suspension of the rules.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois this question: Did the gentleman hear the testimony in this case read?

Mr. SPARKS. I am speaking, Mr. Chairman, to no particular case.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Then you are not in order.

Mr. SPARKS. I am speaking to this point, that if the law is deficient it ought to be made so plain as to cover this case, if it be a meritorious one, and all others of the same class.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. There is a particular case before the committee. The gentleman is speaking to no particular case, and therefore he is out of order.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman answer the question which I have put to him?

Mr. SPARKS. I am speaking in favor of an amendment of the general law, which will cover all these cases.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I asked the gentleman a fair question and I want a fair answer. Do the facts disclosed by the report in this case justify this House in granting this pension?

Mr. SPARKS. Well, I really do not know. I have not had leisure to examine it fully, and am speaking to a general principle and not a particular case.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Then I want to ask the gentleman this question: how does he make his speech, just delivered, applicable to this case? I cannot see.

Mr. SPARKS. I understand this claim has been before the Commissioner of Pensions, and that he has rejected it. It is urged that he rejected it upon technicalities. Now, if the Commissioner rejected this claim upon some technicality of the law, or because the claimant failed to make his case good by evidence substantially good but technically deficient, then it shows that the law is insufficient. Hence I insist that we should so amend the law that the Commissioner of Pensions, as an honest and efficient officer, which we must presume him to be, cannot reject a fair claim.

With respect to this particular claim, I did not hear the report in the case read. I will take it for granted, however, that it is a fair claim, and that the pension should be allowed; but it should be allowed in the proper manner and at the proper place—at the Pension Office.

Mr. HUTCHINS. Let me inquire of the gentleman if he is in favor of Congress passing any pension bill for an individual claimant.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FINLEY] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. FINLEY. I will answer the question of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. HARRIS.] I say that this is a meritorious case. I say that the facts disclosed in this case show clearly that it is a meritorious case, and for one I am going to vote for it.

But while I say that, I want to put in another word, to stick a pin right here, and say something which occurs to me to be appropos. The democratic party stands responsible for the action of this Congress. In the Forty-fifth Congress we passed a bill granting arrears of pensions, involving an expenditure of about $26,000,000. We passed also an annual pension bill appropriating about $31,000,000; making a total of $57,000,000. Yet we got no credit for it. [Laughter.] The republicans in the State of Ohio held up the democratic party to the soldiers and to the people as an extravagant party. They pointed to the appropriations made by the last Congress of $190,000,000, and said, "There is your democratic administration; there is your democratic party which has had control of both branches of Congress for years, and it has swelled the expenditures of the Government to $190,000,000." And for that very reason they appealed to the soldiers to vote the republican ticket.

Mr. BROWNE. And they voted it. [Laughter.]

Mr. FINLEY. I say that the democratic party in the Forty-fifth and Forty-sixth Congresses has done more for the soldiers of the country than was done in the three preceding Congresses in which the republican party had control. Yet why do we get no credit for that? Gentlemen on the other side of the House will stand up here and endeavor to make capital against the democratic "confederate brigadier" House of Representatives, and tell the people and the soldiers that we are not to be trusted, that we are unsafe, that we were disloyal during the war. Yet they are very willing that we shall vote millions of dollars for the soldiers, as we have done cheerfully heretofore. These men here from the South who were in arms against the Government, who cannot under any circumstances expect to obtain one dollar of the money so appropriated, as members of the democratic party are found here daily voting liberally for the soldiers; and I want to say here and now, and I want the country and the soldiers and the soldiers' widows to know it, that the confederate brigadiers have done more for the soldiers and their widows during the time they have been here than has been done for them by the republican party in the last ten years.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the committee now rise for the purpose of closing debate on the pending bill.

Mr. TAYLOR. I claim the floor to speak on the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] moves that the committee now rise for the purpose of obtaining an order from the House to limit debate on the pending bill.

The motion was agreed to upon a division—ayes 71, noes 17.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CALKINS reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration the Private Calendar and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of further considering the pension bills on the Private Calendar; and pending that motion I move that when the House shall again in Committee of the Whole resume consideration of the Private Calendar all debate upon the pending bill shall close in one-half minute.

The motion to limit debate was agreed to.

The motion to go into Committee of the Whole was also agreed to. The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, and Mr. CALKINS resumed the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House all debate upon the pending bill has been limited to one-half minute. If no further debate is desired, the question is upon ordering the bill to be laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

The question was taken; and the bill was ordered to be laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

SAMUEL B. HUTCHINSON.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill H. R. No. 3100, introduced by Mr. KLOTZ and reported by Mr. COFFROTH. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to restore to the pension-roll the name of Mary Ann Shurlock, and to pay to the said Samuel B. Hutchinson, her guardian, the amount of money due her on certificate 153434, from September 4, 1871, to February 5, 1876, the time of the death of his ward, the said Mary Ann Shurlock.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Samuel B. Hutchinson, guardian and next friend of Mary Ann Shurlock, sister of the late Captain Samuel Shurlock, Company D, Eighty-first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

The evidence presented before your committee shows that by a special act of Congress, approved March 1, 1869, the name of Mary Ann Shurlock, dependent sister of Samuel Shurlock, late a captain of the Eighty-first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and who was killed in action at or near Fair Oaks, Virginia, on the 15th day of June, 1862, was placed on the pension-roll at the rate of $10 per month, and made payable to Samuel B. Hutchinson, "committee," or her guardian, a resident of Mauch Chunk, Pennsylvania.

That the pension certificate is numbered 153434, and bears date September 8, 1871; that your petitioner, the said Samuel B. Hutchinson, received the pension up to September 4, 1871, and soon thereafter left for Nottaway County, Virginia, and from there to Virginia City, Nevada, and did not return until May 22, 1876, when his said ward, Mary Ann Shurlock, had died; that he provided for his said ward all this time, and expended the sum of $650 for her maintenance, &c., which amount he advanced to James Belford, of Mauch Chunk, Pennsylvania, his son-in-law, with whom she had taken up her abode, and who, under oath, acknowledges the receipt of the said $650 in payment for the maintenance, clothing, and funeral expenses of said Mary Ann Shurlock, ward of Samuel B. Hutchinson, your petitioner. Owing to his absence from home, and his ignorance of the fact that he could draw the pension money at any other place, he advanced the money aforesaid out of his own purse, expecting, of course, to reimburse himself with the uncollected pension money, as he supposed, due his ward; but no demand for same having been made in the time prescribed by law, three years, payment thereof was refused at the Pension Bureau, and he, the petitioner, informed that in view of his ward's demise, February 5, 1876, (and the dropping of pensioner from the rolls, no claim for payment having been made for three years), there was no law under which her name could be restored to the pension-roll.

This being the fact, your committee, with a view to at least in part reimburse your petitioner, Samuel B. Hutchinson, the said "committee" or guardian of Mary Ann Shurlock, deceased, for the support of whom it is shown, under oath, that he expended the sum of $650 out of his own private funds, report and recommend the passage of accompanying bill, which provides for the restoration of the name of said Mary Ann Shurlock on the pension-roll from September 4, 1871, to February 5, 1876, and which, if allowed, would only amount to $530.33.

Mr. KLOTZ. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

JAMES P. SAYER.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1460) granting an increase of pension to James P. Sayer.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed, from and after the passage of this act, to carry upon the pension-rolls the name of James P. Sayer, late of Company C, One hundred and fortieth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, at the rate of $30 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1460) granting an increase of pension to James P. Sayer, late a private in Company C, One hundred and fortieth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, having had the same under consideration, respectfully submit the following report:

It is in evidence that the claimant received four distinct wounds at the battle of Gettysburg, Pennsylvania: one a gunshot wound in left leg, which subsequently necessitated the amputation of leg below the knee; a gunshot wound in each shoulder, and a shell wound on right fore-arm. That he now draws a pension at the rate of $18 per month, the same as is allowed by law to those who have lost a leg below the knee and have full use of both arms for clerical work. It also appears in evidence that claimant made application to the Pension Office for increase in 1877, offering medical and other testimony as to the condition of these several wounds and the disability resulting therefrom, which application was rejected on the ground that claimant was then receiving all the pension to which he was entitled under existing law, notwithstanding the painful and increasing disability from three several wounds other than the one which of itself entitled him to the pension he was receiving. Dr. George A. Dougherty, United States examining surgeon, September 19, 1873, says of these wounds: "Large cicatrix on left shoulder, deep-seated; frequently has numbness in middle and ring fingers, sometimes in arm; cicatrix of right shoulder from a flesh wound; cicatrix on right fore-arm, tender on pressure and adherent to tendons; at times painful." Dr. T. D. M. Wilson, United States examining surgeon, October 22, 1877, says of shoulder wounds: "Nervous sensibility partially destroyed, numbness of whole hand, and cramping when much used." Dr. A. S. McElree, a reputable physician, in affidavit dated March 21, 1879, says of wound of shoulder and right arm, that they render him unfit to perform manual labor, and that he performs light office work with great inconvenience and physical suffering; that arms very often become void of feeling and to some extent powerless when used in writing, &c. Dr. W. R. Thompson, the family physician of claimant, who amputated his limb, in his affidavit March, 1879, says of these wounds that at the time they were received they were also attacked with gangrene; they are now the seat of unsightly scars, a source of constant suffering, and have permanently impaired the use of the arms, so that writing or other employment becomes tiresome and painful.

It also appears in evidence that this soldier enlisted when very young and was exceptionally heroic and temperate in habits, himself witnessing the amputation of his leg without a tremor, positively refusing either chloroform or ether.

The law provides a pension of $50 per month for total disability, and $18 per month for loss of leg below the knee. The claimant in this bill asks an increase from $18 to $30 per month.

The committee recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. WARNER. I move to amend by adding to the bill the following:

Subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, including the provisions of the act approved June 25, 1879, and all subsequent acts.

Mr. Chairman, I do not question the justice of this claim; I will concede that an increase is merited in this case. But while that may be true, I do know that there are others who ought to have the benefit of any increase given to this man. They have had their pensions rated in the Pension Office by a board of surgeons who rate disabilities upon principles they have established, and which they apply to all cases. In this case, however, we have a surgeon in some district in Pennsylvania giving his opinion of the rate of disability. Now, I think it must be apparent to every gentleman here that by such a method of rating disability we may have one man drawing a pension for a certain disability and another man somewhere else drawing a lower rate of pension for a like or even a worse disability. A system of this kind is obviously so unjust that I think we ought not to go on passing claims in this way.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WARNER. Most cheerfully.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. If, according to the contemplation of the law, it is worth $18 a month to have lost a leg below the knee—which I understand to be the provision of the law—is it not worth something more to have gun-shot wounds in both shoulders and in the right hand?

Mr. WARNER. I was not raising any question of that kind. I have constituents who are drawing $18 a month for the loss of one limb and several other wounds. I say that if this claimant should have his pension increased other similar claimants ought to have theirs increased.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. If there are other similar claimants.

Mr. WARNER. This committee should put them together—should bring in a general bill covering such cases and rating the disability in such a way that all who are similarly disabled may receive like pensions.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I want my friend to say whether in his judgment the case here presented is not an equitable one for increase of pension. If it is, then it seems to me the gentleman's speech is all out of order.

Mr. WARNER. Well, that may be the gentleman's opinion; but I hope this House is becoming convinced that this is not the place to rate disability—that this House is not competent to decide upon such a question.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman explain to the House what will be the effect of his amendment upon the bill?

Mr. WARNER. I will endeavor to answer. Section 4720 of the Revised Statutes—

Mr. DE LA MATYR. This House has already at the last evening session decided four times against this very proposition, after listening to four different speeches from the same gentleman.

Mr. WARNER. I do not yield to the gentleman from Indiana. I call the attention of the committee to this section of the law:

SEC. 4720. When the rate, commencement, and duration of a pension allowed by special act are fixed by such act, they shall not be subject to be varied by the provisions and limitations of the general pension laws, but when not thus fixed the rate and continuance of the pension shall be subject to variation in accordance with the general laws, and its commencement shall date from the passage of the special act, &c.

Now, the amendment I have offered allows this man to have an increase of pension; it removes all technical difficulties; but it sends him where the one hundred and fifty thousand other pensioners have to go for a determination of the rate of pension they are entitled to receive. I say that it is not right to select one man here and there, and give him a pension at a special rate which is not granted to others equally disabled.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman allow me to ask another question?

Mr. WARNER. I will.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. Would not this amendment be equivalent to a defeat of the bill so far as the bill proposes any increase?

Mr. WARNER. Not at all. If there is any technical difficulty in the way of this man's receiving his pension, it will be removed by this act. Then for the amount of his pension he will go where all other pensioners go. This is all I claim. This principle is right. I do not see how any gentleman can really take ground against it.

Mr. BAILEY. I would like to have the gentleman point out any provision in the pension laws (a copy of which he seems to hold in his hand) under which this man can receive more than $18 a month if his case is referred back to the Commissioner of Pensions. I want to hear that provision of law for my own information.

Mr. WARNER. The bill itself grants an increase.

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. WARNER. The rate of increase will be determined in the Pension Office.

Mr. BAILEY. Has the Commissioner of Pensions any authority to give this man more than $18 per month, if the case is referred back to the Pension Office?

Mr. WARNER. There is authority given in this very bill as I understand. This man is granted an increase by the bill itself.

Mr. BAILEY. My question relates to the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. WARNER. My amendment refers only to the rating, that is all.

Mr. BAILEY. By the provision of law has the Commissioner the right to increase it at all?

Mr. WARNER. None; except what is given in this special act.

Mr. HUMPHREY. This does not give any.

Mr. WARNER. I understand it does. If it does not, then, Mr. Chairman, if that be the case, the reasons I have urged are all the more potent. If there are five hundred men—and it is in their behalf I appeal—if there are five hundred men who have lost limbs and have wounds as severe as this, is it not right for them to have their pensions increased as well as this single one, whether they come here and ask Congress for it or not? It is our duty to make laws for all—to treat all alike as nearly as we can.

Mr. CONGER. I ask why, with that intense desire in behalf of the soldiers of whom he speaks, the gentleman has not introduced a bill for an increase of pension?

Mr. WARNER. I have already introduced two or three bills into the House.

Mr. CONGER. Why not introduce the remainder and let us go on and pass these bills in order to reach them?

Mr. WARNER. I will answer the gentleman why. We can go over one or two hundred claims of this kind, as I have before shown, and leave ten thousand untouched. I think this House is becoming convinced that it is incumbent upon it to provide some better way by which justice can be meted out to meritorious claimants on the one hand and false claimants kept away from the Treasury on the other. The pension-roll is a roll of honor, pensions are dues, and I am in favor of admitting every man who is disabled and entitled to it to a place there, but I am not willing—and I believe in this that I reflect the opinion of soldiers generally—that others shall be permitted to do so. I am not saying that the case before us is not a meritorious case.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. You do not reflect the sentiments of the soldiers by any such remarks.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Tell us how a pensioner can ever get a pension while he remains upon the floor.

Mr. WARNER. I do not understand the gentleman's remarks.

Mr. HUMPHREY. How can any pensioner ever get a pension if the time is all taken up by talking while we have a long Private Calendar before us.

Mr. WARNER. If we will take time enough, if it be a week, to discuss and to enact a law providing a way, we will have done a great deal towards expediting the giving rightful claimants their dues.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Is the gentleman a member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions?

Mr. WARNER. I am not.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I did not think it was likely. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania who introduced the bill desires to be heard upon it.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I desire to know how much time the gentleman from Ohio has remaining.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is unlimited. Each gentleman recognized has an hour.

Mr. WARNER. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I stood by the side of this soldier at the battle of Gettysburg, and I should like to say a word in favor of the bill.

Mr. WARNER. I will say to my friend from Pennsylvania I do not understand and am not discussing the merit of this particular bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio has surrendered the floor, and the gentleman from West Virginia has been recognized.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Chairman, I have only one word to say. I have no desire to prevent the passage of any just claim, but there is a misapprehension in reference to the law. I take it my friend from Ohio labors under a misapprehension. Eighteen dollars a month under the law is all this party can be granted at the Pension Office. If he receives a larger pension, it is by virtue of an act of Congress. Therefore I take it, if his amendment be adopted, it precludes this party receiving any more, and puts him back.

Mr. WARNER. If that will be the effect of the amendment, I withdraw it.

Mr. WILSON. While I have the floor I desire to say a word in reply to the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Missouri as to these bills coming here; and what I desire to reply to is this: Under the law we have passed the Commissioner of Pensions has a certain restraint thrown around him and rules prescribed which he cannot disregard. There are many meritorious claims he cannot allow. He is hampered by the action of Congress and the rules prescribed by this House. I therefore suggest, where he cannot grant a pension, the party comes to Congress, not with an appeal—

Mr. BUCKNER. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. Is this a case as to the strength of testimony or what weight it shall have?

Mr. WILSON. I am glad the gentleman has asked the question. Now, there are cases where the Commissioner cannot allow a pension for the only reason that the proof is not of the kind and character that he is required to get. A party takes no appeal here; he is rejected there and he makes his original application before this House. I can better explain my position by an illustration. Take two men who fought on the same day, who were wounded in the same battle and fell on the same day. One of these men had it in his power to prove by certificate from some officer that he was wounded, and is pensioned by the Pension Department. The other unfortunately cannot furnish an official certificate, he cannot get the official proofs required by the Department, and consequently he cannot get his pension. Both of these men fought on the same day, both fought equally well under the same flag. One is fortunate enough to get evidence enough to sustain his claim before the Department, while the other is unfortunate not to have that evidence.

Mr. HATCH. Why not change the law in that respect?

Mr. WILSON. Yes, sir; you ought to change the law; and when I was on the Pension Committee four years ago I tried and so did the Pension Committee to get the law changed. But the fact that the law has not been changed does not lie at the door of the man who applies for a pension. The fault is with Congress. Ten years ago we should have amended that law. To-day we should do it. Because Congress has not amended it you should not prevent these men from applying here. They should have that privilege when their cases cannot come technically within the requirements of the law as administered by the Pension Bureau. They have been denied by the Pension Department; it is not their fault. Nor are they denied by the fault of the Commissioner of Pensions, but they are denied because there is an omission on the part of Congress. Therefore, as long as the law has not been changed let us adhere to the practice heretofore prevailing in Congress. We have authority as wide and unlimited as the wind to pension whomsoever we believe presents a meritorious case.

I trust, therefore, that in the consideration of various claims on the Calendar we are not any longer to hear "this is an appeal from the decision of the Commissioner of Pensions."

The Commissioner of Pensions I believe has performed his duty honestly, faithfully, and well, but there are claims where he cannot allow a pension, and those claims, many of them, are full of merit. There are claims which he has not been able to allow, where the Committee on Pensions are unanimous, as they always are, where they report in favor of a claim, and such cases should be allowed. You remit these claims to the Committee on Invalid Pensions. Eleven gentlemen constitute that committee. There are more or less of lawyers among them. Every gentleman, I take it, on that committee is equally qualified, thoroughly as competent and honest as the Commissioner of Pensions. When you have the combined judgment of eleven of these gentlemen, and they recommend a claim as meritorious, I for one am willing to follow the report of the committee, as I generally do the report of other committees.

This is a meritorious claim. This gallant young man is certainly entitled to what is asked. He was wounded four times at the battle of Gettysburg.

Mr. FINLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. I do not know whether he is a member of the Pension Committee or not, but I would like to ask him if there is not now pending before that committee a bill of the character to which he refers?

Mr. WILSON. I have not been a member of the Pension Committee for four years. I cannot answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. GODSHALK. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GODSHALK. My point is this: that the amendment having been withdrawn debate is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state, this being consideration day, as long as gentlemen desire to speak the Chair has no discretion but to recognize them. The committee alone can limit debate by rising for that purpose.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a single word on this bill. I will not detain the committee but a moment. I happen to know this soldier, and I introduced the bill for his relief. I stood beside him at the battle of Gettysburg. I know he received four distinct wounds in that battle. I do not think any gentleman on this floor after reading this report can doubt the justice and equity of giving this soldier an increased pension.

The question presenting itself to this House and this committee is this: Why should this claimant come to Congress? I want to tell you why. He comes to Congress simply because under general laws he can only obtain a pension for loss of leg below the knee. In common with all other soldiers who have lost a leg below the knee, and yet who possibly suffer from no other wounds or disability, he has obtained $18 a month. He has, in addition to that, been wounded in both shoulders and in the right arm. He is, to my certain knowledge, frequently unable to do clerical work. He is suffering continually with pain, and unable to do professional work. He was an industrious and gallant soldier, willing to earn his livelihood when he can, anywhere and at any time. A soldier is entitled to $18 a month who simply has lost a leg below the knee. I hope the law may be amended so as to provide for these several wounds, but until the law is amended this poor, wounded, crippled, heroic soldier should have the benefit of the equitable consideration of Congress.

Mr. WARNER. Will the gentleman allow me—

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I have the floor and do not yield. Is not the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. WARNER,] a soldier himself, drawing a large pension, willing to allow this private soldier, who suffered as he never did, to draw the pension which he is justly entitled to draw under every rule of justice and equity? I say it does not become that gentleman to stand upon this floor and impede the progress of this just claim.

I am willing to amend the law. I introduced a bill at the last session of Congress to give just such soldiers as this $24 a month. I was sustained in that by the sentiment of this country. The Legislature of Ohio unanimously passed resolutions instructing the gentleman to vote for that bill.

Mr. WARNER. Bring your bill in here.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. That being so, the Legislature of his own State having instructed him to vote a pension of $24 to a man who had simply lost his leg below the knee, that gentleman now stands to bar this gallant Union private soldier from getting what is his due.

Mr. WARNER. Oh! the gentleman knows that is not so.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. This man received four distinct wounds, which disqualified him for manual labor and have caused him continuous suffering. And am I to be told, Mr. Chairman, to-night that a gallant Union soldier, as I admit the gentleman from Ohio was, for I know it—am I to be told that it is right for him to stand here to-night consuming the time, the valuable time, of this committee, and thereby barring claims like this, which the general law cannot grant—exceptional claims because these are exceptional wounds; exceptional because the sufferings of this man are exceptional? Can it be that we are to sit here hour after hour placing barriers in the way of these gallant men? I trust this bill will be passed promptly.

Mr. WARNER rose. [Cries of "Vote! Vote!"]
Mr. WARNER. I will not be put down by cries of "Vote! vote!" It is my right to be heard.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate.

Mr. PAGE. It is not the gentleman's right to talk more than once upon the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri, that the committee rise.

Mr. WARNER. If the gag is to be applied I shall demand a quorum.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is out of order.

Mr. ATKINS. I shall demand a quorum if the gag is to be applied to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KLOTZ. He has done nothing but talk while he has been here. The motion that the committee rise was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CALKINS reported that the Committee of the Whole House had had under consideration the Private Calendar, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar; and pending that I move that all debate on the pending bill and amendments be limited to—how much time does the gentleman from Ohio want?

Mr. WARNER. I want five minutes.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. No, sir. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question being put on the motion to adjourn, it was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House, pending which he moves that all debate on the pending bill and amendments thereto be closed in five minutes.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. I move to amend by making it one minute.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The motion to limit debate on the pending bill and amendments thereto to five minutes was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BUCKNER. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 84, noes 3.

Mr. BUCKNER. A quorum has not voted.

Mr. HATCH. I make the point of order that the gentleman did not rise in his seat to make the point that a quorum had not voted.

Mr. BUCKNER. I do not insist on it.

So the motion was agreed to; and the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, Mr. CALKINS in the chair.

Mr. CONGER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] is recognized. The Chair hopes the gentleman from Michigan will not insist on that point.

Mr. PAGE. I insist if the gentleman from Michigan does not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hopes the gentleman will not insist. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized.

Mr. WARNER. I regret exceedingly, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. PAGE. I object to the gentleman speaking again upon this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair appeals to the gentleman from California to withdraw his objection and let the gentleman from Ohio proceed.

Mr. PAGE. I think that the debate ought to be divided among the members of this House, and I do object to its being monopolized by any one member of the House.

Mr. FINLEY. The gentleman from Ohio has not spoken on the bill as yet.

Mr. WARNER. I did not speak on the bill. I spoke to my amendment.

Mr. PAGE. On the appeal of several members and not wishing to do the gentleman from Ohio injustice I yield at this time, but I do protest against any one gentleman monopolizing the debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized and will proceed.

Mr. WARNER. I regret that my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] has seen fit to bring personal matters into questions of this kind. I thought we had had enough of that thing. I surely gave no occasion for it either to my friend from Pennsylvania or to any one else.

I did not oppose an increase of pension to this claimant, and certainly should not do so after the explanation made by the gentleman. But I wish to say in reply to his remark, that the Legislature of the State of Ohio has not instructed or requested the Representatives from that State on this floor to give one man a pension of $30 for a given disability when there are five hundred others equally deserving who get but half that or less.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Give it to all of them.

Mr. WARNER. That is the only ground upon which I raised any question in regard to this particular bill; and I say that it was not only unfair but it was in the nature of demagogism for the gentleman to direct any personal remarks to me on account of what I said in the debate upon this bill.

I do stand here, however, and propose to stand here, in advocacy of the removal of all questions of this kind from this House. This House is not a proper court of appeal from the decision of the Commissioner of Pensions. I know we do not and cannot, acting in this way, deal equitably with claimants and give them their just dues as they should have them, and at the same time keep out claims that are not meritorious. I am not now proposing a general bill, but I have insisted and do insist on this one point, that in the matter of rating disability we should be governed by some principle and deal out justice even-handedly and alike to all—not give to one an increase and deny it to others equally deserving.

Mr. CONGER. You have said that three or four times.

Mr. WARNER. And I repeat it now in reply to what was said by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. SHALLENBERGER.] And I repeat furthermore that the pension-roll is a roll of honor. I am in favor of the increase of pension in this case and in all like cases, but I want it done in a proper way and before a tribunal that will give the same benefits to all.

Mr. HAWK. I desire to ask a parliamentary question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAWK. I desire to ask if we have not a rule, lately adopted by this House, that no member shall be allowed to speak more than once upon any question, until every other member desiring to speak has had an opportunity to do so?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman to state the substance of the rule correctly.

Mr. HAWK. Then I do not know how it is that one or two members on this occasion are allowed to take up all of the time of this committee.

Mr. WARNER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] occupied more time than I did.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] speaking again on this question was withdrawn.

Mr. HAWK. I was not in when that was done.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon ordering this bill to be laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 85, noes 9.

Mr. BUCKNER. No quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being raised that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers, and appoint Mr. BUCKNER, of Missouri, and Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, to act as tellers. And the Chair hopes that all members present will vote on one side or the other, so the committee will not find itself without a quorum.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 91, no 1.

Mr. BUCKNER. I will not insist upon the point that no quorum has voted.

So the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. McLANE. I move that the committee now rise.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) What for?

Mr. McLANE. So that we can adjourn; it is evident that not much business will be done.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I hope the committee will not now rise; we can pass several other pension bills.

The question was taken upon the motion that the committee rise; and upon a division there were—ayes 23, noes 64.

Mr. SHELLEY. I will not insist upon the point that no quorum has voted. But I desire to say that while I am perfectly willing to take my share of responsibility in passing these pension bills, I give notice that if we are to continue the consideration of these pension bills I shall insist upon a call of the House if the point is raised that no quorum was present.

Mr. PAGE. All right.

Mr. SHELLEY. I will do so for the reason that I think members who vote to have a night session should be obliged to attend. I want the responsibility to rest upon the majority of the House, and not upon a few members who may come here.

No further count being called for, the motion that the committee rise was not agreed to.

JAMES M. BORELAND.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 254) granting an increase of pension to James M. Boreland; introduced by Mr. BAYNE and reported by Mr. COPFROTH.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of James M. Boreland, late a private in Company C, Ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Reserve Corps, so that he shall be entitled to receive the rate allowed by existing laws to those wholly disabled while in the service of the United States.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 254) granting an increase of pension to James M. Boreland, after consideration of the facts, respectfully report:

James M. Boreland was mustered into the United States military service as a private in Company C, Ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Reserve Corps, on the 24th day of July, 1861; was wounded in the thigh at the battle of Bull Run—second battle of Bull Run—August 29, 1862, and for this wound he receives a pension of $4 per month. In July, 1863, while on a march from Gettysburg, having recovered sufficiently from his wound to resume active duty with his company, he fell across a foot-log, while crossing a stream, and injured himself in the stomach.

This injury necessitated his transfer to a less arduous line of duty, and he was consequently put in Company E, First Veteran Reserve Corps, in which he continued until that organization was mustered out.

The applicant is incurably insane, and has been confined in the Western Pennsylvania Hospital for the Insane since June 25, 1872.

If his present unfortunate condition is the result of the injury to which it is attributed, he is undoubtedly entitled to the relief sought for by this bill.

He made application for an increase of pension before he became insane, on the ground that the injury he received at Gettysburg produced frequent and violent convulsions. After his complete insanity his guardian prosecuted the claim. It was finally rejected, not on the ground, however, that he had not received the injury, for that was made abundantly clear by the testimony of eye-witnesses; nor was it upon the ground that he was not entitled to an increase and ultimately to the amount allowed to those who are totally disabled, if his insanity certainly resulted from that injury, but it was rejected on the ground that his insanity had not been clearly traced to the injury alleged to be its cause.

This soldier was a blacksmith by occupation, and was mentally and physically vigorous when he entered the service. Though his first wound was severe, he soon recovered from it and resumed his duties. After receiving the wound at Gettysburg, he was no longer able to do active duty with his regiment in the field.

Dr. G. O. Jacoby swears that he knew him well, and began treating him in August, 1864, "for a peculiar spasmodic affection, and that during his treatment the attacks became more and more frequent and violent, and, to all human appearances, finally resulted in hopeless insanity."

Dr. Thomas Galbraith testifies that he was the family physician, and knew the applicant since 1856; that he was a strong, robust young man when he entered the service; and the doctor then repeats substantially the statement of Dr. Jacoby.

Dr. Wisbart, a member of the examining board, assuming the alleged injury to the applicant at Gettysburg, says: "In consequence of this injury, he is subject to very frequent and violent convulsions of an epileptic character, his mind is impaired, and his condition is such that he requires the constant aid and attendance of another person. He is now, and has been for several years, confined in the asylum for the insane at Dixmont, Pennsylvania."

Dr. J. A. Reed, superintendent of the Western Pennsylvania Hospital for the Insane, at Dixmont, Pennsylvania, says: "He (James M. Boreland) has been under my care since the 25th June, 1872, and he was decidedly insane when admitted, and entirely unfit to work or support himself ever since. He is a victim of epilepsy, and at times is fearfully dangerous to those who have the care of him. I can see nothing for him in the future except a continued progress of enfeeblement of mind, terminating in dementia, and finally in death." Dr. Reed says, in another affidavit, that "the form of his (the applicant's) disease is that of epileptic mania, and was, I believe, induced by some injuries received at some time while in the service of the Army."

The absence of any other cause and the close relation of the hurt to his stomach at the battle of Gettysburg, with his transfer to the hospital and the Invalid Corps, the convulsions and epilepsy and subsequent hopeless insanity, are obviously all parts of one event in this applicant's life.

The bill is respectfully reported back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon laying this bill aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. DUNNELL. I am unwilling to occupy the time of the committee, but I desire to call the attention of members to this case as presenting a most remarkable illustration of the power of the Pension Bureau and the action of Congress. This person could not obtain his pension from the bureau under the law, because, as is alleged, it could not be shown that his insanity was the result of an injury received while he was in the service; yet when the case is presented to the House there is abundance of evidence to show that his insanity did result from an injury received by him while in the service. The Pension Bureau could not allow the claim; we here do allow it. It is very gratifying to me that we have here a case which so admirably illustrates not only the inability of the Department but the justice and equity which we ought to and do exercise here.

Mr. WARNER. If all cases presented here were cases of this character there would not be the slightest opposition to them.

The bill was then laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

JAMES AARON.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2041) granting a pension to James Aaron.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of James Aaron, Company F, Ninety-first Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, at the rate of $9 per month, commencing on the 29th of June, 1865, that being date of his discharge from the Army of the United States on account of injuries received and disease contracted while in said military service and in line of duty.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2041) granting a pension to James Aaron, late private in Company F, Ninety-first Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

James Aaron, the claimant, enlisted on the 21st day of September, 1864, in Company F, Ninety-first Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, and was honorably discharged on the 29th of June, 1865. He filed an application for pension, alleging that while in the Army of the United States he was disabled in consequence of severe exposure and hardship of the service, by contracting lung fever and varicose ulceration of the right leg. His claim was rejected on the 17th of February, 1870, on the supposition that the varicose veins existed prior to enlistment.

The committee have carefully reviewed all the sworn testimony filed in support of this claim, and they are of the opinion that the rejection is erroneous; that there is not a syllable of evidence to show that the claimant suffered from varicose ulceration of the right leg before he enlisted in the Army.

John G. Leasure and Joseph Bennett, members of Company F, Ninety-first Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, and comrades of the claimant, swear "that at the time of his enlistment they were well acquainted with him, and that he was an able-bodied man, and was examined by a physician appointed for that purpose; that on or about the 26th of November, 1864, at or near Hatcher's Run, Virginia, said James Aaron was disabled in the line of his duty by reason of an aggravated disease (by camp life) of the right leg, as reported by the hospital steward of that place, and was sent away from the regiment unfit for duty, and never returned, he being unfit for excessive fatigue or duty."

Zachariah Shaffer, a private in the same company, swears that the claimant "was an able-bodied man at the time of his enlistment, and that at or near Petersburg he was attacked by some slow fever, which appeared to create a severe sore or running ulcer on his right leg, and still (August 8, 1878) remains a running ulcer." This witness also says he was "acquainted with the claimant, James Aaron, at the time of his enlistment, while in the Army, and, since his return, to the present." Other witnesses sustain this testimony.

On the 11th of September, 1871, Dr. D. Helm Hite swears "that I have examined James Aaron, formerly of Company F, Ninety-first Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, and find his affliction to be a chronic ulcer of the right leg, extending almost from the knee to the ankle joint, on the inner and anterior aspects of the limb."

On the 22d day of February, 1877, Dr. John G. Hughes swears that he graduated at Jefferson Medical College, in March, 1853, and that he has been well acquainted with James Aaron for eighteen years, and had been his family physician prior to his enlistment, and says: "I never knew him (prior to his enlistment) to suffer from any pulmonary disease, or give any evidence or indication of pulmonary weakness. I saw him at his home soon after his return from the service. I was called upon to visit him, professionally and give him treatment. I found him at that time very much debilitated and broken down in general health, but suffering particularly from diseased lungs." He further swears that he was then the "unfortunate bearer of varicose ulcers of the lower limb, from which he suffers greatly most of the time. Indeed, they never heal up entirely, but are open and discharging, more or less, all the time. As they seem to be the result of the enlarged and varicose condition of the veins of the legs, they render walking about often almost an impossibility. In closing my statement of this case, I would add that I consider the applicant, James Aaron, a most worthy claimant; that he is a confirmed sufferer from ailment contracted in the service."

On the 16th of August, 1878, O. P. G. Clark, acting Commissioner of Pensions, addressed a letter to Philip Kneee, a resident of Chaneyville, Pennsylvania, where the claimant resides, asking him, "Will you please inform this office of any knowledge you may have, either personal or from information, relative to this man's (James Aaron) physical condition before enlistment in 1864 and since his final discharge in 1865?"

Mr. Kneee answered as follows:

"CHANEYSVILLE, BEDFORD COUNTY, PA.,

"August 28, 1878.

"SIR: I have known James Aaron for twelve years, and have seen him more or less every day during this time. He has had a bad leg ever since he has been discharged out of the Army; know that his physical condition was good before he went in the Army, and that he ought to be entitled to pension above others that are getting pensions.

"Respectfully,

"PHILIP KNEEE.

"Hon. COMMISSIONER OF PENSIONS."

The examining surgeon, Jacob A. Baird, in 1878, fixes the disability at one-half loss of foot, or $9 per month, and says: "Judging from his (the applicant's) present condition, and from the evidence before him, that the said disability did originate in the service in the line of duty."

In the opinion of the committee this is a meritorious claim, and report the bill back to the House and recommend its passage.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

CAPTAIN SAMUEL C. SCHOYER.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 253) to increase the pension of Captain Samuel C. Schoyer.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Captain Samuel C. Schoyer, late captain of Company G, One hundred and thirty-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, to $50 per month.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 253) to increase the pension of Captain Samuel C. Schoyer, having had the same under consideration, respectfully report:

That Samuel C. Schoyer was captain of Company G, One hundred and thirty-ninth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, and participated with his regiment in the war of 1861-'65. That on the 2d day of June, 1864, he was wounded at the battle of Cold Harbor, by a gunshot in the left ankle joint, which completely destroyed it and produced permanent ankylosis; that he now receives a pension of $20 per month on certificate No. 46970; that he is permanently disabled by the wound, and is daily growing worse.

Dr. Andrew Fleming, of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, certifies that Captain Schoyer is permanently disabled by paralysis, undoubtedly the result of his wound.

Dr. L. H. Willard, of the same city, certifies that he has been Captain Schoyer's physician for the past six years, and that Captain Schoyer is totally unable to perform manual labor, and that in consequence of his wound he suffers from paralysis of the legs, which may soon result in his inability to walk; that in fact his system has become so greatly enfeebled that he may be properly termed a complete wreck.

The character and standing of these surgeons and physicians are satisfactorily vouched for.

Captain Schoyer is a lawyer by profession. He states that his injury has resulted in partial paralysis of both his legs and arms, and affects the lower part of his spine; that at times he is unable to walk, and the greater part of the time unable to write, and that since the date of his wound he has been under constant medical and surgical attention.

The committee believe this application to be most meritorious, and recommend the passage of the bill herewith returned.

Mr. BUCKNER. Will some gentleman explain on what ground this claim is brought here, and whether the facts as stated in the report were before the Commissioner?

Mr. TAYLOR. I will say to the gentleman that no case, unless it is a very exceptional one, is decided by the Committee on Invalid Pensions unless it has passed through the Pension Office.

Mr. BUCKNER. Then this case has been acted on by the Pension Office, and the Commissioner has refused to allow the claim?

Mr. BAYNE. No. I can explain the bill, as it was introduced by me. Captain Schoyer is a member of the Pittsburgh bar, and, as stated in the report, was wounded at the battle of Cold Harbor, in 1864. The wound was at the ankle joint, and a very serious one. The doctors declared it necessary that the leg should be amputated. Captain Schoyer refused to have amputation performed. Subsequently his whole system became penetrated with the poison from the wound. He is now in a state of absolute enfeeblement, and in the course of three or four years will die. He is paralyzed in both legs and both arms. He is utterly disabled for duty in his profession. He is unfit for any kind of labor. He has a wife and an interesting family. He has no means of support. He has that spirit, that pride, that patriotism which would forbid him to come here and ask this bounty on the part of the Government were it not absolutely necessary. I can refer the gentleman to many here who know this man—among others to the Speaker of this House, who is acquainted with him and his family, and who, with many other persons, will corroborate the statement I make.

Mr. BUCKNER. I do not doubt the gentleman's statement at all. I only wished to know whether application for this increase of pension had been made to the Commissioner.

Mr. BAYNE. Yes, sir. This man now gets the full amount allowed by law to one who has both feet and both arms; but he is in an infinitely worse condition than many a man who has lost one leg and one arm.

Mr. BUCKNER. The case, then, is one which the law does not provide for?

Mr. BAYNE. No, sir; the law does not provide for it.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

JESSE HICKEN.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3259) granting a pension to Jesse Hicken.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Jesse Hicken, of Chester, Delaware County, Pennsylvania, for payment of a pension at the rate allowed by law to private soldiers disabled by wounds received in the war of the rebellion while in the service of the United States and in the line of duty, the said pension to commence on the 26th day of April, 1862, the date of discharge of said Hicken, who was discharged by reason of disability incurred while in said service and in the line of his duty in the war of the rebellion.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3259) granting a pension to Jesse Hicken, of Chester, Pennsylvania, a soldier of the late war, having had the same under consideration, respectfully submit the following report:

It is in evidence that the claimant, on the 15th day of October, 1861, was enrolled as a private in Company E, Eighty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, and that on the 26th day of April, 1862, he was discharged from the service on account of disability.

It is also in evidence from the affidavit of William H. Shearman, first lieutenant of the said company, that the claimant sustained permanent injury in the right hand while engaged in the line of duty, on or about the 5th day of March, 1862.

It is also in evidence from the same affidavit that he was further injured, while in the line of duty, at or near Alexandria, Virginia, on or about the 10th day of April, 1862.

It is further shown by the evidence of John L. Kite, hospital steward of the said regiment, that the sickness from which the claimant suffered while lying in said hospital was the result of exposure during the winter of 1861.

It is also in evidence by the testimony of Dr. J. L. Forwood, of Chester, Pennsylvania, that prior to the enlistment of the claimant in the military service of the United States he was in good health.

It is also in evidence that the claimant is in very destitute circumstances.

It is the opinion of the committee, from the evidence submitted, (although the claimant is unable to furnish the strict medical testimony required,) that the injuries from which he now suffers were received while in the military service of the Government during the late war and while in the line of duty. They, therefore, return the bill to the House, and recommend the passage of the same.

Mr. McMILLIN. I do not know who reported or who introduced this bill—

Mr. WARD. I introduced the bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. I would like to know upon what this bill is grounded if there is no sufficient medical evidence that the disability occurred in the line of duty.

Mr. WARD. I will state the facts of the case as I understand them. This man is now very old, and, as the report states, is in very destitute circumstances. Although he was advanced in age at the time of the war, he entered the military service of the country and did duty faithfully as a soldier. For some time after the close of the war he never expected to claim a pension. Years rolled on, and meanwhile the evidence which would have supported his claim by bringing it strictly within the requirements of the Pension Office was lost. His circumstances became reduced by reason of the death of a son, who had been his sole dependence. He is now left destitute in his old age, and by reason of disability is incapacitated for making such exertion on his own behalf as would support him.

Mr. McMILLIN. Was the case acted on in the Pension Office?

Mr. WARD. It was.

Mr. McMILLIN. And rejected?

Mr. WARD. And rejected.

Mr. McMILLIN. Upon the evidence that is here?

Mr. WARD. Because the applicant could not produce the evidence.

Mr. McMILLIN. Was it rejected upon the evidence that is here?

Mr. WARD. I think there was additional evidence produced before the committee.

Mr. McMILLIN. Why was it not produced before the Commissioner?

Mr. WARD. Because it was not the kind of evidence which would have been received. As time went on the military officers who were personally cognizant of this man's injuries died; the physician who attended him, I think, died; and nobody able to testify to the facts was left but the hospital steward, whose evidence was submitted to the committee, and is referred to in the report. This is the case of an old man, who, never expecting to claim a pension, allowed the years to go by within which he could have collected such evidence as would have satisfied the Commissioner.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Does the applicant himself testify to the wounds?

Mr. WARD. He does.

Mr. McMILLIN. It seems to me there is no sufficient evidence here of disability occurring in the line of duty. It appears that this man remained inactive for years, not expecting to demand a pension, and I presume he did not conceive himself entitled to it.

Mr. WARD. Yes, he did. The gentleman will see this difference. Changes have occurred in this man's circumstances. As has been stated, a son upon whose support he depended, and who had also served in the Army, was removed by death, and what he contributed to the old man's support was then withdrawn. Now, in his old age, in his sick condition, as shown by the testimony in the report, he is left to his own resources and is incapacitated for labor.

Mr. McMILLIN. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, this is one of a numerous class of cases where this body is required to act as a supervising board over cases coming from the Pension Department. If that department is worth anything, when the facts are before it and it has decided upon them, its action should have some weight with this House; but if we are to raise the flood-gates and let in every party whose claim is rejected by the Pension Office, then we had better quit legislation on everything else, discharge every other committee, and go to work on pension cases alone, for it will take more than three hundred and sixty-five days to act upon them. If a man has a meritorious case, or if he is unable to bring the evidence because of circumstances that clearly convince us he originally had it, we ought to grant him a pension. But that is not the case here. We have no evidence it ever existed, and I do not think the claim ought to be allowed.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ELIZA McCONNEL.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3260) granting a pension to Eliza McConnell.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of Eliza McConnell, widow of William McConnell, late captain of Company E, Ninety-seventh Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, in the late war of the rebellion, and pay the said widow a pension from and after the 25th day of April, 1865, the date of the honorable discharge of said McConnell from said service, at the rate of pensions allowed by existing laws to the widows of deceased captains who were killed while in the service of the United States, and in the line of duty in the said war of the rebellion.

The report was read, as follows:

The record shows that William McConnell on the 2d day of October, 1861, was enrolled in the United States service in Company E, Ninety-seventh Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, and that he was honorably discharged April 25, 1865, for disability.

The affidavit of Dr. Eberhart, the surgeon of the said regiment, shows that said McConnell was attacked with jaundice while in said service, from which he never recovered, and with which he was affected at the time of his discharge; that he was free from any affection of the liver at the time of his enlistment. Other testimony shows that he was a sound and healthy man at the time of his enlistment. The testimony of General Pennypacker shows that he contracted disease from exposure to malaria in the southern swamps in the line of his duty. The affidavit of Dr. Hartman shows that in 1866 he was called upon to treat said McConnell professionally, and found him affected with chronic liver complaint, which terminated in enlargement of that organ, followed by abdominal dropsy, from which he finally died. The marriage of said McConnell with the petitioner is duly established.

The committee are satisfied from the evidence submitted that the said William McConnell died from the effects of a disease contracted in the United States military service in the late war and in the line of his duty. They therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ABNER HOOPES.

The next business on the Private Calendar was a bill (H. R. No. 3264) granting a pension to Abner Hoopes.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of Abner Hoopes, late a private in Company A, First Regiment Pennsylvania Reserves, who is hereby granted a pension to date from the date of his discharge, at the rate now allowed by law to disabled private soldiers, wounded in the late war of the rebellion, for disability incurred while in the service of the United States and in the line of duty in the late war of the rebellion.

The report was read, as follows:

The testimony on file in the Pension Bureau shows that the claimant served faithfully in the late war in Company A, First Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, from December 10, 1861, for three years, less a few days.

It appears that on the march from the Wilderness to Petersburg, Virginia, he contracted a spinal disease.

The affidavit of the adjutant of the regiment is positive as to the place and time when the disease was contracted. His officer has had personal knowledge of the claimant from that date until the present time, and testified that the disease rendered claimant entirely helpless, requiring the constant attention of a nurse.

The difficulty in supplying the precise testimony, according to the regulation, arises from the fact that the two physicians who attended Hoopes immediately after he left the service are now dead. There is abundant evidence from his neighbors and friends tending to prove conclusively that the disease was contracted in the service, and that he has been a helpless sufferer from it ever since.

Believing the case meritorious the committee recommend the passage of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. CALDWELL. I move the committee do now rise.
The committee divided; and there were—ayes 50, noes 24.
So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CALKINS reported that the Committee of the Whole House had, according to order, had under consideration the Private Calendar and had directed him to report sundry bills to the House, some with and some without amendment, including the bills laid aside to be reported to the House at a previous sitting of the committee and not then reported because, a quorum not appearing, the committee, under the rules, had risen, when an adjournment took place.

BILLS PASSED.

The following bills reported from the Committee of the Whole House were severally ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

- A bill (H. R. No. 2290) granting a pension to William Bowman;
- A bill (H. R. No. 2469) granting a pension to Arthur I. McConnell;
- A bill (H. R. No. 238) granting an increase of pension to J. J. Purman;
- A bill (H. R. No. 3261) granting a pension to Elizabeth Dougherty;
- A bill (H. R. No. 3100) granting relief to Samuel B. Hutchinson, guardian of Mary Ann Shurlock;
- A bill (H. R. No. 1460) granting an increase of pension to James P. Sayer;
- A bill (H. R. No. 254) granting an increase of pension to James M. Boreland;
- A bill (H. R. No. 2041) granting a pension to James Aaron;
- A bill (H. R. No. 253) to increase the pension of Captain Samuel C. Schoyer;
- A bill (H. R. No. 3259) granting a pension to Jesse Hicken;
- A bill (H. R. No. 3260) granting a pension to Eliza McConnell; and
- A bill (H. R. No. 3264) granting a pension to Abner Hoopes.

EDMUND EASTMAN.

The SPEAKER. The bill (H. R. No. 1464) granting a pension to Edmund Eastman is reported with an amendment, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "volunteers," in line 6, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"On account of disease, injury, and wounds contracted in the line of duty in the military service of the United States in the war of the rebellion, said pension to date from the discharge of said soldier."

Mr. HATCH. That amendment was not carried in committee.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I think it was.

The SPEAKER. It comes from the Committee of the Whole indorsed with that amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MELISSA WAGNER.

The next bill reported from the committee with amendments was the bill (H. R. No. 225) granting a pension to Melissa Wagner.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Add as follows: "Who died from the effect of wounds received in action and in the line of duty. Said pension to take effect from the date of the death of her late husband."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS LOWRY.

The next bill reported from the committee with amendments was the bill (H. R. No. 229) granting a pension to Thomas Lowry.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Add as follows: "Who contracted permanent disability in the service of his country in the line of duty during the war of the rebellion."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

And then, on motion of Mr. HATCH, (at nine o'clock and fifty-five minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, March 11, 1880.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

NAMING OF A PRESIDING OFFICER.

The Secretary (JOHN C. BURCH, esq.) called the Senate to order, and said: I have this morning received the following note from the Vice-President:

VICE-PRESIDENT'S CHAMBER,
Washington, D. C., March 11, 1880.

SIR: As I shall be absent at the opening of the session of the Senate this morning, under the provisions of Rule 4, I name Hon. GEORGE F. EDMUNDS, a Senator from the State of Vermont, to perform the duties of the Chair until the adjournment to-day.

WILLIAM A. WHEELER,
Vice-President.

To the SECRETARY OF THE SENATE.

The Senator from Vermont will take the chair.

Mr. EDMUNDS thereupon took the chair as presiding officer of the Senate for to-day.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

SMITHSONIAN REPORT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a letter from Professor Spencer F. Baird, secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, transmitting the annual report of the operations, expenditures, and condition of that institution for the year 1879; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers and an accompanying report from Major W. E. Merrill, Corps of Engineers, of a survey made in accordance with the requirements of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1879, of Green River and its tributaries, Muddy and Barren Rivers, Kentucky; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER presented a memorial of several citizens of Ohio, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. No. 496) providing for the examination and adjudication of pension claims; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ALLISON. I present a letter from the secretary of the Board of Trade of the city of Dubuque, Iowa, commending a petition sent him by the New England Shoe and Leather Association committee, the Boston Merchants' Association committee, the Boston Grocers' Association committee, &c., praying the passage of a bankrupt law. I move that the letter and the accompanying petitions be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON presented the proceedings of a meeting of the post of the Grand Army of the Republic, of Dubuque, Iowa, signed by George G. Moser, commander of the Dubuque Veteran Corps, praying for the passage of the bill known as the equalization bounty bill; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SHARON. Mr. President, I present the petition of two citizens of Nevada, praying for the reduction of duty on certain kinds of paper and chemicals used in printing and in the preparation of pulp, &c. The petitioners are the editors of a journal published at Eureka. As to their circulation it probably does not reach more than one-tenth—not more than one-hundredth part of the population of the State that I have the honor in part to represent. I wish to make, however, one remark in regard to the petition. I am inclined to think that since the war a great many beneficial modifications of the tariff might have been made. The effect of the duty on the articles named in the petition, with labor and capital combined, has advanced the price of paper beyond a reasonable and fair profit, and also the price of many other things. The desire must be general for cheap production, as all are more or less consumers.

It is said that there is a war between capital and labor. That cannot be the case in any just sense, because it cannot be wisely said that labor is at war with that which it most needs, and capital is very certain to fly from danger.

The truth is simply this, capital and labor united are at war with production to enhance prices for the purpose of fleecing the masses. Labor unwittingly assumes a war on capital and cunningly hides its purpose, namely, war upon production—having the same result, increase of prices, which in the end comes from the consumer.

Our sympathies must necessarily be with the masses, as that constitutes the great whole, and all correct and just legislation must look to the greatest benefit to the greatest number. Recollect that those powerful interests which are protected by tariff are ever present here; they are sometimes aggressive, and not always scrupulous. The people are long-suffering, patient, and enduring, and never moved until aroused by some great wrong. They have by frequent petition of similar purport appealed to our sense of fairness and justice.

I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Finance. The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHARON. Mr. President, before I take my seat, I wish to allude briefly to another matter, simply personal to myself and to the Senate. When I was elected to a seat in this body I supposed that all around me was financially smooth and clear. Just after my election I found that an associate and friend had involved myself in the community in millions. It was a question with me whether I should then continue in the Senate or resign. I confidently expected to arrange my affairs immediately and be continuously present. This pleasure and duty was denied me. I would have been proud to have participated more in your deliberations.

I know that there has been private and public comment upon my absence. Nothing but the vital necessities of the occasion and the large complications in which I was involved could have kept me away. I know as well as any Senator in this body my duty, and its privilege. I know my duty to my State and my country and nothing but those great difficulties could keep me from performing that duty.

I wish to say one word more. These complications may again call me away for three or four weeks, and I ask the kind indulgence of the Senate on account of my absence. I have said all the time that should my constituents demand my resignation—it is in their hands.

Mr. SAUNDERS presented the petition of B. A. McKee, late major United States Army, and 57 other citizens, of Geneva, Nebraska, who protest against the passage of the bill (S. No. 496) providing for the examination and adjudication of pension claims; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, presented a memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, in favor of an appropriation of $25,000 to be used in constructing a harbor at Kewaunee, Kewaunee County, Wisconsin; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I present a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, representing that, in view of the early completion of the lock and canal at Sault Ste. Marie, whereby a depth of seventeen feet of water on the mitre-sill of the said canal will be secured, it is necessary and important for the general commerce of the great northwestern lakes to at once improve and deepen the channels of Saint Mary's River and the Lime-Kiln Crossing on the Detroit River so as to secure a depth of sixteen feet between Lake Erie and the upper lakes, and praying that a sufficient appropriation may be made to complete the work. I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BALDWIN. I hold in my hand and desire to present a petition which, with the permission of the Chair, I will read, as it is but one of forty or more petitions of like character which I have before me, praying for the construction of a bridge across the Detroit River, containing the names of fourteen or fifteen thousand people. The petition which I read is from citizens of Chicago:

We, the undersigned, merchants, vessel-owners, and shippers located in this district, beg most respectfully to urge upon your honorable body the great necessity for granting permission for a bridge across the Detroit River, at or near Detroit. There are no less than eight railroads converging at Detroit that have to exchange traffic with each other, and all this through business has to be forwarded across the Detroit River by boats—a very antiquated, slow, dangerous, and expensive operation.

There should be no reasonable objection to a bridge constructed upon the plan submitted to the Board of United States Engineers, who were commissioned by a joint resolution of Congress in June last to inquire whether "this bridge could be built without material injury or undue obstruction to navigation," and their report in favor of such a crossing is hereby respectfully referred to.

The vessel interests, no doubt, are very important; and it is not proposed to restrict or interfere with the fullest and freest navigation of the river. All that can be will be fully accorded to the vessel interest. The vessels always will have an uninterrupted right of way; but when navigation closes on the upper lakes the traffic by rail will then have the full use of the crossing by bridge for at least five months, when vessels are laid up. By the present system of ferrage all this immense traffic in passengers, live stock, and freight has to be forced in boats through thick ice for distances from two thousand to six thousand feet.

Your petitioners humbly pray that your honorable body will favorably consider the reasonable right of railroad traffic when that can be cared for without interfering with the fullest rights of the vessel interests in navigable rivers.

The petition which I have read is signed by 68 citizens of Chicago. I present also a like petition from 80 citizens of Milwaukee; a like petition from 313 citizens of Quincy, Illinois; a like petition from 203 citizens of Burlington, Iowa; a like petition from 109 citizens of Peoria, Illinois. I also present thirty-three similar petitions from citizens of Michigan, being the petition of 469 citizens of Berrien County; the petition of 63 citizens of Barry County; the petition of 21 citizens of Bay County; the petition of 47 citizens of Branch County; the petition of 97 citizens of Cass County; the petition of 30 citizens of Clare County; the petition of 169 citizens of Clinton County; the petition of 564 citizens of Calhoun County; the petition of 100 citizens of Eaton County; the petition of 461 citizens of Genesee County; the petition of 95 citizens of Hillsdale County; the petition of 580 citizens of Ionia County; the petition of 60 citizens of Isabella County; the petition of 365 citizens of Ingham County; the petition 299 citizens of Jackson County; the petition of 180 citizens of Kalamazoo County; the petition of 99 citizens of Kent County; the petition of 86 citizens of Lenawee County; the petition of 225 citizens of Livingston County; the petition of 37 citizens of Lake County; the petition of 27 citizens of Midland County; the petition of 155 citizens of Montcalm County; the petition of 546 citizens of Oakland County; the petition of 116 citizens of Ottawa County; the petition of 139 citizens of Osceola County; the petition of 23 citizens of Otsego County; the petition of 116 citizens of Saginaw County; the petition of 58 citizens of Shiawassee County; the petition of 195 citizens of Saint Joseph County; the petition of 160 citizens of Tuscola County; the petition of 177 citizens of Van Buren County; the petition of 321 citizens of Washtenaw County; and the petition of 7,818 citizens of Wayne County, all praying for the construction of a bridge across the Detroit River. I move that these petitions be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WITHERS. I present the joint resolution of the senate and house of delegates of the State of Virginia, in favor of the appointment of a national commission to investigate diseases among domestic animals. I believe it is customary to have memorials of State Legislatures read from the Clerk's desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Virginia will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution for the appointment of a national commission to investigate diseases among domestic animals. (Approved March 6, 1880.)

Whereas, in view of the magnitude of the interests and the important and rapid growth of the live-stock export trade of this and other States, now imperiled on account of the dangers apprehended by our foreign customers from the importation and dissemination of contagious diseases of domestic animals; and

Whereas, in the opinion of this body, the same may be averted by the creation of a commission, under national authority, to have charge of the investigation of the nature and treatment of said contagious diseases, and, with the concurrence and sanction of the Secretary of the Treasury, to adopt and enforce such reasonable rules and regulations as may be necessary to prevent the importation and dissemination of these diseases, as well as to eradicate such as may exist: Therefore,

1. Resolved, (the senate concurring.) That our Senators be instructed and our Representatives in Congress requested to use their endeavors to secure such legislation as shall provide for the appointment by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, of such a commission, with an adequate appropriation for its support.

2. Resolved, That the governor be requested to furnish a copy of these resolutions to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What reference does the Senator desire?

Mr. WITHERS. I presume the memorial should be referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. McMILLAN. I desire to ask the Senator from Virginia whether the memorial does not contemplate questions affecting the importation of cattle and, therefore, the customs duties of the country, and if it should not go to the Committee on Commerce?

Mr. WITHERS. The proposition is embraced within the purview of the memorial to prohibit the importation, as well as to take such steps as may be necessary to eradicate the disease. The memorial asks for the creation of a commission which shall be charged with the duty of investigating the whole subject of contagious diseases among domestic animals, and providing under national auspices for such legislation as may be necessary to prevent the importation, and to eradicate the disease where it already exists.

Mr. McMILLAN. I merely suggest to the Senator from Virginia whether the memorial should not go to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PADDOCK. I desire to state, for the information of the Senator from Minnesota, that the Committee on Agriculture has now under consideration the whole subject of the contagious diseases of domestic animals with a view of determining what may be best to be done in regard to the whole subject. I think there is a bill pending, there is one in the House certainly, which has been referred to our committee on this subject. This is an incident only of that subject.

Mr. WITHERS. I could not hear distinctly what was said by the Senator from Nebraska; but I know the fact that this whole subject is already in the hands of the Committee on Agriculture, and it seems to me that that would be the appropriate reference for this memorial. Provided they shall approve the objects of the memorial and shall introduce any bill looking to any changes in our commercial laws, that ought to be referred to the Committee on Commerce; but the memorial, it seems to me, ought to go to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. PADDOCK. That is exactly what I said. Two or three memorials on the same subject have already been referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and they are considering the whole subject.

Mr. WITHERS. I concur in the view of the Senator from Nebraska, and move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WITHERS. I also present a memorial of similar import, numerously signed by citizens of Virginia, and move that it be referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia, presented a petition of citizens of Decatur County, Georgia, praying for such legislation as will prevent fluctuations in freights and unjust discriminations in charges for transportation; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented the petition of merchants and publishers, citizens of Forsyth County, Georgia, praying for the passage of a bill placing wood and straw pulp, soda-ash, and other chemicals used in the manufacture of paper on the free list, and reducing the duty on printing-paper, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. COKE presented the petition of J. L. Rees and 14 others, citizens of Rockwell County, Texas, praying for such an amendment of the patent laws as will protect innocent users of patented articles from prosecution as infringers; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

He also presented the petition of R. E. Yeager and 14 others, citizens of Rockwell County, Texas, praying for such legislation as will prevent fluctuations in freights, and unjust discriminations in charges for transportation; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BLAINE. I present resolves of the Maine Legislature relating to pilot laws and the removal of the obstructions to navigation over East River, New York. I ask that the same be read and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The resolutions were read, and referred to the Committee on Commerce, as follows:

STATE OF MAINE.

Resolves relating to pilot laws and the removal of the obstruction to navigation over East River, New York.

Whereas the State of Maine, by its geographical position, having a long line of sea-coast with many fine harbors, is a State of great commercial importance; our people are largely engaged in navigation, and are therefore interested in any legislation that affects this industry; and

Whereas the pilot laws of several of the States are unjust, and impose upon ship-owners burdens hard to be borne, and are contrary to the spirit of the Constitution; and

Whereas there is now being erected a bridge across East River, in the State of New York, which will be another tax upon shipping, by compelling them to lower their topmasts, thereby causing delay: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That we hereby earnestly call the attention of our Senators and Representatives in Congress to the unjust pilot laws in force in several of the States, and we request them to use their best efforts to have a general pilot law enacted that shall be just and equitable to the people of all the States, and also to compel the builders of the suspension bridge across East River, in the State of New York, to place the roadway at such a height as shall not obstruct or impede the navigation of said East River.

Resolved, That a copy of the above preamble and resolution, when approved, be forwarded to our delegation in Congress by the secretary of state.

In the house of representatives, March 5, 1880.

Read and passed finally.

GEO. E. WEEKS, Speaker.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present the petition of citizens of Barry County, Missouri, calling the earnest attention of Congress to the rapidly-growing power of railroad corporations, which is greatly intensified by their policy of consolidation and their unjust discrimination, and asking favorable consideration by Congress of what is commonly called the Reagan interstate-commerce bill. I move its reference to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN presented a resolution of the Grand Army of the Republic of Illinois, in favor of certain amendments to the pension laws; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of citizens of Oneida, Illinois, praying for the passage of such laws as will prevent the manufacture of oleomargarine; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of citizens of Peoria, Illinois; the petition of citizens of Perry, Illinois; the petition of citizens of Crawfordsville, Indiana; the petition of citizens of Dresden and Sharon, Tennessee; the petition of citizens of Chenoa, Illinois; and the petition of citizens of Michigan, all of whom were soldiers in the late war, praying for the passage of what is known as the equalization bounty bill; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a resolution of the Dubuque Iowa Veteran Club, in favor of the passage of the bill known as the equalization bounty bill; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented the petition of the soldiers' reunion committee, praying for the passage of a bill authorizing the Secretary of War to issue arms and equipments to said soldiers' reunion committee at a meeting to be held in the State of Illinois during the year 1880; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented the petition of citizens of Illinois, soldiers in the late war and survivors of rebel prisons, praying for the passage of a law which will enable every soldier who suffered in the southern prisons to draw a full invalid pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of Louis N. De Diemar, of Kenosha, Wisconsin, praying for the passage of a bill to increase the pension of soldiers who have lost their right arm above the elbow; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a memorial of the Grand Army of the Republic Post at Centralia, Illinois, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. No. 496) providing for the examination and adjudication of pension claims; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the memorial of citizens of Michigan who were soldiers in the late war, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. No. 496) providing for the examination and adjudication of pension claims; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of citizens of Rockford County, Illinois, praying for the passage of a bill for the improvement of the headwaters of the Mississippi, Saint Croix, Chippewa, and Wisconsin Rivers by erecting reservoir dams on the same, and for the improvement of the Rock River by the erection of a dam at the foot of Horicon Lake, Wisconsin; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the board of supervisors of Lee County, Illinois, in favor of the improvement of Lake Horicon and Rock River by the construction of reservoir dams; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented the memorial of Joseph W. Branch, president of the Illinois and Saint Louis Railroad Company, representing fifteen miles of railroad, remonstrating against a reduction of the duty on steel rails from $28 to $10 a ton; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the memorial of George N. Black, general manager of the Springfield and Northwestern Railway Company, representing forty-five miles of railroad, remonstrating against a reduction of the duty on steel rails from $28 to $10 a ton; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 822) to regulate the pay of night inspectors of customs at the port of San Francisco, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 849) to authorize the Saint Paul and Chicago Short Line Railway Company to construct a bridge across Lake Saint Croix, and to establish it as a post-road, reported it with amendments.

Mr. FERRY, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1103) for the relief of Manly B. McNilt, reported it with amendments and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. GORDON, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1315) making an appropriation for the erection of a light-house and fog-bell on old Gay Rock, at the entrance of Wickford Harbor, Narragansett Bay, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 655) to amend section 2562 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the boundary-lines of the collection district of Saint Mark's, in the State of Florida, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. FARLEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1457) for the relief of the State University of California; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask leave to introduce a bill accompanied by sundry communications from the Treasury Department addressed to myself, in regard to certain unavailable balances on the Treasury books which now confuse the books to a considerable extent and sometimes lead to errors. I ask that the bill and accompanying papers be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations so that they may further consider the subject.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 1458) empowering the proper officers of the Treasury Department to credit officers of the United States with the amount of unavailable funds standing to their debit on the books of the Treasury, and to transfer the amount to the debit of persons and States indebted for the same; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and, with the accompanying papers, ordered to be printed.

Mr. WINDOM asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1459) for the relief of Charles D. Gilmore; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. PLUMB asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1460) for the relief of John Wagner; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. COCKRELL. Two bills have been transmitted to me by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DAVIS] as coming from supposed constituents of mine. I know nothing in the world about the merits of the bills. I introduce them and ask their reference to the Committee on Military Affairs, not thereby committing myself either to favor or oppose them.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 1461) for the relief of Isaac Howell; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 1462) for the relief of Sarah Collier; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. INGALLS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1463) for the relief of Starr & Howe; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. LOGAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1464) granting a pension to George W. Staplin; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. VOORHEES asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1465) granting a pension to William H. H. Anderson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WALLACE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 92) to provide for the enforcement of the eight-hour law; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. GROOME, it was Ordered, That the petition of Jane E. Slamm and the accompanying papers be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

On motion of Mr. ALLISON, it was Ordered, That A. C. Crawford, of Galveston, Texas, have leave to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers in his case, provided copies of the same shall be left on file with the Secretary of the Senate.

SMITHSONIAN REPORT.

Mr. HAMLIN. I submit the following resolution:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That 10,500 copies of the report of the Smithsonian Institution for the year 1879 be printed, 1,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the Senate, 3,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 6,500 copies for the use of the Smithsonian Institution.

I wish to say that this is the precise distribution which was made of that report the last year, and I think the year preceding that. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The motion was agreed to.

PONCA INDIANS.

Mr. DAWES submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to communicate all information in the Department concerning the alleged killing by soldiers, in the office of the agent of the Poncas, in the Indian Territory, of Big Snake, a chief man of the Poncas, and what has been the action of the Department, if any, in respect to the same.

LANDS IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. COCKRELL submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, directed to furnish to the Senate exemplifications or copies of each and all patents ever issued by the authority of the United States of America to each and all the nations or tribes of Indians in the Indian Territory for lands situate in said Indian Territory and of each and all applications filed in said Department by any and all railroad companies or corporations claiming lands in said Indian Territory under acts of Congress or other authority, with the full action and proceedings of his Department thereon.

Mr. THURMAN. That seems to be a very proper resolution. There is only one suggestion which I should like to make to my friend, and I do not know whether it ought to prevail or not. Several of the most important of the patents that have been granted for these lands are already in print; but it might be more convenient to have them all together.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think it would be better for us to have them all together; some of them are in print and some are not. The resolution was agreed to.

CALVIN BRONSON.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2524) in relation to the importation of classical antiquities, which is a very short bill, reported from the Committee on Finance.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I must object to the present consideration of the bill. I desire to offer an amendment to it, which I am not prepared to offer now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) Objection is made to the present consideration of the bill. The Secretary will report the first bill upon the Calendar.

The bill (H. R. No. 2269) for the relief of Calvin Bronson was announced as being the first in order upon the Calendar.

Mr. THURMAN. The pending question I believe is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] to refer the bill to the Committee on Finance. He indicated a purpose to move to refer the bill.

Mr. MORRILL. I did; and I make the motion now.

Mr. THURMAN. I hope that reference will not be made. This is not a case where a petitioner asks to be exempted from the payment of a tax. It is a case in which he has paid the tax under protest and under circumstances of extreme coercion, where his manufactory was seized and he was compelled to pay the tax or have his business entirely broken up. Under these circumstances he paid the tax under protest. Then the Government, finding it had no reason whatever for seizing the manufactory, instructed the district attorney to dismiss the proceedings, which was done accordingly.

There is no question and never has been any question, either in the Department or here, that this tax was illegal. They collected from this man, I think, about ten cents a pound more upon his tobacco than the statute warranted. The Department do not deny that; they never did deny that. They undertook, however, after seizing his manufactory, to say that they would come to some kind of a compromise, and would offset one thing against the other thing; but there never was any such compromise.

The seizure was found to be wholly without foundation and the proceedings were dismissed by order of the Government itself. That left the case a plain case in which a man had been compelled to pay ten cents more per pound tax on his tobacco than the law warranted. That then was a simple claim to go to the Committee on Claims. I venture to say that all such cases have gone to the Committee on Claims. I think the gentlemen on that committee can tell us of numerous cases of this kind. The distinction that has existed heretofore is that where a petitioner asked to be exempted from a tax which he had not paid his case has gone to the Committee on Finance, but where he has actually paid the tax and simply has a claim to have it refunded his petition and the subject-matter of it have gone to the Committee on Claims. Here is a complete and full report, and nobody can read it, I am sure, without being satisfied of the justice of this claim.

Mr. McMILLAN. The difficulty in this case arises out of another question that was involved in the case before the Treasury Department. I do not understand that the Treasury Department concede the illegality of this tax. The report of the committee represents the Department as having determined that it was invalid. There was a question arising in regard to this matter in charge of the Department, affecting the bonafide character of a sale of the tobacco by the claimant, Mr. Bronson. A suit was pending for this tax. The alleged fraud was examined by a special agent of the Treasury Department. The report of that special agent was favorable to the claimant; but pending the question as to the illegality of the tax and the question of fraud, the action was dismissed. This dismissal of the action, the Treasury officers claim, was in effect a compromise, because there was a question of fraud pending and the question of the illegality of the tax also. The question before the committee then was not presented by an admission of the Department that the tax was invalid, but they claim never to have passed on that question, as I understand their position, although their special agent has determined that there was no fraud in the sale which was at one time alleged to exist.

The case is reported by the Committee on Claims upon the ground that the tax was invalid. This party had an opportunity of appealing from the determination of the Commissioner here and having his rights determined in an action by the proper courts of the country. He did not avail himself of that opportunity, and for that reason a portion of the Committee on Claims are of opinion that we should not be called upon as a matter of principle to determine the invalidity of the tax, the party having had his opportunity before the judicial tribunals of the country; and, therefore, a portion of the committee, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CAMERON] and myself, declined to determine that question and believed that the claimant was not entitled to the relief asked for.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire simply to say a word in regard to the motion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] to have this bill committed to the Committee on Finance. I confess I am astonished at the motion in view of what has been the uniform practice of the Senate and what was the result of a contested case at the last or called session of the Senate.

Ever since 1875, since I have been a member of the Committee on Claims, it has been the unbroken, uniform rule to refer all cases of this character to the Committee on Claims, and that committee has been acting upon and considering them, and there are twenty cases of this precise character that that committee has acted on. Yesterday I reported one from the committee, from Illinois, and a few weeks ago one from Iowa.

Where a tax has been paid and it is claimed to have been twice paid, unlawfully paid, erroneously paid, improperly paid, or improperly assessed, and the money has gone into the Treasury, and the question involved is a pure simple claim against the Government, the Finance Committee has nothing more to do with that than the Committee on Commerce would have to do with it. It involves no question in the world of raising revenue; it is simply a claim against the Government; and it belongs to the Committee on Claims.

Where a party has had a tax assessed against him and has not paid the money, where he claims that he is entitled to a rebatement of it, that is a question affecting the revenue and finances, and goes properly and legitimately to the Committee on Finance.

I do not say this because I desire the Committee on Claims to retain possession of this class of claims—by no means. I do not think that the Senate can justly say that that committee is anxious for having committed to it any more cases than it already has. It has a great deal more business than it can attend to, and it is not seeking to absorb the business of the Senate, and would be exceedingly gratified if it could be relieved of a large number of classes of cases that necessarily go to it and that have gone to it for years. But if there is anything before the Senate that properly belongs to the Committee on Claims it is this particular case and all kindred claims.

The Senate will remember that only last summer a question somewhat similar to this, and growing out of the internal-revenue laws, was reported from the Committee on Finance by the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD,] and upon the motion of the Senator from New York [Mr. CONKLING] it was committed to the Committee on Claims, because it was properly a claim that belonged to the Committee on Claims. I do not remember the name of the case, but I can very soon refer to it. There, after the Committee on Finance had acted upon a case favorably and reported it for action to the Senate, the Senate sent it to the Committee on Claims because it did not properly belong to the Committee on Finance, and because the Committee on Claims in the Forty-fourth Congress had acted on it and made a report to the Senate and that report had been approved.

Mr. MORRILL. I certainly do not desire to augment the business of the Committee on Finance; and on every occasion I believe when a vote has been called in committee to send claims to the Committee on Claims that had been referred to the Committee on Finance I have always voted in favor of it. But I do desire to have some uniformity about these questions as to what committee they shall be referred to.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is proper.

Mr. MORRILL. I may say to the Senator from Missouri that he is mistaken if he supposes that they have uniformly been referred to the Committee on Claims. We have several now on our docket in the Finance Committee that have been referred to us, that have undergone long and patient consideration. If this motion of mine should not prevail, I shall certainly at the next meeting of the committee move to have all the claims we now have in our charge referred to the Committee on Claims.

There was one claim reported by the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. VOORHEES,] I believe almost a unanimous report, and yet it was rejected by the Senate. Then we have one large claim for $25,000 or $30,000 now pending in the Committee on Finance.

I had supposed there was a general disposition to refer all claims involving the due administration or execution of the laws in relation to the tariff and internal revenue to the Committee on Finance; but if there shall be a disposition not to refer this bill to that committee, as there appears to be, I shall withdraw that motion, and I enter an objection because I desire to examine the case before I vote upon it. I had supposed it would be referred to the Committee on Finance; but not having had time to examine the case to satisfy myself whether it is a rightful claim or not, I desire time to look into it.

Mr. VOORHEES. I hope the Senator from Vermont will withdraw the motion until I can say a word.

Mr. MORRILL. Of course I do not interpose the objection to prevent the Senator being heard.

Mr. THURMAN. I wish to make a point of order that the objection of the Senator from Vermont comes too late.

Mr. MORRILL. Under the rule we can object at any time.

Mr. VOORHEES. As an original proposition this looks like a case that ought to go to the Finance Committee, judging from my experience as a member of that committee, but as it has already been before the Committee on Claims and there examined and reported upon, and I have no doubt its work has been well done, I differ from my distinguished and most respected friend from Vermont in regard to the propriety of his motion.

I would not rise now to detain the Senate for a moment except to call attention to the fact that this case illustrates what we were talking about yesterday very signally and strongly. There are just such cases as this before the Finance Committee at this time. There are doubtless other such cases as this before the Committee on Claims. In either instance I presume the examination will be well conducted. Yesterday we had presented a question as to the proper jurisdiction of certain committees; and perhaps I indulged in some expressions yesterday toward the Judiciary Committee that it was not in my heart to say, if they may be construed as unkind, which I did not mean. Consequently I will couple what I said yesterday with a few remarks on that point to-day.

When I look at the report in this case it appears to me that if there is any committee here which should desire to take this business out of the hands of the committee which has already examined the case and reported upon it, it ought to be the Judiciary Committee. Here is the report of the Committee on Claims, and they state what propositions they considered in this case. On the third page of the report it is stated:

To reach the justice of this case three questions must be determined:

First. Was this additional tax of ten cents per pound, amounting to $11,211, legal?

I do not know how that can be determined unless it be referred to the law committee.

Second. Were there just grounds of seizure and forfeiture of the property of claimant?

That refers to legal grounds, of course.

Third. Was this $11,211 paid as a legal and just compromise of the seizure case?

I suggest to the Senator from Vermont to change his motion, if we are to take this case away from the present committee, to one to refer to the Judiciary Committee, so that these legal questions may be properly investigated. I do not say this in any spirit of criticism upon any committee, but to illustrate and to call the attention of the Senate to the effect of what I stated yesterday, that committees here have mixed duties to perform, and it is not possible for any one committee charged with a special branch of business to claim charge of all business which may involve something relative to that branch in any degree. It is an impossibility. Take the Judiciary Committee: there are great and broad questions for it to consider; but it is impossible for that committee to absorb the investigation of all the legal questions that arise before this body. Take the Committee on Finance: it is shown by this case that it is impossible for it to absorb all the questions that grow out of the levying of taxes, the assessment and collection of revenue, for here is a claim referred by a vote of the Senate for relief to the Committee on Claims; and it has been fairly, I have no doubt, and justly and accurately examined and reported upon; and any claim, I will say, which the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] declares ought to be paid, I think I can vote for.

Mr. MORRILL. I withdraw the motion to refer to the Committee on Finance; but, as I have said, I enter an objection to the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The bill goes over under the objection. The Secretary will report the next bill.

Mr. THURMAN. I wish to make an inquiry in relation to the bill just objected to by the Senator from Vermont. Does that objection carry it over for the day, or carry it to the foot of the Calendar, or will it be the first bill called to-morrow when we reach the Calendar?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It goes practically to the foot of the Calendar.

Mr. THURMAN. Then I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2269) for the relief of Calvin Bronson.

Mr. FERRY. We are acting under the Anthony rule. That being a rule of the Senate cannot be superseded by a motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The rule requires objected cases to be passed over; but that is subject to the order of the Senate. The motion of the Senator from Ohio is in order.

Mr. THURMAN. I hope the Senate will proceed with the bill. Here is not one single word said by a human being to gainsay the proposition that this tax was illegally collected. The only objection suggested by the Senator from Minnesota is that the man did not bring suit against the collector within a year. Had he done so, he must have recovered, and then the Government would have had to indemnify the collector.

Mr. President, in a case like this where it is admitted on all hands that the tax was illegally collected, where the man has lain out of the money for more than eleven years—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will remind the Senator from Ohio that it is not in order to discuss the merits of the bill on a motion to take it up.

Mr. THURMAN. I hope the Senate will take it up.

Mr. McMILLAN. I merely wish to state that this waiver of a legal right, so far as the Committee on Claims are concerned, is regarded as a fact which will authorize the committee to reject the claim. Where a party has a remedy by law and neglects to avail himself of it, it is a sufficient answer to his claim, unless there are reasons which amply justify the neglect to avail himself of that opportunity.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Minnesota allow me to call his attention to the fact that under the statute this claimant could not bring suit against the collector until he had made an application to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for the relief that he thought himself entitled to? The statute provides, however, that if the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall not render a decision upon the application within six months from the time the application is made he may then bring his suit against the collector. He did make his application to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, as he was bound to do under the statute before he could bring suit against the collector; and while that application was pending before the Commissioner the collector became a defaulter in the amount of some thirty thousand dollars and absconded from the country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will remind the Senator from Tennessee, as he did the Senator from Ohio, that debate on the merits of the bill is not in order on a motion to take it up.

Mr. HARRIS. I am simply correcting what I conceive to be a mistake of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. TELLER. It does not seem to me that this motion ought to prevail. I do not desire to antagonize the bill, but we are proceeding under a rule according to which one objection carries over a bill that comes up. We have sent over a great many other cases equally meritorious with this and equally deserving the consideration of the Senate because some Senator has objected. We never shall get to the end of the Calendar if everybody who wants a bill passed and thinks it meritorious insists on its passage at the particular time it is called, though objection may be made. The idea of the rule is that we go through with the unobjected cases, and that then the cases which are likely to occasion controversy and discussion shall be taken up.

It seems to me that the friends of this bill, and I do not count myself among its enemies, ought to allow it to pass with the others, and when we get through the Calendar take up the contested cases. It is apparent that this bill will lead to discussion; it cannot be passed in the morning hour; it will go over any way, and I think the friends of the bill ought to allow it to take its place with other bills of like character.

Mr. BECK. I desire to have the rule read under which we are proceeding, my idea being that a single objection carries over any bill, because three or four meritorious cases that I thought ought to be passed were put over by objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. "Unless otherwise ordered by the Senate." The rule will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That at the conclusion of the morning business for each day the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the Calendar, and continue such consideration until half-past one o'clock; and bills that are not objected to shall be taken up in their order, and each Senator shall be entitled to speak once and for five minutes only, unless, upon motion, the Senate shall at any time otherwise order; and the objection may be interposed at any stage of the proceedings; and this order shall commence immediately after the call for concurrent and other resolutions, and shall take precedence of the unfinished business and other special orders.

Mr. BECK. Then I understand the effect of this motion, if carried now, to be this, that each Senator who has a bill that he thinks ought to be passed will, the moment an objection is entered, proceed to ask the Senate to take it up, and we shall never get on with the Calendar at all. It blocks the Calendar, in other words.

Mr. MORRILL. I did not suppose that any one understood my objection as applying beyond to-day. I want merely to have time to examine the bill on its merits. Of course the Senator from Ohio, this being a bill from Toledo, has thoroughly examined it, but I have not, and I did not suppose there would be the slightest objection to giving me at least one day to examine the bill on its merits. I am not committed against it.

Mr. MAXEY. I suggest to the Senator from Vermont that he modify his objection so that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Then it will not lose its place on the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair should be ashamed to say that he misapprehended the order, thinking it was the same that was passed at the last session of the Senate. On examining it the Chair thinks the motion of the Senator from Ohio is not in order.

Mr. THURMAN. Then I ask unanimous consent that this bill retain its place on the Calendar, and be taken up to-morrow.

Mr. HOAR. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the Secretary will read the next bill on the Calendar.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolutions; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

- A bill (H. R. No. 225) granting a pension to Melissa Wagner;
- A bill (H. R. No. 229) granting a pension to Thomas Lowry;
- A bill (H. R. No. 238) granting an increase of pension to J. J. Purman;
- A bill (H. R. No. 253) to increase the pension of Captain Samuel C. Schoyer;
- A bill (H. R. No. 254) granting an increase of pension to James M. Boreland;
- A bill (H. R. No. 1460) granting an increase of pension to James P. Sayer;
- A bill (H. R. No. 1464) granting a pension to Edmund Eastman;
- A bill (H. R. No. 2041) granting a pension to James Aaron;

A bill (H. R. No. 2290) granting a pension to William Bowman;
 A bill (H. R. No. 2469) granting a pension to Arthur I. McConnell;
 A bill (H. R. No. 3100) granting relief to Samuel B. Hutchinson;
 A bill (H. R. No. 3259) granting a pension to Jesse Hicken;
 A bill (H. R. No. 3260) granting a pension to Eliza McConnell;
 A bill (H. R. No. 3261) granting a pension to Elizabeth Dougherty;
 A bill (H. R. No. 3264) granting a pension to Abner Hoopes; and
 A joint resolution (H. R. No. 237) directing the Secretary of the Navy to organize a board to inquire into the present condition of the double-turreted monitors, and the propriety and cost of completing the same.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3258) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of War to employ additional clerks for the balance of this fiscal year to expedite the settlement of pension applications, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. No. 474) for the relief of William McGovern.

PRIZE-MONEY TO FLEET-OFFICERS.

The bill (S. No. 522) to extend the provisions of section 4631 of Title LVI, "Prize," of the Revised Statutes, and of the act of June 8, 1874, in relation to prize-money to all fleet-officers, was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have some explanation of that bill and to hear the report read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the committee will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment proposed by the Committee on Naval Affairs; which was to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

That in the distribution of prize-money adjudged to the captors, the third subsection of section 4631, of Title LVI, "Prize," of the Revised Statutes, shall apply to fleet-surgeons, fleet-paymasters, and fleet-engineers, and they shall be entitled to the same share and upon the same conditions as provided in the said subsection in relation to fleet-captains; and that the act authorizing corrections to be made in errors of prize-list, approved June 8, 1874, shall apply to all fleet-officers, including fleet-surgeons, fleet-paymasters, and fleet-engineers, for the time they served in the war.

Mr. COCKRELL. This is a very familiar case; it has been here before, and I should like to have the report spread on the record.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the report submitted by Mr. JONES, of Florida, from the Committee on Naval Affairs February 11, 1880, but was interrupted by Mr. TELLER. I believe I will object to that bill. It will evidently take some time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over.

SINKING OF ARTESIAN WELLS.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 768) for the reclamation of arid and waste lands; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was read.

Mr. PLATT. Is there a report?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is.

Mr. PLATT. Let it be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report submitted by Mr. HILL, of Colorado, from the Committee on Public Lands February 11, 1880:

Eight hundred millions of acres of land are embraced in the arid region of the United States.

Within this vast tract are the Territories of Arizona, Idaho, Montana, New Mexico, Utah, Wyoming, and the States of Colorado, and Nevada. Portions of other States and Territories are also included.

Not 1 per cent. of this territory has been sold by the United States, and it must remain unsold for years to come unless some means are found to supply it with water.

From surveys made by the Government of portions of this territory, and estimates made of the remaining portions, it has been determined that about two hundred millions of acres are broken and mountainous lands, where, even with an abundance of water, agriculture cannot be carried on successfully. There are about two hundred millions of acres more, made up of—

First. Lava-lands which are covered with cinder, scoria, &c.

Second. Bad-lands, without soil and vegetation.

Third. Desert plains of barren and drifting sand.

This leaves us of the lands of the great plains and valleys five hundred millions of acres, on a large part of which valuable crops could be raised if water were supplied for irrigation.

Many thousand acres have already been reclaimed by utilizing the waters of rivers and streams, and spreading them over the land during the period of the growth of the crops. But owing to the limited supply of water which can be made available from these sources under the most favorable conditions, probably not more than 3 per cent. of these 500,000,000 acres can be reclaimed. What use can be made of the remaining 485,000,000 acres? They are not, it is true, entirely valueless; they are now, and will be hereafter, used still more for pasture-lands; but they can never, to any great extent, be sold for this purpose.

The growth of grass is so scanty that it requires from fifteen to twenty-five acres for the support of each head of neat cattle; and many thousand acres are situated from fifty to one hundred miles from living water, and are thus unavailable even for pasture. But little will ever be realized by the Government from the sale of these lands, until it is demonstrated that water can be supplied by artesian wells.

In the State of Colorado alone, on the great plains east of the Rocky Mountains, are forty millions of acres of land. Much of it will produce, if irrigated, twenty-five to thirty bushels of wheat per acre.

It is in view of the facts which have been given that Congress is asked to appropriate $50,000 for boring artesian wells. Private enterprise will not undertake the work, which is of an experimental character, as the land is all owned by the Government; but let it be demonstrated that water can be supplied in this way, and citizens will purchase the land of the Government, and wells will be bored by individuals and corporations, and in time vast tracts of land will thereby be reclaimed.

Should it be found that artesian-well water can be made available these lands, from being the most barren on the continent, will become the most attractive to farmers. Their crops would not be subject to the vicissitudes of rainfall and drought. The chances of failure of crops would be greatly diminished, and the interest in agricultural pursuits in that section would be immensely stimulated.

Although these lands are as unproductive as much of the land which has been granted to other States under the swamp-land acts, no grant has been made to the States where the arid land is situated to aid in their reclamation. Had this been done there would have been no occasion for an appropriation for the purpose of boring artesian wells. Thus aided, the States and Territories of the arid region would themselves have made thorough explorations for water.

The cost of boring wells is, of course, somewhat dependent on the character of the work and accessibility to materials and supplies. Estimates have been made by persons engaged in the business, showing that artesian wells can be sunk one thousand feet deep for $3,000, exclusive of tubing; two thousand feet for $10,000, and in an increasing ratio for greater depths.

Some of the ablest geologists in the country have expressed an opinion that flowing wells can be obtained in many localities on the plains east and west of the Rocky Mountains.

The amount to be appropriated by this bill is insignificant, compared with the magnitude of the results. Should the experiment meet with success, millions of acres of land, which now lie waste and unproductive, and which will continue in that condition without water, will be converted into fruitful fields and gardens, and be adorned with villages and cities, the happy homes of a prosperous people.

Congress has been advised by the Secretary of the Interior, in his report submitted November 1, 1877, that the pre-emption and homestead laws are no longer applicable to what is known as the desert lands of the United States.

The Commissioner of Agriculture, in his last report, has specially recommended the sinking of artesian wells by the Government with a view to the reclamation of these deserts. The bill under consideration simply looks to giving effect to these recommendations. It is an experiment in the right direction, and should receive the early sanction of Congress.

The committee therefore report in favor of the passage of the measure.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands, with amendments: in line 4, after the word "lying," to strike out "west of the one hundredth meridian of west longitude" and insert "in certain Western States and Territories;" and in line 7, after the word "sunk," to strike out "in the State of Colorado;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That with a view to the reclamation of the arid and waste lands lying in certain western States and Territories, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to contract for the sinking of five artesian wells; two of said wells to be sunk on the plains east of the Rocky Mountains, and three of them to be sunk west of the Rocky Mountains. The said wells are to be sunk at such places as the Secretary of the Interior may designate. Any party making a contract to sink an artesian well, under this act, shall, at the end of each week after the work shall have been begun, file with the Secretary of the Interior a report containing a statement of the character of the ground or rock through which the well is sunk, giving the thickness of the strata of each formation, and he shall furnish samples of all the different materials through which the well is sunk, and conform with all regulations made by the Secretary of the Interior. The sum of $50,000 is hereby appropriated to carry out the objects of this bill, the same to be disbursed under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now I move, in line 7, to strike out the word "five," before the word "artesian," and insert "two;" and then to strike out in the same line "two of said wells to be sunk;" so that it will read:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to contract for the sinking of two artesian wells, on the plains east of the Rocky Mountains.

And then to strike out the whole of line 9, in these words: "and three of them to be sunk west of the Rocky Mountains."

That will leave but two wells provided for.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think that two wells are sufficient to experiment with, and I hope there will be no objection to the amendment that I propose.

Mr. HILL, of Colorado. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri is satisfactory to the committee, and I hope it will be adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now I move after the words "said wells are to be sunk at such places as the Secretary of the Interior may designate," in the 11th line, to insert:

And whenever the site of either of such wells shall be designated, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and required to declare a reservation of four square miles, with the said site as nearly as possible in the center thereof; and the land so reserved shall not be subject to sale or disposal under any law of the United States until said reservation has been released.

That simply provides that when a site for one of these artesian wells has been selected the Secretary of the Interior shall make a reservation of four sections.

Mr. ALLISON. That is right.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think it is proper that the Government should have the benefit of the well and of the lands immediately around it, and I hope there will be no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now, Mr. President, to make the bill consistent, in line 20 I move to strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty;" so as to read:

The sum of $20,000 is hereby appropriated, &c.

That will give $10,000 for each well.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to strike out the word "four" where it occurs in speaking of the reservation, and insert "one." I am opposed to large reservations of public lands. They have always been a delusion and a snare. They have never been of value to the Government. They have always been in the way of public settlement. The effect would be to a very large extent to deprive—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Kansas will be in order when the bill is in the Senate; the amendment to which he moves it having been already agreed to in Committee of the Whole, is not now amendable.

Mr. PADDOCK. Do I understand the last amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri to have been adopted, striking out "fifty" and inserting "twenty" so as to make the appropriation $20,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been.

Mr. COCKRELL. That makes $10,000 for each of the wells. That is the estimate made by the committee; and the word "fifty" was put in there when the bill provided for five wells; and now, to make it correspond to the amendment made, "twenty" is inserted.

Mr. PADDOCK. It strikes me it would be better to place the amount at $25,000, because it is very doubtful whether any wells can be sunk on the plains, where it is proposed to sink these, for $10,000. We might get to a point where it would require additional legislation which would involve great delay, and inasmuch as the whole matter is under the control of the Secretary of the Interior, and in his discretion, it seems to me it would be better to raise the limit to $25,000. I move that it be "$25,000 or so much thereof as may be necessary."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That motion will be in order when the bill is in the Senate. The amendment of the Senator from Missouri has been adopted in committee.

Mr. PADDOCK. Very well, I will offer the amendment in the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. PADDOCK. Now I move where the words "twenty thousand dollars" occur to strike them out, and to insert "twenty-five thousand dollars or so much thereof as may be necessary."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question will be first on concurring in the amendments as made in Committee of the Whole reserving the amendments suggested by the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from Kansas.

The unexcepted amendments were concurred in.

Mr. PADDOCK. Now I move where the word "twenty" occurs to insert thereafter "five," and after "dollars" to insert "or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. McMILLAN. What amount was contemplated in the original bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. Ten thousand dollars for each well. The committee in their report say that—

The cost of boring wells is, of course, somewhat dependent on the character of the work and accessibility to materials and supplies. Estimates have been made by persons engaged in the business, showing that artesian wells can be sunk one thousand feet deep for $3,000, exclusive of tubing; two thousand feet for $10,000, and in an increasing ratio for greater depths.

Now, we appropriate $10,000 for each of these wells, which will take them probably to the depth of two thousand feet. That depth will not be reached until another Congress is in session; and then, if there is not sufficient to complete them, Congress can make an additional appropriation. But $10,000 is certainly enough to appropriate at one time for one well. I hope the Senator from Nebraska will not insist upon his amendment.

Mr. PADDOCK. Very well, I will withdraw my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole as to the amount of appropriation.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. PLUMB. I now move to amend the other reserved amendment by striking out "four" and inserting "one." I do this because I do not care to have the Government go into this business as a speculation. I do not believe in withholding four square miles of land for the purpose of a rise in value on account of the sinking of these three wells. I think if the Government shall discover water out there, which will make valuable for homestead purposes that section of country which is now valuable for nothing except for grazing, the Government can amply afford to give the land, as it is now giving much more valuable lands to people who want to make homestead settlements on them. I am therefore opposed to setting so much land aside with the idea that this is to be a speculation on the part of the Government, whereby it is to reimburse itself for any portion of the money expended in the sinking of these wells out of the reservations around the places where the wells are sunk. It will simply produce an occasion for legislation, which in itself will be a great deal more expensive than it would be to sink a well on every one of the sections.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of half past one having arrived it becomes the duty of the Chair to call up the unfinished business.

Mr. HILL, of Colorado. I ask unanimous consent to dispose of this bill which is pending.

Mr. PADDOCK. I hope the Senator from Florida will yield for a moment until we finish this bill that is pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida, [Mr. JONES,] who is entitled to the floor on the unfinished business, yield?

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Florida to yield to me for a moment. I do not wish to disturb him in the remarks he proposes to make on the unfinished business; but I desire to give notice that as soon as his remarks are concluded, I shall ask the Senate to take up the fortification appropriation bill to the exclusion of all other matters.

Mr. BLAINE. If that motion should prevail, how would it leave the Fitz-John Porter bill, Mr. President?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. In the control of the Senate, of course.

Mr. BLAINE. It would have no place unless the Senate should again order it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It would be postponed; it would have no place; but it would be subject to be called up of course.

Mr. PADDOCK. I understand the Senator from Florida to yield so that we may conclude the bill which has been discussed.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I wish to add a word to what the Senator from Iowa has said in connection with the appropriation bills. Three days the Committee on Appropriations have given way to different Senators for the purpose of going on with the pending discussion. I hope it will be generally understood that at the expiration of the speech of the Senator from Florida the floor will be given to the Senator from Iowa to call up the fortification appropriation bill. If we are to have an adjournment at all this session, it is time that we get at the appropriation bills. The committee have been for three days trying to get the floor for the purpose of getting them up.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I have no disposition whatever to ask the Senate to make any delay in their action on the appropriation bills; but I do ask that I may have an opportunity either on Friday or some day early next week to say something on the Fitz-John Porter case.

Mr. LOGAN. You can speak right after the Senator from Florida.

Mr. BURNSIDE. But the Senator from Iowa gives notice that after the remarks of the Senator from Florida he will call up an appropriation bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not wish to interfere with the Senator from Rhode Island. I only propose to lay aside the pending bill informally.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I can speak the day after to-morrow just as well; and in fact I would rather speak the day after to-morrow or on Monday.

Mr. LOGAN. I will say in the hearing of the Senator from Rhode Island, so that he may understand it, that after the Senator from Florida is through I understand the Senator from Iowa will move to take up an appropriation bill. Of course that can be done; but I shall insist on finishing this case, and I shall object to the proposition, so the Senator from Rhode Island had better be ready to take the floor. I will take the responsibility of objecting.

Mr. FERRY. Do I understand the Senator from Iowa to move to lay aside the present bill, or simply to ask unanimous consent that the appropriation bill be taken up?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Who has the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida has the floor, but has yielded it for this discussion.

Mr. ALLISON. I simply gave notice that at the close of the remarks of the Senator from Florida I should ask the Senate to informally lay aside the pending business in order that one of the regular appropriation bills may be considered and acted on.

Mr. BLAINE. That requires unanimous consent.

Mr. LOGAN. I shall object.

Mr. ALLISON. Then when the proper time arrives the next step necessary will be taken, whatever it may be.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I want to give notice that if the debate on the Fitz-John Porter bill is to extend for a month, as it threatens to do, I shall feel it my duty at a much shorter period than a month from now to antagonize with it the Geneva award bill and move to lay aside all previous orders and proceed to the consideration of that bill.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to say in response to that, if I may be permitted, that those who have spoken on this side—and they are not very numerous—are not responsible for the Fitz-John Porter case being before the Senate.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, let me say that while I am very glad that the Fitz-John Porter bill is before the Senate, it is here, as all Senators know or should know, by the action of the President of the United States.

Mr. LOGAN. Now, I say this in response, that the President of the United States has introduced no bill in this Senate. The Senator himself introduced the bill, and by his action this matter is before the Senate, and he cannot get out of it that way.

Mr. THURMAN. The bill is very properly before the Senate.

Mr. LOGAN. I am not saying it is not.

Mr. THURMAN. Very properly indeed; but it cannot be allowed to take precedence over business even more important than it, much longer, unless the Senate see fit to vote down my proposition.

Mr. LOGAN. It will be a very easy matter for us to vote on the bill and settle it before the Geneva award bill comes up. I am ready to vote at any time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This discussion is out of order. Does the Senator from Florida yield the floor to consider the bill which has been pending? If so, the question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. PLUMB. I will, in deference to the Senator who reported the bill, though against my own judgment as to what is proper, withdraw my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the remaining amendment made as in Committee of the Whole will be considered as concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 237) directing the Secretary of the Navy to organize a board to inquire into the present condition of the double-turreted monitors and the propriety and cost of completing the same was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

- A bill (H. R. No. 225) granting a pension to Melissa Wagner;
- A bill (H. R. No. 229) granting a pension to Thomas Lowry;
- A bill (H. R. No. 238) granting an increase of pension to J. J. Purman;
- A bill (H. R. No. 253) to increase the pension of Captain Samuel C. Schoyer;
- A bill (H. R. No. 254) granting an increase of pension to James M. Boreland;
- A bill (H. R. No. 1460) granting an increase of pension to James P. Sayer;
- A bill (H. R. No. 1464) granting a pension to Edmund Eastman;
- A bill (H. R. No. 2041) granting a pension to James Aaron;
- A bill (H. R. No. 2290) granting a pension to William Bowman;
- A bill (H. R. No. 2469) granting a pension to Arthur I. McConnell;
- A bill (H. R. No. 3100) granting relief to Samuel B. Hutchinson;
- A bill (H. R. No. 3259) granting a pension to Jesse Hicken;
- A bill (H. R. No. 3260) granting a pension to Eliza McConnell;
- A bill (H. R. No. 3261) granting a pension to Elizabeth Dougherty;
- and
- A bill (H. R. No. 3264) granting a pension to Abner Hoopes.

FITZ-JOHN PORTER.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1139) for the relief of Fitz-John Porter, late major-general of the United States volunteers and colonel of the Army, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. RANDOLPH.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida [Mr. JONES] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator from Florida will allow me I desire to say in the presence of the Senate that I have certainly in this case tried to state the facts as reported in the testimony as correctly as it was possible for me to do. Desiring to not be placed improperly on the record, I desire to make a correction of a portion of the testimony that I referred to yesterday evening; and as this is the first opportunity I wish now to do it.

Yesterday evening, in speaking of the testimony of one witness who said that he heard Fitz-John Porter make a certain remark, I called the name of the witness "Bond." I made that mistake by turning the wrong leaf and having the evidence perfectly in my mind I looked and saw the name of Bond, "John Bond," and spoke of John Bond's testimony. It was not the testimony of John Bond that I intended to refer to, but the testimony of William L. Faxon, a surgeon in one of the brigades of General Morell's division. Now, referring to that, I will ask the Secretary to read that testimony so that it may go in the RECORD and correct the statement I made yesterday, and then I have naught further to say at this time.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

WILLIAM L. FAXON, called by the recorder, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct examination:

Question. State your occupation.

Answer. Superintendent National Sailors' Home, Quincy, Massachusetts.

Q. Were you in the military service of the United States on the 29th of August, 1862; if so, in what capacity?

A. I was assistant surgeon of the Thirty-second Massachusetts from the 2d of June, 1862, until along in August, 1863.

Q. When did you leave the military service, and with what rank?

A. When I was mustered out I was surgeon of the Thirty-second Regiment; for the last year of the war I was in charge of the depot field-hospitals of the Fifth Corps at Fredericksburgh and White House and City Point.

Q. Where were you on the night of the 27th?

A. In camp at Warrenton Junction.

Q. In whose brigade and division?

A. I was in the second brigade, first division, Fifth Corps, Morell commanding division, and General Griffin commanding the brigade.

Q. At what time did you leave Warrenton Junction, and what direction did your regiment take?

A. The bugle sounded for an early start, and it was quite dark. We got out just before daylight, and my brigade lay outside of the wood in which we camped until the sun was pretty high.

Q. What direction did you take from there?

A. We marched off a little to the left of the wood and crossed a little run, and went up to Catlett's, and from there to Bristoe; followed the general direction of the Orange and Alexandria Railroad.

Q. At what time did you arrive at Bristoe Station with your regiment?

A. I judge about the middle of the afternoon.

Q. During that time did you see General Porter?

A. I saw General Porter only as I crossed the run at Bristoe.

Q. Where was he at that time?

A. He was at a little house on the left hand of where I crossed; that is, on the side toward Washington. He and his staff were at a little house; I think it was a kind of peach orchard; I think most of them were sitting down.

Q. Describe what you saw and heard so far as General Porter was concerned.

A. As I crossed the run I heard General Porter make this remark: "Go tell Morell to halt his division," and he added, "I don't care a damn if we don't get there." I am very particular about those words, because I recollect them, and have spoken of them.

Q. On the next morning where were you?

A. I marched with the regiment, and I think we went up about as far as Manassas Junction, where we halted a short time; then the regiment turned off to the left, I believe, and crossed the road and came off on a road not exactly parallel, but curving off and following the general direction of the Manassas Gap Railroad, I think.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Is that the entire testimony?

Mr. LOGAN. Of whom?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Of Dr. Faxon.

Mr. LOGAN. Not at all. I only have had read that portion which I referred to last night. If the Senator desires it all read I have no objection, or I will let it all go in the RECORD without reading, if the Senator desires.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I do not care to detain the Senate with a long reading of the statements of Dr. Faxon. I have already stated perhaps all that I care to state in regard to what he said, and in regard to that examination, but the entire matter may go into the RECORD, I suppose.

Mr. LOGAN. I have no objection. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Mr. President, in discussing the important question involved in this case, I shall not feel it any part of my duty to refer to the facts which have been so elaborately discussed by the Senators from New Jersey [Mr. RANDOLPH] and Indiana, [Mr. McDONALD.] The question of power involved in the passage of this bill do intend to debate with all the fullness that my poor ability will enable me to do; and I shall endeavor in the course of my argument to reply to some of the arguments of the Senator from Wisconsin, who is before me, [Mr. CARPENTER,] who has presented a very clear and concise statement of his views. I will say here, Mr. President, that I sympathize somewhat with him in that very commendable feeling which he exhibited the other day when he spoke of the gradual and constant departures which were going on through the processes of insidious legislation from the landmarks of the Constitution. I appreciated much that he said in reference to the creation of extraneous establishments, agricultural bureaus, boards of health, and many establishments of that kind; and I must confess that I share with him in much of the doubt that he manifested touching the powers of the General Government to create them; but I think he stopped very far short of the period of legislative departure from the principles of the Constitution. I think that he did not state when that departure began. If he had, he would have shown that it went beyond the period designated in his argument and beyond the bureaus which he named.

Mr. President, while on that point it may be proper and logical for me to say that Congress has exercised in its wisdom most extraordinary powers; and in speaking, as I propose to do, to the philosophy of this question, I propose to go behind the letter of the law, and shall not confine myself simply to that line of argument which is usually addressed to a court when its inquiry merely is, what is the law? In a body of this kind we ought to go a little further, and we ought to ascertain not only what the law is, but why it is as we find it. Speaking of legislative departures from the Constitution and large strides toward central power, it is very proper in connection with this subject that I should cite the provisions of the act of Congress known as the reconstruction law, under which vast and comprehensive powers were vested by Congress in officers of the Army—powers of life and death over the citizen in a large portion of the country. I make no argument now respecting the constitutional power of Congress to do this thing; I am only speaking of the fact with the further object of illustrating the necessity of our following that up, if need be, by the exercise of the very power which is attempted to be enforced in the passage of this bill, which is entirely free from all constitutional objections.

Now, Mr. President, nobody can deny the vastness of that power which was given to the military officers of the United States under that act of 1867. There was something more in that than the creation of an agricultural bureau or a board of health, because under it the military officers of the Union had absolute authority over the property and the life of the citizen; and here I would ask a question, (because it is not in the regular line of my argument,) whether or not it was intended that when Congress gave that power, thus absolute and unlimited, it meant to retain no supervisory authority over those officers intrusted with it? Did it mean, when the power to create courts-martial and to try citizens for any offense whatever and amounting in many cases to the penalty of death, that this great body in the exercise of its wisdom, for the purpose of governing those States at that time, did not retain any residuary control over those extraordinary tribunals and officers in whom this power was invested?

If a great grievance had occurred, if an officer had exceeded his power, if a court-martial had taken life where it ought not to have taken it, and the proceedings had been approved by the commander under that law, would anybody say after the exercise of that power that Congress would not have had authority to review that proceeding and give the victim relief?

Mr. President, the exercise of that power was not altogether dissimilar to that which has been repeatedly exercised by the British Parliament over her distant possessions; and one of the most notable instances in her history was a case that arose out of a trial by a court-martial, a case that aroused the whole British public and nearly the whole civilized world to an indignation and a feeling that was never felt before. What was the action of the people of Great Britain when the tidings reached there of not the execution but the sentence of a poor missionary who had gone to Demerara to preach the gospel among British slaves? He had been taken from the sanctity of his home and arraigned before a military court-martial, presided over by a British officer, and after listening to false testimony and the making up of a false record that tribunal condemned that innocent man to die. What was the result of it? Was it an appeal to the King's Bench? Was it a review by the king in council? Was it in trying any tedious process by which the equity of the thing would have been lost sight of? No, Mr. President, it was an appeal to the representatives of the British people in the House of Commons, and Mr. Brougham was the leader of that sentiment; he went there and with a series of resolutions denounced that court and its infamous judgment as a violation of the British constitution, and involving the trampling under foot of the sacred rights of the subject. It was that proceeding that sounded the doom of slavery in the British dominions, although the people were in no way responsible for the crime, and every man that voted against the resolutions to condemn that court was marked by a liberty-loving people as an object of their condemnation.

If a great outrage had happened under a military court-martial in any of our distant Territories, if an officer wearing the uniform of the United States was to oppress by means of this military power any of the poor savages on the frontier, would this great body of Congress sit quietly by and have no opinion to express upon the subject? But this, Mr. President, is a mere outside statement not at all bearing upon the argument which I intend to submit.

I have no objection to the divisions of power set forth in the argument of the Senator from Wisconsin. I agree with him that this Government is divided into three great departments: the legislative, the executive, and the judicial. I do not, however, agree with him that this is a contest between the States and the General Government, as he would seem to indicate, but it is a contest between two departments of the same Government, between the executive and the legislative. The power here claimed by Congress under the Constitution, I insist is an absolute, unqualified, unlimited power. I intend to show that this power with respect to the Army was not like many of the other powers in the Constitution entirely new at the time that our Constitution was adopted, for the very provision which we find in the Constitution which gives Congress power to make rules for the government and regulation of the Army was in the Articles of Confederation in precisely the same terms that it is to be found in the Constitution of to-day. There was no change made whatever with respect to this power. The framers of this great instrument of freedom well understood the great conflicts for liberty that had taken place in the old world. No set of men that ever lived on this continent were more familiar with the contests of freedom which took place in the mother country. Far better were they understood by them than they are understood now. At least it would seem so from the indications of the hour.

It was well known that the executive power was the great lion that was to be caged; the power of the executive was the thing that was dreaded; and the debates in the convention show most conclusively that in all attempts to organize the Army it was the determination of every Congress and every convention and every body that assembled on this continent never to give the control of a standing armed force to the executive power of this country. They were appized of what had happened in England, in France, in Spain, in all the Continental countries. They saw that after a contest of two hundred years every free system on the continent had been crushed by the power of the sword. They remembered the exertions which had been made by the poor populace under the reign of Charles V to rescue the liberties of the people, and how they failed against the odds of his battalions. They remembered the gradual extinction of liberty in all the countries of the middle ages, and they came down to that country which gave them an example, the only one that they had, by which to form a free constitution.

Near the beginning of the eighteenth century there was not a free constitution left on the Continent of Europe. Every one had been swept away; Louis XIV, who styled himself the state, had permitted his parliament to sleep for sixty years almost the sleep of death. The States-General of France, as Macauley tells us, was remembered only by the learned lawyers as a part of the history of the past. In Spain all representation of the people had gone; and so throughout all Continental Europe until we come down to that little isle, that sea-girt isle, to whose institutions and whose traditions we trace these fundamental principles of freedom which were so well referred to by the Senator from Wisconsin the other day, when he referred to the sources of our constitutional system.

The struggle commenced there, but it ended on the side of the people. Charles I seeking to carry out the absolute notions of Henry VIII, and of the absolute princes of the house to which he belonged, sought to get control of the army. He failed. He failed by the resistance of his parliament, which, after civil war, had brought him to the block and made him pay the terrible penalty of his life for his effort to subvert the liberties of his country.

These examples, I say, were before the framers of the Constitution. They were not simply cases involving the trial of title to a mule or a cart under the judicial power, as referred to by the Senator from Wisconsin, in the District of Columbia. No, Mr. President, they were great questions of governmental power; and it will be seen that every effort of the men who framed this noble charter of liberty was to take away wherever they could power and authority from the Executive and to keep it within the clutches of the representatives of the people.

They formed a provisional government that controlled the army. The States quarreled among themselves about everything else; they were jealous of the Federal power; they were indisposed to give up anything, but they were compelled from necessity to center the command of the Army in some federal head. Whom did they give it to? They gave it to Congress in the Articles of Confederation:

The United States in Congress assembled shall also have the sole and exclusive right and power of * * * establishing and regulating post-offices from one State to another, throughout all the United States, and exacting such postage on the papers passing through the same as may be requisite to defray the expenses of the said office;—appointing all officers of the land forces in the service of the United States, excepting regimental officers;—appointing all the officers of the naval forces, and commissioning all officers whatever in the service of the United States;—making rules for the government and regulation of the said land and naval forces, and directing their operations.

The precise language that is to be found here in the Articles of Confederation was afterward incorporated in the Constitution under which we live without change. Now, I ask what authority did the Congress of the Confederation exercise under that power? They made laws for the government of the Army. The first military code ever established here was created in 1776. It is nearly a transcript of the British articles of war, so that when the word "rules" is employed or used it means something. The word "rules" here in the Articles of Confederation and in the Constitution means something more than an ordinary word. It meant to give to Congress the power to adopt rules and regulations for the government of the Army according to the settled principles and usages of war. There is a great deal implied in the language, because a constitution being an instrument of definition and not of enumeration it cannot go into details.

A code was created under this power; the Army was managed under it. From 1776 until 1806, so far as I remember, there was no change in the military code created for the government of the Army. How was that power exercised? It was a mere transcript, as I said, of the British act, showing that they had before them the system of organization and the rules of government that prevailed in the English forces at that day. There can be no doubt about that. Congress provided in those rules that in all cases where an officer was cashiered or sentenced to death the proceedings of the court-martial should not be effective or operative until passed upon by them. There is the article of war under the code of 1776 which regulated the government of the Army all through the Revolution, and which remained unchanged until 1806, by which it was distinctly provided that in all cases where a court-martial sentenced an officer to dismissal from the service or to the punishment of death the proceedings, before they could be made effectual, should be submitted to the decision of this sovereign body. That law stood, I say, until after the present Constitution went into operation, and then the Congress, for the purpose of convenience, changed the law and invested the President with the power of approval instead of itself.

What do I argue from this? I argue the complete power of Congress over the subject. If the Congress of the Confederation had authority to bring before it, as it did, every proceeding in court-martial cases and pass upon it, the Congress of to-day under our new Constitution possesses the same power. It is no reply to say that the Commander-in-Chief is now the President, because that does not meet the question. There was no power given to him over this subject. He was invested only with the authority to command, but the authority to make rules for the government of the Army is to-day where it was in 1776, in 1778, in 1784, and all through the period of the revolutionary war, in the Congress of the United States.

We are met with the barrier of the pardoning power. We have been told that the existence of this power is an insuperable obstacle to the relief which is sought in this case. Let me put a case. In 1806 Congress had full plenary power over proceedings by courts-martial under the articles of war. I assert it. They are here; I will not take up the time of the Senate to read them. Before a proceeding by a court-martial could be effectual it had to come here. I ask if a conviction had taken place, if a military officer had been arraigned for an attempt upon the liberties of his country, if he had prostituted his high office so as to involve in any way the security of the people or the high trust with which he was invested, and he had been tried by a court-martial in 1806 and the proceeding was sent here for confirmation, and if Congress, exercising that sovereign and watchful power over the interests and liberties of the people which the organic law intended that it should do, declared that that officer should suffer the penalty of death, (Congress had the power of approval, and it has it yet, if it is disposed to exercise it,) I ask any constitutional lawyer whether in a case of that kind the sentence of the court could be interrupted by the pardon of the President?

Mr. CARPENTER. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion to him?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Certainly.

Mr. CARPENTER. At that time there was no President.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. There was in 1806.

Mr. CARPENTER. I thought the Senator spoke of 1776.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I said from 1776 to 1806.

Mr. CARPENTER. The Senator spoke of the Confederation, when there was no division of powers. Congress was the Government; it did everything.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. That is true.

Mr. CARPENTER. That does not happen to be our condition today.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I admit that there was no constitution; I said so; but this very power was delegated to the Confederation in the exact language that we find it embodied in the Constitution today.

Mr. CARPENTER. All the powers of government were in Congress.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Certainly; and in committees of Congress.

Mr. CARPENTER. It is not so now.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. But this very law of which I speak existed down to 1806. Down to that period Congress had retained the power of correction or approval in respect to findings by courts-martial.

The following is the article to which I refer:

No sentence of a general court-martial shall be put in execution till after a report shall be made of the whole proceedings to Congress or to the General or Commander-in-Chief of the forces of the United States, and their or his directions be signified thereupon. * * *

No commissioned officer shall be cashiered or dismissed from the service excepting by an order from the Congress or by the sentence of a general court-martial; but non-commissioned officers may be discharged as private soldiers.

Mr. CARPENTER. What act is that?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. That is the first act, the act of 1776.

Mr. CARPENTER. Under the confederation.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Yes, that was the act under the confederation. I say this act continued in force until 1806, after the adoption of the present Constitution, and then it was changed in some very unimportant particulars; but this power was given to the President in 1806 for the first time.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to understand the Senator's point. Do I understand him to say that from 1789 down to 1806 the proceedings of court-martial were reported to Congress and approved or disapproved by them in fact?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I say that this article of war continued in operation from 1776, and was not changed until 1806.

Mr. HOAR. The point of my question, which is a very interesting one if the question be answered in one way, is not whether a law of the old confederation or a regulation for the government of the Army remained down to 1806, but whether in point of historical fact, after the adoption of the Constitution in 1789, the proceedings of courts-martial depended upon the approval of Congress for their validity, whether that power was in fact exercised?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I am not prepared to say that it was exercised, but I believe that the authority existed. Whether there was occasion for its exercise or not, I am not prepared to say.

Mr. HOAR. There must have been courts-martial between 1789 and 1806?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I have not looked into that, but I am satisfied that the authority existed for its exercise, and that it was not until 1806 that it was changed, and then for the first time the power of approval was given by Congress to the President by simply modifying the former article, striking out "Congress" and inserting "the President."

Mr. CARPENTER. In what do you find that?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. In this book, O'Brien on courts-martial.

Mr. CARPENTER. The original article?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Yes. Now I argue from this that all through our history, beginning with the revolutionary period and coming down to 1806, and I might say even yet, the authority of Congress over this subject was complete. The language of the Constitution meant precisely what it imported, that Congress should have power to govern the Army according to the rules and articles of war. Where does the President get the power of approval which he possesses today with respect to the sentence of courts-martial? Does he get it by virtue of his authority as Commander-in-Chief? No one would pretend to say that. He gets it from the articles of war, which Congress may annul to-morrow. It is under a distinct article of war that he approved the sentence in this case, and he acted as the representative of the sovereign power of Congress when he did it. Congress could take away that power to-morrow and restore it to themselves, and it is all-important to the interests and to the liberties of this people that that power in Congress should be recognized and enforced.

Will anybody pretend to say that this article of war could not be changed by both Houses of Congress to-morrow, that they could not take to themselves the approval of all sentences of military tribunals?

Suppose they exercised that power, and a case came up here for approbation and we approved the sentence, I ask the question again whether in that case the President could interpose his pardoning power and prevent its execution? I say he could not; and the reason why he could not is that so far as the Army is concerned the power of Congress is supreme and unlimited. The pardoning power never was intended, in my opinion, to apply to cases arising in the land or naval forces.

It is said that the President has the absolute power of pardon for all offenses committed against the United States. I admit he has; but I say that that language is not any broader than the language to be found in the Constitution which requires that all crimes shall be tried by a jury. That was the language of the original Constitution before the fifth amendment was interposed, which was not ratified until 1794. I will say to the Senator from Wisconsin that that amendment was not incorporated into the Constitution for the purpose of making more explicit any of the doubtful provisions that were in the old Constitution, but to guard more effectively the rights and the liberties of the people outside of the Army.

No person—

It says—

shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury.

Then it adds:

Except in cases arising in the land or naval forces.

But in the old part of the Constitution there is nothing said about land or naval forces; and it was well understood before the amendment was adopted that the language "crimes" did not include crimes committed within the Army or the Navy.

Mr. CARPENTER. The term "high crimes" occurred only in connection with the power of impeachment, and that applied only to civil officers.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. The Senator misapprehends my quotation. I will show him what I mean by that.

The last clause of section 2, article 3, reads:

The trial of all crimes, except in cases of impeachment, shall be by jury.

Can you conceive of language any broader than that? That was the original text of the Constitution, and it was insisted by some lawyers that it was so broad that it included offenses committed within the Army and the Navy, but the reason of the thing was against it.

Mr. CARPENTER. If the Senator will pardon the suggestion, if he will look at the sixth amendment he will find that that embodies precisely the language of the original Constitution and applies to all criminal cases. Read the sixth amendment.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. That was afterward adopted.

Mr. CARPENTER. It was adopted at the same time the fifth was; they were adopted together.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Coming back to the question of pardon, I say that Congress intended from the very outset to retain absolute power over the Army; and when I say absolute power I mean just everything that that broad language implies. I mean that it had authority to establish a despotism over it. Despotism power in all countries is the same. It had authority to do precisely what the mutiny act gave the King of Great Britain power to do. The language of the Constitution in that respect is almost identical with the mutiny act, under which every year the King of Great Britain regulates the public forces.

I say that Congress having that absolute power, unlimited, unrestricted, it was inconsistent with the ideas and the objects of the framers of the organic law to give to the President authority in any way to impair it by the power of pardon. I say to-day that if a military officer were arraigned by court-martial for an attempt upon the liberties of the country he might be acting in concert with the Executive for the destruction of our noble fabric of government, and if he were convicted of that offense, Congress, under its plenary power over the Army, could condemn him to punishment notwithstanding the decision of the Executive. I mean, of course, under the articles of war and according to the principles of the military code.

Mr. CARPENTER. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Certainly.

Mr. CARPENTER. Do I understand the Senator to maintain that it is not in the power of the President to pardon any offense committed against the laws of the United States by any officer of the Army?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Just hear me through.

Mr. CARPENTER. I want to get at the Senator's point in order to appreciate his argument.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Just wait.

Mr. President, the power of pardon, with respect to offenses in the Army and Navy, was inconsistent with the nature of the subject. Every officer who has authority to call a court-martial under the military code has the authority to pardon the offender. That is a fixed principle of military law, recognized at the time our Constitution was adopted, recognized in Great Britain, recognized now, except in two particular instances where Congress has made the rule otherwise, and they are the cases of dismissal from the service and where the penalty of death has been interposed, in which cases, under the distinct authority of Congress, the proceedings must be certified to the President through the Secretary of War for approval.

Mr. CARPENTER. The Senator will pardon me. I do not wish to interrupt him, but I want to understand his position.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I am not so skillful a debater as the Senator.

Mr. CARPENTER. The gentleman is doing himself great injustice. What I want to get at is this: The law authorizes the commanding officer who assembles a court-martial to set aside the proceedings—to disapprove of them—just as a judge in a civil court is authorized to grant a new trial, and does the Senator confound that with pardon?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Let me read what a military authority says on that subject. I do not profess to be a military lawyer, and I do not know anything about those laws, but I find it so recorded by learned authorities that have written on the subject. This authority says:

The revision of their sentence is the last act of a court-martial. But the sentence cannot be executed till confirmed by the proper authority. And every officer authorized to order a general court-martial has power to pardon or mitigate any punishment ordered by said court, except the sentence of death or of cashiering an officer; which, in the cases where he has authority (as enacted in the sixty-fifth article of war) to carry them into execution, he may suspend until the pleasure of the President of the United States be known, which suspension, together with the copies of the proceedings of the court-martial, the said officer will immediately transmit to the President for his determination.

Mr. CONKLING. What book does the Senator read that from?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. O'Brien on Courts-martial, page 280.

Mr. CARPENTER. That is O'Brien's language, not the Articles of War.

Mr. CONKLING. Does the Senator from Florida understand the word "pardon," as there used, to signify an act of executive clemency?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I think he intended to use it in that sense.

Mr. CARPENTER. The article of war says "disapproval," not "pardon."

Mr. JONES, of Florida. When you come to look at it there is very little difference between the power to set aside a sentence after the officer puts his name to it, and the power to do it before. He may disapprove it. He may mitigate the punishment. I understand that is clearly settled. If a man is sentenced to fifty lashes, I am told the officer who calls the court may mitigate it to twenty-five. The Senator from Wisconsin may know more about it than he, but that is what this author states.

Mr. CARPENTER. The Senator will pardon me. He is aware that we are talking about a constitutional question, and that question is, whether the Senator means to maintain that the act of an officer, instead of approving, disapproving the finding of a court-martial, is the exercise of the pardoning power mentioned in the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Oh, it is not the exercise of the pardoning power mentioned in the Constitution of the United States; of course not. But I am arguing to show that from the nature of this subject it is a question of great doubt whether the pardoning power given in the Constitution can be exercised by the President over the Army against the authority of Congress.

As I said awhile ago, the authority of the President in all cases of this kind is derived from Congress, and Congress can revoke his authority to-morrow, can take away from him the power of approving sentences in court-martial cases. Who will deny that? It can take it to itself. It can take the question of the approval of the sentence of a court-martial to itself. I affirm that. I affirm that the authority exists under the Constitution to-day for Congress to take from the President the power to approve the sentences of courts-martial, and to declare that from this time henceforward that power shall be exercised by the two Houses of Congress; and in that case if it affirmed the sentence, the pardoning power in my judgment could not be tolerated to interfere with its power over the subject, because that would be incompatible with the object the framers had in view in giving to the representatives of the people absolute and unlimited authority over the Army.

Mr. LOGAN. If it will not annoy the Senator, I should like to ask him a question on that particular line. He says Congress has authority to take away the approving power of the President in reference to courts-martial. I will not discuss that matter, though we might disagree; but I will ask him this question: Taking it for granted that he is correct in that, suppose Congress was to take away that power to-day, what effect would taking away the power of the President to approve the sentence of a court-martial have on court-martial proceedings that had been approved prior to that?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. That belongs to another branch of the subject.

Mr. LOGAN. That is the point of this case.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I will give the Senator a candid answer. I have no doubt whatever in my mind but that the authority of Congress is supreme and unlimited over the subject, and that it could legislate, if it thought proper, to reverse and nullify and abrogate any sentence of a court-martial which may have taken place. I do not consider such judgment to be any part of the exercise of the judicial power. I look upon a court-martial as being only a necessary part of the machinery provided by Congress for the government and the regulation of the land forces, and that machinery is just like that provided by Congress to settle the disputed claims of claimants under the Geneva award. They sit there with all the solemnity of judges, they write out, as my friend on my right well knows, the most elaborate judicial opinions under an act of Congress which brought them into life for a special purpose. Their authority over the subject I would not deny.

Mr. LOGAN. I will say to the Senator, if it does not interrupt him—

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Go on.

Mr. LOGAN. If I understand the Senator correctly, he means that according to his theory Congress has absolute power over the Army, its courts, their findings, decisions, and approvals—absolute power?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I do.

Mr. LOGAN. That is to say, it may to-day reverse any decision of a court-martial having been approved by the President; the time intervening does not interfere with the power; it runs with the life of Congress and they may at any time set aside the proceedings of a court-martial.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Yes.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well. Now, I will ask the Senator under that theory whether Congress could not set aside the proceedings of courts-martial that were held after the Constitution was adopted under President Washington, or set aside the proceedings of a court-martial that sat during our war of 1812 and so on down to the present time? Would not Congress have that power according to his theory?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Oh, well; I do not question the power at all.

Mr. LOGAN. That is what we are talking about, the power. Now, if Congress—

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I do not think the Senator is putting the case exactly fair. It is said, for instance, that a court of equity has jurisdiction over a certain class of cases without question. You might come up and say it may go back a hundred years and retry cases long since settled. I do not think that is a good argument.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator will see that I am not unfair with him. If Congress has the absolute power to set aside the findings of a court-martial to-day, having been approved by the President five years ago, there being no statute of limitations, tell me what limitation there is on the power of Congress to reach back to the days of Washington? I cannot see it. If there is any distinction I cannot understand it.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. A very large and respectable portion of this body voted that there was no limit with respect to the power of impeachment, not very long ago. They held that a man out of the public service could be impeached for high crimes and misdemeanors in office. I should like to know whether the statute of limitations could come in there. These are peculiar cases. I did not think that way.

Mr. LOGAN. I did not hold that way myself. I happened to be on the other side of that question.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. There is the absolute power of impeachment given running against officers of the United States, and some thought that power extended to men that had left office; they thought it honestly, and maintained it with great force of argument. It shows the difficulty of settling these points by absolute demonstration.

Mr. CONKLING. May I ask leave to put a question to the Senator?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Certainly.

Mr. CONKLING. I do not regard this illustration about impeachments as very valuable, and my question does not relate to that; but the honorable Senator a moment ago introduced an illustration which I thought more instructive, and upon that I want to ask him a question. The honorable Senator referred to the tribunal to adjudicate certain specified cases supposed to be included in the Geneva award, and if I understood him he likened the adjudication of a court-martial to the adjudication of that court.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I did not draw the parallel; I only alluded to it.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator did not commit himself to saying the cases were exactly alike, but he suggested them as belonging to the same category. I thought that a valuable illustration, and I beg to make of the Senator this inquiry: Congress having established that tribunal, which the Senator tells us proceeded with learned opinions to adjudicate certain cases, I ask: when the Geneva award tribunal had adjudicated a case confessedly within its jurisdiction; had rendered its final judgment, that being not a constitutional but merely a statutory tribunal, does the honorable Senator hold that it would have been competent afterward by an act of Congress to say that a judgment in a particular case should be reversed, that a particular award should not be paid to A, but should be paid to B or should not be paid at all? Would that have been an exertion of legislative power and competent within the theory of the honorable Senator?

I am willing to say, if he will allow me, that I think manifestly it would, if the doctrine for which he is arguing be sound, because it was a mere statutory tribunal; it had proceeded to an exertion and exhaustion of the power deposited in it by the statute; and it was not judicial power. If the Senator is right, Congress might by an act afterward say that a particular judgment which it had rendered should be reversed and should be of non-effect; and if the Senator will indulge me only a moment longer I will furnish him a more familiar illustration of the same kind if he will give me his attention. This illustration doubtless exists in his own State, and in manifold instances in my own. The Legislature, without the constitution providing anything about it—the Legislature exercising the power of eminent domain provides that commissioners, three, may be appointed to appraise and condemn property to be used by a railway company in its right of way. These commissioners adjudicate; an appeal is given to the courts; the appeal is exhausted. The Senator's argument must be that that being a mere statutory tribunal, the Legislature with more plenary power than Congress possesses because Congress has only delegated power, and the State Legislatures have the entire residuum of power, would have the competency to step in after this board of assessment had declared that a certain sum should be paid for my house and my close and that the railroad might pass over it, and by law enact that some other sum should be paid or some other act should take place.

Now I put that case and the Geneva award case to the honorable Senator that I may understand him, and I beg him to state whether he means that the Legislature in the one case and Congress in the other may come in under the Constitution and overthrow particular judgments of these statutory courts.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Mr. President, I did allude to the case that arose under the Geneva award where a tribunal was organized for the purpose of administering a fund between private parties. My views on this subject are not new. I had occasion, I think, to state to the Senate a little over a year ago what I conceive to be the true distinction in matters of this description. Where private rights are involved entirely in such judgments, the legislative power cannot interfere.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Florida allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I do not wish to be interrupted all day. If I am, I do not know when I shall get through.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to interrupt in the line of what the Senator was saying, to ask whether the admission that he is now making that it cannot be done in such a case ought not to be qualified by saying that the legislative power might do it on the application of both parties, and whether a judgment of this kind may not be reopened by the consent of the Government on one side, represented by Congress, and the defendant on the other.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I think that would relieve it of the whole difficulty that might be involved in the case.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator thinks consent would confer jurisdiction.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. It is not a question of jurisdiction.

Mr. CARPENTER. The Senator thinks the power would depend on who applied for its exercise.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. A few years ago there was a case before the Senate, which was debated here with great ingenuity and power, where a judgment of the Supreme Court came up, the case of a party seeking relief from the Government against a judgment of the Supreme Court rendered against him on an appeal from the Court of Claims. There it stood. He came before Congress for relief. I said then and I say now that it was perfectly competent for this body to relieve him from that judgment and to give him the relief that he sought, in the exercise of its constitutional power; but if the judgment had been one between two individuals, where the rights of private parties were involved and the interests of the State were not concerned, then the power of Congress to reach that judgment could not be claimed. I refer to the case of Warren Mitchell, which my friend from Kentucky is well acquainted with, where a judgment was rendered in favor of the Government. Mitchell came to Congress for relief, claiming that the decision rested upon a technical interpretation of the statute. The court administered the law, severe and harsh as it was, but he said "this judgment is in your favor, and I appeal to the equity, to the magnanimity, to the justice of the Government not to take advantage of this judgment and to afford me relief." Could there be any question as to the power of Congress to do that, whatever might be said with respect to its policy? None.

So in the case of relief to sureties on official bonds, is it not the everyday practice of the Government, exercising its sovereign authority, to give relief to men who have been amerced in sums of money under judgments in behalf of the Government, because there is no private interest involved? I do not pretend to say that the cases are analogous. I argue in this case from the absolute power of Congress over the Army and that it possesses precisely the authority which the King of Great Britain possesses over the army of that land. And what can he do? The monarch there at the present day, although he commands the army, has no inherent authority to make rules for its government. He has a very great range of powers, no doubt, prerogative powers, but when it comes to the government of the army he must get his authority from Parliament, and annually, in the mutiny act, that authority is given to him. Let me read from the great English commentator:

But our mutiny act makes no such distinction; for any of the faults above mentioned are equally at all times punishable with death itself, if a court-martial shall think proper. This discretionary power of the court-martial is indeed to be guided by the directions of the Crown; which, with regard to military offenses, has almost an absolute legislative power. "His Majesty," says the act, "may from articles of war and constitute courts-martial, with power to try any crime by such articles, and inflict penalties by sentence or judgment of the same." A vast and most important trust! an unlimited power to create crimes, and annex to them any punishments, not extending to life or limb.—Chitty's Blackstone's Commentaries, book 1, chapter 13, page 315 [415].

This power has been claimed here as judicial power. What, I ask you, is judicial power? A power that never involved, let me tell the Senator from Wisconsin, the element of this question in a military sense. With regard to crime, the judicial power seeks to administer the existing laws; the sentence is usually the sentence of the law; but in the case of military tribunals the power is different from that. It invests the tribunal most generally with the authority to inflict discretionary punishment. A judge is never invested with authority to do so.

Mr. CARPENTER. Certainly, he is under our law. He is allowed to fine and imprison or to merely fine or imprison at the court's discretion.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. But imprisonment is there. That is no answer to the argument. "Such other punishment as the discretion of the tribunal may prescribe" is the usual phrase of military law. Is that ever found in an ordinary law as to the exercise of judicial power? What is judicial judgment? It is the administration of existing law. This court-martial code is despotic authority as the mutiny act and as Blackstone say it is. It gives them a vast discretionary power, he says, in all cases not reaching the lives of persons.

Let me read one of the articles of war to show the character and the nature of the power which has been set up here as a judicial power.

ART. 3. Every non-commissioned officer and soldier shall retire to his quarters or tent at the beating of the retreat, in default of which he shall be punished according to the measure of his offense by the commanding officer.

That power runs through the whole military code. In some cases the punishment is prescribed, in others it is not. It is an absolute, uncontrollable discretion vested in the tribunal in all cases lower than the penalty of death. That is never found in any judicial tribunal.

Mr. President, I left off a while ago speaking of the nature of the power of pardon under the Constitution. I recognize that great power as all-important and essential to the administration of our Government, and I would be the last to interfere with it in any way; but in the case of approvals of sentences is it possible that that power is open to the party as it is to the party who is convicted by the judgment of an ordinary court? Here is the article of war which declares that the sentence shall be sent to the President. The authority which he gets to sign that death penalty is derived from Congress. He is made a part of the court, so to speak, just as the general officer who orders the court-martial in other cases is a part of it when he is called upon to approve its action. But in cases of cashiering and of death the President must act under the articles of war. He approves the sentence by the authority of Congress as an act of law, as a judicial act, if it be one. Think of it! He is required to sign the sentence as part of the court to give it effect. He goes over the law, he inquires into the facts, he thinks that justice requires that he shall approve the sentence or that his duty requires it to be done. Now, let me ask in reason, in law, in any view that can be taken of the subject, is it possible that that is the authority to which an appeal for pardon can be addressed? Is he not committed to his own judicial act? These gentlemen say that this is a judicial proceeding, that this is an act as solemn, as binding, as authoritative as the judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States. It would not be worth the paper it was written on without the approval of the President; therefore his approval is part of the sentence. Where, then, do you find authority to combine and unite in one and the same party the judicial and the executive or pardoning power?

We are upbraided here, who advocate the authority of Congress, with an attempt to trench upon the prerogative of the President with respect to his power of pardoning. But I ask you, after he affixes his seal to the judgment of a court-martial by authority of an act of Congress and as a necessary part of the tribunal and thus gives it effect, how is it possible that he can be appealed to as President to undo that which he has done in his military capacity as ordered by the Congress of the United States?

Mr. CARPENTER. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion? The Senator has stated the case correctly, as I understand it, that in the court-martial proceedings the President is part of the court. When his act is performed and the court is done with and it is generally dissolved on the promulgation of his action, he is still President of the United States. What he did before he did under the delegated authority of Congress. What he may do afterward he does under the Constitution. Now, the Constitution expressly declares that the President shall have power to pardon "all offenses," and that that means military as well as civil offenses is clear from the other provision of the Constitution in regard to impeachment, which confines it to civil officers.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. With all due deference to the Senator from Wisconsin, I do not think that that power of impeachment which is confined in one view of that power to civil officers applies here, although there is a respectable class of judicial thinkers in this country who say that it extends to all officers of the Army and Navy; I do not think so. It expressly says "civil officers," but I know it is said that that does not limit the jurisdiction. However that may be, I think that the omission of military officers from that section of the Constitution clearly indicated that they were not included in any of these provisions which were intended to operate upon officers of the civil service, that they belong to a distinct organization to be governed by a distinct and despotic code under the authority of Congress, the same as the army in Great Britain was and is to-day; and, however anxious the framers of the Constitution were to protect and conserve the liberties of the people, with respect to the Army itself they never intended that it should be governed in any other way than it was governed in the rankest despotisms of the earth. The military code of England was put over it.

Now, I ask, where are you going to draw the line of limitation? Did anybody ever question the authority of Louis XVIII, who framed an ordinance under which Marshal Ney was tried, to save his life, even after the findings of the court-martial, and restore him to command in the army? Some of the best officers of France, as you remember, were selected as victims after the downfall of Napoleon. Louis repaired to Paris and issued his order for the trial of Ney, that gallant and noble soul who had fought five hundred battles for France, as it was said, and never one against her. He was arraigned before that court-martial ordered by the king according to their articles of war, which are just like ours, tried, condemned to be shot, to the shame of all civilization; but appeal after appeal was sent up, addressed to them by the noble spirits who still survived the great dynasty, but they were sent in vain. Wellington was appealed to to interfere, but he would not. And no one questioned the power; and it was the very power that directed the creation of the court and the tribunal which sent that man to death. This power from necessity must exist in Congress under our system.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator at that point allow me, not to interrupt him, but to make a suggestion to him, because I should like to hear the argument in reference to the finality of a judgment of a court-martial? I should like to ask him what is his construction of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States delivered on the 19th of November last, in the case of Alvin R. Reed, where they say that the decision of a court-martial is a finality, and when approved by the President it has the same conclusiveness (that is the language of the court) with the judgment of the lowest or highest court in this country. I should like to hear the Senator as to what the Supreme Court mean by "conclusiveness the same as the judgment of any other court" if it does not have the same dignity as a decision of the Supreme Court.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I have never read that decision of the Supreme Court. The Senator from Illinois has the advantage of me. I do not think it has been published yet.

Mr. LOGAN. I will hand it to the Senator. I had it here the other day.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I have not time now to read it, and you can very well understand how hard it would be for a lawyer who never read a particular opinion of a brother lawyer or of a court to give his own opinion upon it. If I had occasion to examine that opinion, I think I could understand its meaning. I can imagine a certain class of cases in which that judgment would be held good; but when the case presented is one between the Government of the United States as represented in Congress and an individual bearing the sentence of a court-martial and appealing for relief, I never can be brought to recognize any doctrine of conclusiveness in a case of this kind, no matter what the Supreme Court may say.

Mr. CARPENTER. Will the Senator allow me one moment? The argument of the Senator, as I understand it, is that a court-martial is exercising power delegated by Congress. Now take the case of courts in the District of Columbia which are confessedly doing the same thing; suppose a man is indicted, convicted, and sentenced to be hanged in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia for murder, can Congress save him?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. No, I am free to admit it, and I will give the reason why. On that subject I read the argument of the Senator from Wisconsin, and I listened to it with great pleasure, as I always do, because it is a great pleasure to hear him in his concise and logical statements; but when it comes to that power I say to him with all frankness that that is judicial power, that a person tried according to the course of the common law for any offense against the laws of Congress—for I am told the common law runs here adapted from the law of Maryland—a party tried according to the course of the common law in a regular judicial proceeding is beyond the power of Congress. The reason is that the Constitution in its wisdom has delegated the judicial power to judicial courts. Its duty with respect to the distribution of that power is a very different one from that imposed by the Constitution upon Congress over the Army. When it came to judicial power the Constitution addressing itself to Congress says: "You shall vest this power elsewhere." It says: "You shall delegate it." It does not leave it optional with Congress at all, because the Supreme Court has decided in a number of cases that it is the constitutional duty of Congress to vest the judicial power in courts created and established for that purpose. When it came to the regulation of its Army, when it came to the government of the land and naval forces, it was not called upon to divest itself of anything at all. It was required to keep up a continuing power within its own hands, subject to its own jurisdiction and control at all times and under all circumstances. In the one case the mandate of the Constitution is, "shall be vested;" in the other case "shall have power." There is the distinction between the two. The Constitution commands Congress to vest the judicial power in courts; it prescribes the tenure of the offices of the judges, but it goes even further than that, and it tells us in the most explicit language what this power is. It does not say that Congress shall do it, but it says it shall be vested, meaning of course that it shall be done by authority of the body that has authority to legislate over the subject—"shall be vested;" but the authority of the Constitution with respect to the Army is that Congress shall have power to make rules and regulations for its government. "Government" is a very broad and expansive word. It means everything that can be implied in the control, in the management, in the discipline and efficiency of the land and naval forces, and the doing of anything and everything essential to the end in view. Chief-Justice Marshall told us in the great case of Gibbons vs. Ogden, let the end be legitimate; let the object be clear as given by the Constitution, and the choice of means is within the legislative power, and is not a question for the courts. It was upon that ground that authority was inferred to create a bank of the United States and to do a thousand other things for which express authority cannot be found in the Constitution. Where can you go in the Constitution and put your finger on that power which says that a bank may be created? It cannot be found there by any express delegation of power. It is an implied authority resulting from the grant of an express one. Now what follows from the power to govern the Army? Suppose the Constitution had said, without any limitation whatever, that Congress should govern the country in such manner as it thought proper, that it should prescribe rules and regulations for the government of the United States, where could be found the lawyer with the authority to step in and say what are the limits of that power in any case in which the public good might be remotely affected? If a case of injustice occurred from the sentence of a court-martial and Congress deeming the discipline of the force impaired, its efficiency in any way affected, who can question its authority to interfere and to do anything that may be necessary to conserve it?

The Senator from Wisconsin also said that the power to appoint officers of the United States included the power to appoint officers of the Army. With all due respect for his opinion, I differ with him. I say that the power to raise and support armies includes the power to create commissioned officers as well as privates, and that it was not the intention of the Constitution, for the reasons stated a while ago, to give to the President the distinct authority to commission any man with a commission in the Army outside of the authority of Congress. It was not like the case of a collector of customs or any other civil officer, for there the liberties of the people cannot be well affected by such appointment, but as I said they had in mind the great example of the mother country and the terrible inflictions that had been imposed on the people in consequence of the executive controlling the military force.

Judge Paschal, in his Annotated Constitution, speaking upon that point, says:

"To raise and support," in practice, means to educate, commission, enlist, draft, conscript, feed, clothe, transport, and pay officers and men.

And so it does. That part of the Constitution which invests the President with power to appoint and nominate officers, with the consent of the Senate, does not relate to the officers of the Army, and never was intended to relate to them, in my judgment.

The judicial power which is exercised by courts, like that created in this district, is very different from the power which is exercised by courts-martial. When a man is tried by the courts of the common law Congress cannot interfere, because Congress has no judicial power, but I say when a man is tried under the direction of Congress, or under rules created by it for the government of the Army and for the machinery of the Army, part of that despotic code which for wise and proper purposes has been given to it, Congress can interfere to do justice. What would be the practical effect of the opposite doctrine? How dangerous would it be to establish the opposite rule? Who can tell what lies before us in the future? The authority of courts-martial has been extended far beyond members of the naval and military forces. In times past districts of country, including the inhabitants, unconnected with the Army, have been brought under and within the jurisdiction of military tribunals. The habeas corpus act may be suspended in cases of danger, and the whole power of Government remitted to the authority of a military chief. This has been done in the past and it is possible that it may be done in the future, because there are times in the history of all countries, as Baron Montesquieu has said, when the statutes of liberty will have to be veiled.

What is the rule then? Is this grand body, representing the dignity, the sovereignty, the aspirations, and the hopes of a great free people, to abdicate in a day like that? When a military commander can call a citizen before him and have him tried according to the articles of war, and a judgment is rendered against him that may imperil his life, is Congress to have no superintending authority? Is that judgment to be conclusive? Is he to be driven to the expedient of a pardon, through all the tedious processes that usually accompany such an application? Is there no authority here to relieve him? Are we so far behind the people on the other side of the Atlantic as to be unable to afford relief to the people when they are crushed by military power? These things have occurred; they may occur again. I know of no distinction that can properly be made between the finding of a court-martial when directed against a citizen under a state of suspension of civil authority and the judgment against a soldier who may belong to the land or naval forces. If the judgment is conclusive in one case it is in the other. Although the greatest infamies and outrages might be perpetrated in any corner of the land, the people here could not be heard to complain, because they would trench upon the judicial power if they attempted to call to account the members of a court-martial who might invade the rights of the people.

Mr. CARPENTER. If the tribunal has no jurisdiction over the person, its judgment is simply a nullity.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Whether with jurisdiction or not, that question could not very well be raised when the man was in the grave. A man might go down to his grave under a judgment rendered by a court without any jurisdiction as well as by the sentence of one that had full jurisdiction. The question is, where is relief to come from. I say that this people ought not to abandon such a power on the part of their representatives. They cannot calculate upon the danger; no man can. I am not willing to see the doctrine with respect to the divisions of authority, as applicable to the great civil branches of the Government, applied to us with respect to the military code. Governor Wall was taken from the coast of Africa after he put a soldier to death without jurisdiction, and tried at the Old Bailey and hung; but what good did his hanging do the man he murdered? You want at times a preventive power; you want a power to stop the evil from being consummated, not to afford a remedy after it is too late.

No, Mr. President, this contest is the old one. If it is anything, it is the contest of the representatives of the people on the one side and the claims of executive government on the other. It is not a contest between the States and the General Government, because the States claim no authority over the Army whatever. The Senator from Wisconsin the other day in his argument went on to deprecate the great inroads, as I said in the opening of my remarks, that were taking place every day upon the rights of the State. There is no question of that kind here. The States gave up all power over the Army in the very inception of our Revolution, and have never asserted any power over it since, but the question is as between the rights of the other branches of the Government and the legislative power as granted in the Constitution to the people's representatives. I shall read here a short extract from the speech of a man who was venerated, and who will be venerated as long as exalted talents can find appreciation in this or in any other land. Mr. Webster, in speaking upon this subject, said:

The contest, for ages, has been to rescue liberty from the grasp of executive power. Whoever has engaged in her sacred cause, from the days of the downfall of those great aristocracies which had stood between the king and the people to the time of our own independence, has struggled for the accomplishment of that single object. On the long list of the champions of human freedom, there is not one name dimmed by the reproach of advocating the extension of executive authority; on the contrary, the uniform and steady purpose of all such champions has been to limit and restrain it. To this end the spirit of liberty, growing more and more enlightened and more and more vigorous from age to age, has been battling for centuries against the solid buttresses of the feudal system. To this end, all that could be gained from the imprudence, snatched from the weakness, or wrung from the necessities of crowned heads, has been carefully gathered up, secured and hoarded, as the rich treasures, the very jewels of liberty. To this end, popular and representative right has kept up its warfare against prerogative, with various success; sometimes writing the history of a whole age in blood, sometimes witnessing the martyrdom of Sidney and Russell, often baffled and repulsed, but still gaining, on the whole, and holding what it gained with a grasp which nothing but the complete extinction of its own being could compel it to relinquish. At length, the great conquest over executive power, in the leading western states of Europe, has been accomplished. The feudal system, like other stupendous fabrics of past ages, is known only by the rubbish which it has left behind it.

That embodies a correct view of the great contest that had been fought and won by a representative government against executive prerogative and government at the time that our Constitution was adopted.

I contend, therefore, that the Constitution of the United States which delegates to Congress absolute and uncontrollable power over the Army is the supreme law of the land, and that that power cannot be impaired in any way by either of the other co-ordinate departments of the Government; that within its scope it is without limit—it is supreme; that it has the right to make rules and regulations such as it thinks proper for its government; that neither the Executive nor the judiciary have any authority over it whatever; and that this provision was necessary to carry out the great purposes of liberty, always to keep a standing army within the close control of the people's representatives.

You remember, sir, the contest that was made by the States when this part of the Constitution was before them for ratification. It was said that it was proposed to authorize the continuance of an army for two years. Why did they not limit it to one year, as in Great Britain? But the friends of liberty succeeded in securing amendments to the Constitution afterward which made their liberty safe. This great principle of representative government, to some extent at least, is involved in this very question.

I hold then, Mr. President, that there is no doubt whatever of the authority of Congress to afford relief in any case where an officer conceives himself to have been aggrieved by the judgment of a military tribunal. Such tribunal is nothing more than the machinery provided by Congress to carry out the purposes of government. It is no part of the judicial system of the United States and never was intended to be. The officers presiding over such courts do not decide judicially, because they are invested with a discretion, as I said awhile ago, that is absolutely incompatible with the idea of judicial judgment. They are invested with absolute discretion in many cases over the liberty of the person, but can that be called a judicial judgment which leaves to the judge the power to say what shall be the punishment in contravention of every principle of well-established law when courts proceed judicially?

With respect to one part of the sentence in this case I have no doubt in my mind whatever but that it is absolutely null and void. I do not believe that it is even within the discretion of a military tribunal, empowered to sit and try according to the rules of war, to take away the civil privileges of any man who happens to be a member of the public forces. I say that under our system while for many purposes the Army is distinct and separate from the great body of the people, still it is a maxim well recognized in our system of jurisprudence that when a man becomes a soldier he does not cease to be a citizen. He has civil rights and capacities independent of military life. He can hold property; he can be an elector; he can engage in civil contracts; he can engage in the contract of marriage; he may become subject to the jurisdiction of the civil courts; he may have a multitude of rights and privileges independent of his military life. I say that when authority is given by Congress to a military tribunal to punish a delinquent for an offense impairing the efficiency and the discipline of the public forces it does not give them authority to take away a single right that belongs to that individual as a member of civil society outside of the Army.

We heard it said here the other day that the taking of life is the highest exercise of power, and so it is. The infliction of death has ever been a military punishment, and without it no army could be made secure; but will any lawyer assert that because a drum-head court-martial for the purpose of preserving discipline on a march may order the shooting of an officer or a soldier that that court could also take away his estate? Could it rob his children of their patrimony? Could it divest him of the title which he held to his property, or say that from thenceforward he should not exercise any right in civil life? They might take his life on the spot in order that the example might go to prevent greater damage and greater injury, but they could not touch one iota of right that he had as a citizen outside of his connection with the army. If his life is taken it is a soldier's life, if his commission is taken it is soldier's commission, and there is the military limit; but when you say he shall be deprived of his estate, of his right to hold office, to sit on juries, to be an elector, you do that which the Constitution has never permitted to be done in such cases, and which cannot be tolerated or upheld.

Mr. President, I said it would be a most dangerous thing for this great repository of human hope and of human freedom to abandon one particle of the great power which is confided to it over the Army of the United States and the officers who are in it. Whatever may be done with respect to the civil branches of the Government, this is a branch that the people will see is always within their own care and keeping, and that they shall not be placed in any less powerful position to protect themselves than the people of that country from which we have borrowed the example of our own institutions. When the case I referred to awhile ago of the trial of the missionary was heard of in Great Britain it brought forth from Lord Brougham a speech which will live as long as the English language lives, and it embodies the true idea of freedom. He said:

Sir, it behoves this house to give a memorable lesson to the men who have so demeaned themselves.

He was speaking of the court-martial.

Speeches in a debate will be of little avail. Arguments on either side neutralize each other. Plain speaking on the one part, met by ambiguous expressions—half censure, half acquittal, betraying the wish to give up, but with an attempt at an equivocal defense—will carry out to the West Indies a motley aspect; conveying no definite or intelligible expression, incapable of commanding respect, and leaving it extremely doubtful whether those things, which all men are agreed in reprobating, have actually been disapproved of or not. Upon this occasion, most eminently, a discussion is nothing, unless followed up by a vote to promulgate with authority what is admitted to be universally felt. That vote is called for, in tenderness to the West Indians themselves—in fairness to those other colonies which have not shared the guilt of Demarara. Out of a just regard to the interests of the West Indian body, who, I rejoice to say, have kept aloof from this question, as if desirous to escape the shame when they bore no part in the crime, this lesson must now be taught by the voice of Parliament—that the mother country will at length make her authority respected; that the rights of property are sacred, but the rules of justice paramount and inviolable; that the claims of the slave owner are admitted, but the dominion of Parliament indisputable; that we are sovereign alike over the white and the black; and though we may for a season, and out of regard for the interests of both, suffer men to hold property in their fellow-creatures, we never, for even an instant of time, forget that they are men, and the fellow-subjects of their masters; that, if those masters shall still hold the same perverse course—if, taught by no experience, warned by no auguries, scared by no menaces from Parliament, or from the crown administering those powers which Parliament invoked it to put forth—but, blind alike to the duties, the interests, and the perils of their situation, they rush headlong through infamy to destruction; breaking promise after promise made to delude us; leaving pledge after pledge unredeemed, extorted by the pressure of the passing occasion; or only, by laws passed to be a dead letter, forever giving such an elusory performance as adds mockery to breach of faith; yet a little delay; yet a little longer of this unbearable trifling with the commands of the parent state, and she will stretch out her arm, in mercy, not in anger, to those deluded men themselves; exert at last her undeniable authority; vindicate the just rights, and restore the tarnished honor of the English name.

That was the case of a trial by a court-martial, whether right or not, in which the authority of the British legislature was invoked to condemn the officers who presided at it, and to hold them up to the public scorn of enlightened men throughout the world. Nobody questioned the legislative authority of Parliament to do that act. It was necessary in the interest of public justice. The army had gone beyond its powers. The officer in command had proclaimed martial law. He had brought a poor Methodist preacher to the bar of a military tribunal and sentenced him to the gallows for no offense whatever. Such was the state of excitement at the time that justice was impossible. That is the kind of judgment which we are told here is as sacred, as sanctified, and as binding as a judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States. I do not refer to this particular case but to the character of judgment. My soul, sir, abhors the doctrine. I shall resist it as long as I shall live. Never while I have the honor to hold a place in a public assembly will I, with my consent, relinquish a single safeguard which the Constitution has given for the liberty and the security of the people. [Applause in the galleries.]

Mr. WHYTE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. EDMUNDS.) The Senator will suspend. The Chair directs the Sergeant-at-Arms, in case of any further disturbance in the galleries by applause or disapproval, to arrest the offender and bring him to the bar of the Senate for its disposition.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of what is known as the fortification appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia moves that the present and all prior orders be postponed, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the following bill—

Mr. LOGAN. I object.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will suspend a moment. The title of the bill will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. "A bill (H. R. No. 2787) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from West Virginia that the present and all prior orders be postponed, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill the title of which has been read.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I had intended moving to postpone the pending bill to a day certain, say Monday next, but if it is more agreeable to the Senate to postpone the consideration of the bill in the ordinary way it will be satisfactory to me.

Mr. WHYTE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I hope not until the appropriation bill is taken up.

Mr. WHYTE. I have no objection to taking up the appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. WHYTE. I presumed the appropriation bill had already been taken up when I rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has not.

Mr. WHYTE. Then I withdraw my motion.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I hope not. Let us take the bill up at least, so that we shall know what we are going to proceed with to-morrow.

Mr. BURNSIDE. My motion is not debatable.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I know a motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business has precedence, but I hope the Senate will take up the appropriation bill before that is done, so that we shall know what we are to proceed with to-morrow.

Mr. LOGAN. I object.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I have moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from West Virginia to postpone the present and all prior orders and proceed to the consideration of the fortification bill. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I desire to state to the Senate, that I may be entirely right on the record, that when the special order in General Porter's case was had it was the express understanding distinctly stated to the Senate that whenever the Appropriations Committee brought forward bills affecting the Government I should, as is always customary, make no objection to laying aside informally the bill now under consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from New Jersey that the motion of the Senator from West Virginia is to postpone the pending bill, and is not a request for unanimous consent to lay it aside informally. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I would conform to the wish of my friend from New Jersey had not an objection already been filed against laying aside the bill informally, and I thought it was useless to ask that that be done.

Mr. LOGAN. The motion of the Senator from West Virginia, I believe, is to postpone the pending bill and all prior orders. Is that the motion?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. In order to take up the fortification bill.

Mr. LOGAN. No matter about "in order to." You cannot unite the motive with the motion. I ask just what the motion is.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator of course is right in that; but I am right in stating my reason for making the motion. I assign that as the reason, and I will also say that the Post-Office deficiency bill, which is an appropriation bill, is ready to follow the fortification bill.

Mr. LOGAN. What I desire to understand is the motion of the Senator, not his reasons for making the motion.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Let the Chair state the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Illinois that the motion of the Senator from West Virginia is to postpone the present order and to take up the fortification bill, the effect of which is to put the present order on the Calendar in its proper place.

Mr. LOGAN. Exactly. I move an amendment to the motion of the Senator from West Virginia. I move to postpone the pending bill indefinitely, and I ask for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair cannot entertain the motion as a motion to amend, but the motion to postpone indefinitely [pausing]—

Mr. LOGAN. Has precedence; it amounts to the same thing.

Mr. INGALLS. It is the same thing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will consider that a motion.

Mr. WALLACE. What is it that is moved to be postponed indefinitely?

Mr. LOGAN. I will explain.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I understand as the Senator put the motion it would be to postpone the motion to proceed to the consideration of the appropriation bill. That he does not want to do.

Mr. LOGAN. I beg the Senator's pardon, I put no such motion. I moved as an amendment to the Senator's motion, which was to postpone the Fitz-John Porter bill, to postpone it indefinitely, that motion having priority.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks, under the forty-third rule, the motion of the Senator from West Virginia being to postpone the present and all prior orders, and the Senator from Illinois moving to postpone the bill indefinitely, according to the practice of the Senate the motion of the Senator from West Virginia, which is a motion to proceed to some other business, if it were taken together would be in order and would not be superseded by the motion of the Senator from Illinois. But as the motion of the Senator from West Virginia is really two motions, as has been often held in the Senate, and therefore not strictly entertainable at all, to postpone one bill and to proceed to the consideration of something else, the motion of the Senator from Illinois is in order to postpone the bill indefinitely. Then the Senator from West Virginia, if he desires to take up the appropriation bill, can supersede that motion by a motion to lay the bill on the table, according to the forty-third rule, which would leave the bill on the table subject to be taken up on the motion of any Senator by a vote of the Senate.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It would be subject to a majority of the Senate at any time to take it up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is what the Chair thinks the parliamentary law and rule of the Senate is.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The motion to indefinitely postpone of course is debatable. The motion to lay on the table is not debatable. Therefore I will move to lay the present order on the table with a view of taking up the appropriation bill. That motion, I believe, is not debatable.

Mr. LOGAN. By moving to lay the present order on the table I suppose the Senator means to move to lay my motion on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from West Virginia to move to lay the bill now under consideration on the table.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That is right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks that that supercedes the motion of the Senator from Illinois to postpone the bill indefinitely, under the forty-third rule. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from West Virginia to lay the bill now under consideration on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Now I move to take up House bill No. 2787, known as the fortification appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WHYTE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirty-eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at four o'clock and thirty-eight minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, March 11, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York desires to submit a motion.

Mr. KELLEY. I hope the gentleman from New York will permit me to present a question of personal privilege touching my own character and relating to the business of the House.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania states that he rises to a question of privilege, and in view of this being the first instance of a member asking the floor for a personal privilege under the new rules, the Chair desires to have the new rule read that the House may know its provisions.

The Clerk read as follows:

RULE IX.

QUESTIONS OF PRIVILEGE.

Questions of privilege shall be, first, those affecting the rights of the House collectively, its safety, dignity, and the integrity of its proceedings; second, the rights, reputation, and conduct of members individually in their representative capacity only; and shall have precedence of all other questions, except motions to fix the day to which the House shall adjourn, to adjourn, and for a recess.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has stated to the Chair that the case in point comes under both clauses of the rule just read, and the gentleman is therefore recognized.

Mr. BUCKNER. Mr. Speaker, I suggest on this question, as it is an important one in the future—

The SPEAKER. What question?

Mr. BUCKNER. The question that the gentleman from Pennsylvania presents.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not yet heard what it is.

Mr. BUCKNER. I understand the gentleman rises to a question of personal privilege. I suggest, therefore, that he state briefly what the point is and how far it affects either the dignity of the House or himself, and then the Speaker can determine.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has called the attention of the gentleman to the rule and the gentleman stated to the Chair that it came under both clauses of the rule.

Mr. BUCKNER. I suggest it is not a question for the gentleman from Pennsylvania but one for the Chair, and ultimately for the House, to determine whether it comes under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot rule till he hears what it is.

Mr. GARFIELD. If after the gentleman from Pennsylvania has stated his point, the gentleman from Missouri should think it is not a question of privilege, it will then be competent for the gentleman to raise the point of order and have it decided.

The SPEAKER. Any member can do so.

Mr. KELLEY. My object is to show on the testimony of the man himself that he resorted to improper measures to influence legislation.

Mr. BUCKNER. I did not rise for the purpose of at all antagonizing the gentleman from Pennsylvania. But I wish to suggest to the House that the matter is analogous to the practice in courts of law, where the judge would in the first place hear what the evidence is briefly, and then it is for the court to decide as in this case it is for the Speaker to decide.

The SPEAKER. This relates to legislative proceedings, and the Chair cannot confine it to what might be the rules of law courts.

Mr. BUCKNER. The effect of that ruling is to let in the statement first, and decide hereafter whether it involves a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has made no ruling as yet, and cannot make any until he hears the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KELLEY. I ask the Clerk to read what I have marked in the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin, of Wednesday, March 10.

The Clerk read as follows:

[Special dispatch to the Evening Bulletin.]

WASHINGTON, March 10, 1880.

Judge KELLEY was on the war-path yesterday, and looking for somebody to wreak his vengeance upon, all in consequence of a paragraph in the Evening Bulletin of a few days ago about a conversation between himself and Nat. McKay on the subject of sugar. In that conversation the judge resented an attempt to give him some light on the question now before the Ways and Means Committee, and said he would have been a scoundrel had he voted other than he did. Mr. McKay sought to impress upon the judge that the passage of a sugar bill would bring a large trade to Philadelphia from Demerara; but this had no effect, and only brought out a reply that he "did not care about the trade."

It seems that a large number of Judge KELLEY's most earnest supporters in Philadelphia are regular readers of the Evening Bulletin, and when they saw the position the judge had taken it occurred to some of them that it was their duty to reason with him and endeavor to show him that he was taking the wrong course, and that the merchants of Philadelphia are interested in bringing all the trade they can to their doors. Accordingly a number of them, including several who have an idea that the judge is largely indebted to them for his elevation, wrote strong personal letters, urging him to use his efforts to get a new sugar bill passed. Now the reception of these letters acted like a firebrand upon the judge, especially as some of them referred to the dispatches in the Evening Bulletin, and when he went to the meeting of the Ways and Means Committee yesterday he was exceedingly wrathful. It so happened that Mr. Nat McKay went to this room upon business, and he was immediately pounced upon by the Representative from the fourth district, and charged with having inspired the letters he had received from his constituents. "He made things lively for McKay," said a member of the committee who witnessed the affair, "and I certainly thought he intended to attack him. He told McKay he never wanted to talk with him again on the sugar question; that he had been in Congress for many, many years, and a member of the Ways and Means Committee for over a dozen years, and knew more about the sugar question than all the persons who were bothering him with letters."

Afterward the judge said if any more of his conversations were reported somebody would get kicked, and he would have no more hesitation in kicking a man who undertook to influence his judgment than he would a dog. In view of this critical condition of affairs, it might be judicious for those merchants who regard themselves as Judge KELLEY's constituents, and who feel an interest in the shaping of certain legislation by the Ways and Means Committee, to hold up on their letters for a while, as additional letters will only tend now to intensify his anger. He says plainly that he don't intend to notice the letters already received, and is very indignant toward the writers, and regards their action as unnecessary and uncalled for.

Mr. KELLEY. I have been here quite too long to take note—

Mr. BUCKNER. I submit now to the Chair—

Mr. KELLEY. I hope the gentleman will not interrupt me.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri rises to a point of order; which is his right.

Mr. WILSON. I hope the gentleman from Missouri will not interrupt the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I think it is due him as the oldest member of the House that he be allowed to proceed.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, I want to state to this House that at the end of nineteen years I have been corruptly approached for the purpose of controlling my vote in the Committee on Ways and Means and the House.

The SPEAKER. That clearly comes within the scope of the rule.

Mr. KELLEY. If that does not relate to the dignity and honor of the House and the purity of legislation I do not know what does.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it does.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, I have been here too long to take note of criticisms upon my temper, my person, or my manners. But when one to whom I have given my confidence, to whom I am grateful for having rushed to my relief when struggling with a hemorrhage, which I believed was to produce instant death, becomes the witness of his own infamy, I thus seek the defense of publicity.

None of the sugar dealers of Philadelphia, whether it be S. & W. Welsh, the great importers; Field Brothers, the commission merchants; E. C. Knight & Co., Harrison & Havemeyer, B. H. Bartol & Son, or any of the respectable—and some of them very distinguished—men engaged in any branch of the sugar business, complain that I have not answered their letters or given patient hearing to their suggestions. A dispatch has just been handed me by my colleague, [Mr. WARD,] received since I came upon the floor, from the Messrs. Field, asking him to confer with me and urging us to stand firm in the position we have maintained.

No such scene as is described in what has been read from the desk occurred in the committee-room in the presence of any member of that committee. Colonel Jones (the clerk) and I being there, Mr. McKay entered and I hastened to tell him that I would kick as I would a dog the man that approached me with corrupt influences such as he was stimulating. The grocery trade and the sugar trade have been in the fullest and freest correspondence with me since we considered the tariff of 1870, when I was as now a member of the Committee on Ways and Means. This man after furtively putting before me corrupt motives, not so plainly as to justify me in striking him, but distinctly enough for me to comprehend him, disclosed the fact that large and profitable contracts with him for railroads and for public buildings, all of which would go into Philadelphia and most of them into my district, depended upon the admission of high grade Demerara sugars at low rates of duty, my response to all of which was that I did not care about the trade of Demerara or those contracts.

Thus repulsed, he proceeded to seek the officers of the convention that last renominated me, and induce them and other men of less note to write to me repeating his suggestions. A small number of such letters came from men who can probably distinguish sugar from salt by sight, but who probably require to taste them if they be of equal grain and whiteness; men who are in no wise connected with the sugar trade except as their wives may buy at retail for the use of their families; nor were they men engaged in the iron trade; they were mere politicians; yet this man asked them to instruct me to vote on the sugar bill in a particular way under the penalty of political punishment.

And beyond this, sir, another member of the audacious Demerara and Cuban lobby having been seated at the table at which my colleagues, Mr. O'NEILL, Mr. WARD, and I habitually dine, and while conversation on general topics went on between us, obtruded himself into it in order to tell me that I was acting in disregard of the sentiment of my people; and when I repulsed him properly, made it fitting that I should say to him that I had always found myself able to take care of myself, and if he attempted in any way to execute his intimidation he would find that though more than sixty years had passed over my head I was still able to take care of myself. [Applause.]

Sir, permit me to say in conclusion, that I have no fault to find with the paper that published that dispatch, nor with the reporter who sent it. I admit that my temper was raised to a tempestuous degree by the audacity of a man who knew that for years I had believed that he had probably saved my life. Yet I would have kept his infamous secret had he not thus proclaimed it. I blame not the reporter or the paper for giving credence to a man who for so many years enjoyed my own confidence.

SESSION ON SATURDAY.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I ask unanimous consent of the House that there be a session held on Saturday next for the purpose only of continuing the discussion on the funding bill in Committee of the Whole, no question to be taken on that bill and no other subject to be considered.

Mr. KELLEY. For the present I object. I regard the funding bill as the most important measure now before the House, and it should be discussed in a full House. It involves more millions than any other bill, and I do not think it ought to be remitted to the debating society of Saturday, when but few members are likely to be here.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. There is nothing in my proposition that proposes to keep the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] or any other member of the House away from here Saturday. That gentleman is aware that it is indispensable for the House to take action on that bill at the earliest practicable moment. The bonds now maturing must be met, and they can only be met by the action of Congress.

I will say in addition that the Committee on Appropriations is now ready to report several of the general appropriation bills, and we must yield everything to enable the House to dispose of those bills. I hope, therefore, that in view of the fact that there are some fifteen or twenty gentlemen other than members of the Committee on Ways and Means who have indicated their purpose to discuss the bill, the House will give us Saturday, which is not ordinarily a legislative day, for that purpose. I am surprised that a member of the committee reporting this bill should interpose any objection.

Mr. KELLEY. I must maintain my objection. That bill deserves the most deliberate consideration in a full House. If we shall meet on Saturday for general business, then I will welcome the discussion of that bill, for then members will attend.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I give notice that to-morrow I will test the sense of the House on the proposition of holding a session on Saturday to debate the funding bill.

EVENING SESSIONS FOR THE PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. MILLS. I ask unanimous consent to submit, for consideration at this time, the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved. That on and after Monday, the 15th instant, the House of Representatives shall hold evening sessions every evening, beginning at seven o'clock and thirty minutes p. m., for the consideration of the Private Calendar, and all bills shall be disposed of in the order in which they stand upon the same.

Mr. MILLS. I desire to state that there are a great many bills on the Private Calendar, and it is hopeless to attempt to dispose of them without holding evening sessions.

Mr. CONGER. Let this resolution go over until to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. That is required by the rule, if the gentleman objects to its present consideration.

Accordingly the resolution went over until to-morrow.

HOT SPRINGS RESERVATION.

Mr. WRIGHT. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table, for consideration at this time, Senate joint resolution No. 89, touching the Hot Springs reservation in Arkansas.

Mr. WHITE. I object.

Mr. WRIGHT. The time expires on Monday, and I hope my colleague will withdraw his objection.

Mr. WHITE. I insist upon my objection.

PILOT LAWS, ETC.

Mr. FRYE, by unanimous consent, presented the following; which was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Resolves relating to pilot laws and the removal of the obstruction to navigation over East River, New York.

Whereas the State of Maine, by its geographical position, having a long line of sea-coast with many fine harbors, is a State of great commercial importance; our people are largely engaged in navigation, and are therefore interested in any legislation that affects this industry; and

Whereas the pilot laws of several of the States are unjust, and impose upon ship-owners burdens hard to be borne, and are contrary to the spirit of the Constitution; and

Whereas there is now being erected a bridge across East River, in the State of New York, which will be another tax upon shipping by compelling them to lower their topmasts, thereby causing delay; Therefore,

Be it resolved. That we hereby earnestly call the attention of our Senators and Representatives in Congress to the unjust pilot laws in force in several of the States, and we request them to use their best efforts to have a general pilot law enacted that shall be just and equitable to the people of all the States, and also to compel the builders of the suspension bridge across East River, in the State of New York, to place the roadway at such a height as shall not obstruct or impede the navigation of said East River.

Resolved. That a copy of the above preamble and resolution, when approved, be forwarded to our delegation in Congress by the secretary of state.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
March 5, 1880.

Read and passed finally.

GEO. E. WEEKS, Speaker.

Read and passed finally.

IN SENATE, March 6, 1880.

JOS. A. LOCKE, President.

MARCH 9, 1880.

Approved.

DANIEL F. DAVIS, Governor.

A true copy. Attest:

J. O. SMITH, Deputy Secretary of State.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ATKINS. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being called for, the morning hour will begin at five minutes before one o'clock for reports of committees. The call rests with the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

PROTECTION OF COINS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. VANCE, from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 4308, a bill (H. R. No. 5064) to punish certain crimes relating to the coins of the United States, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, with the accompanying report ordered to be printed, and referred to the House Calendar.

TRADE-DOLLARS.

Mr. VANCE, from the same committee, to whom had been referred the following bills—

A bill (H. R. No. 11) to provide for retiring the trade-dollar, for its recoinage into the standard silver dollar, and for the redemption of fractional silver coins;

A bill (H. R. No. 348) fixing the value of the trade and Mexican dollars, and providing that the legal-tender silver dollar shall be the unit of value;

A bill (H. R. No. 398) to make the trade-dollars a legal tender for all debts at their nominal value, and to require their recoinage into standard silver dollars;

A bill (H. R. No. 664) to make the trade-dollar a legal tender;

A bill (H. R. No. 681) making the trade-dollar and the Mexican dollar a legal tender;

A bill (H. R. No. 697) to make the trade and other silver dollars receivable for public dues, &c.;

A bill (H. R. No. 913) to provide for the exchange of the trade-dollars for legal-tender silver dollars;

A bill (H. R. No. 1458) to provide for retiring the trade-dollar, and for its recoinage into the standard silver dollar; and reported the same back with a substitute therefor, being a bill (H. R. No. 5065) to provide for the exchange of the trade-dollars for legal-tender dollars, and to stop the coinage of the trade-dollars, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time.

A bill (H. R. No. 3163) to authorize the recoinage of the trade-dollar—

Mr. VANCE. I move that the bill and accompanying report be printed and referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. CONGER. Judging from the titles of the bills for which this substitute is presented, I should suppose the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union would be the proper reference. Some of those bills evidently involve an expenditure of money.

Mr. GARFIELD. But if so, the point of order will lie when the bill is reached on the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. If either of the bills or either of the substitutes involves an expenditure of money, it will have to go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CONGER. That applies to the original bills as well as the substitutes?

The SPEAKER. That is the view of the Chair.

Mr. VANCE. I cannot hear what motion the gentleman from Michigan makes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is inquiring whether either the original bills or the substitutes would involve an expenditure of money; if so, the point that they must go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union would be good.

Mr. VANCE. I understand, however, that the bills now go to the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. They do; but when they are reached on that Calendar it will be competent for any member to raise the point of order upon them, and if it should be sustained the bills would be transferred from the House Calendar to the Calendar of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman knows, of course, whether the bill would be subject to a point of order. If it would have to go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union whenever it is reached on the House Calendar, why not send it there at once and let it have an early place instead of being behind many other bills?

Mr. VANCE. The point of order does not apply.

The substitute was referred, together with the original bills, to the House Calendar; and the substitute, with the accompanying report, was ordered to be printed.

EXCHANGE OF SILVER BULLION.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. No. 227) regulating the exchange of silver bullion for the standard silver dollar, and providing that gold and silver, jointly and not otherwise, shall be a full legal tender; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ABRIDGMENT OF LETTERS-PATENT.

Mr. VANCE, from the Committee on Patents, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 4661, a bill (H. R. No. 5066) to provide for the preparation of classified abridgments of all letters-patent of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SMITH E. G. RAWSON.

Mr. WARD, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 2537, a bill (H. R. No. 5067) for the relief of Smith E. G. Rawson; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS.

Mr. COOK. I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to report back two bills and ask their reference to the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. The title of the first bill will be read.
The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. No. 1157) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase additional lots of ground adjoining the new building for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

Mr. ATKINS. I desire to inquire whether the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds make any recommendation with regard to this bill?

Mr. COOK. It contains an appropriation.

Mr. ATKINS. But do the committee make any recommendation?

Mr. COOK. No, sir.

Mr. ATKINS. It seems to me that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds should take the responsibility of making a recommendation on the subject.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from Georgia to state that the committee make no recommendation.

Mr. ATKINS. I understand that; but I think they ought to have done so. I think that committee ought to take the responsibility of making a recommendation, and not throw the responsibility upon the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. The title of the other bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. No. 820) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase lands adjacent to the custom-house in the city of Providence, Rhode Island.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman ask the same order in regard to this bill?

Mr. COOK. Yes, sir.

Mr. PAGE. It seems to me rather a singular proceeding that these bills should be referred to the Committee on Appropriations without any recommendation. What is the object of referring such bills to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds at all?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has nothing to do with the purpose or object of the House in its reference of these bills.

Mr. PAGE. But the House has something to do with it.

Mr. CALKINS. Is there a written report accompanying these bills?

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair that should not be required where bills are reported for reference to other committees for investigation. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have not examined into the subject and make no report; they merely ask to be discharged, so that another committee may consider.

Mr. CALKINS. My reason for asking the question was this: As I understand, when the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds recommend the erection of a public building, they must fix the maximum amount to be spent in its erection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is quite right.

Mr. PAGE. I move to recommit these bills to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. I do not see why that committee should evade its duty.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes that the object is to procure appropriations for these purposes in the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. PAGE. But they are sent without recommendation at all, and the Committee on Appropriations cannot go into an examination of those bills. They have already too much to do.

The SPEAKER. Nevertheless they do go into an examination of all the items in the sundry civil appropriation bill, which usually contains appropriations for the construction of public buildings throughout the country.

Mr. PAGE. What is the object of referring these questions, then, to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not advised of the object.

Mr. PAGE. I move to recommit the bills to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with instructions to report their recommendation.

Mr. MCKENZIE. I desire to say to the gentleman from California that the House took away from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, under the new rules, the power to recommend appropriations.

Mr. PAGE. They did not take away the power to make appropriations.

Mr. COOK. I will state, Mr. Speaker, to the gentleman from California, that where the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have recommended the amount to be appropriated, that recommendation has been utterly disregarded by the Committee on Appropriations. They are not bound by the amount we recommend at all, but have cut it down one-half or increased it double. Take, for instance, the public building at Hartford, Connecticut. In 1872 the construction of that building was authorized, and the appropriation limited to $300,000. In 1874 that limitation was extended and increased to $400,000. From that day to this, without any other action whatever except upon appropriation bills coming from the Committee on Appropriations, $275,000 additional have been expended, and the Secretary of the Treasury, in his Book of Estimates, now asks for $75,000 more to complete it, making in all $800,000 for the construction of that building at Hartford, Connecticut, when at the outset the amount was limited to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to $300,000. The Committee on Appropriations are not bound by any limitation we put upon the construction of public buildings, and we therefore deem it useless to make any recommendation on the subject.

Mr. PAGE. What is there to prevent the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds reporting its bills and their going, as other bills are referred, to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

Mr. COOK. That is what we proposed to do, but here are bills coming from the Senate recommending the purchase of ground, and I have been directed to move that they be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ATKINS. I desire to say one word. In no instance that I am aware of has the Committee on Appropriations formally changed the limit which the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have placed on any public building. It has been done simply by annual appropriations, which have been made in accordance with estimates by the Supervising Architect. The Supervising Architect has submitted his estimates for the construction of a building, and appropriations are made in accordance with his estimates. The committee generally cut down the annual appropriations as far as possible. Additional estimates are made for the subsequent year, and so on from year to year. In that way the limitations placed on these public buildings by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have been exceeded.

There is no disposition on the part of the Committee on Appropriations to exceed the limits which the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have placed on different public buildings, and, so far as I am aware of, I do not know of any sentiment entertained by any member of the Committee on Appropriations or any desire on the part of any one of them to increase expenditures in the construction of public buildings and grounds further than may be recommended by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds on that subject. We are anxious that committee should take the responsibility; and when they recommend a new building to be constructed, they shall take the responsibility of saying how much it shall cost. As one of the members of the Committee on Appropriations, I intend, so far as I am concerned, to conform to that recommendation and not to exceed it.

Mr. COOK. I state again, as I stated before, that no limitation placed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds for the last ten years has been adhered to except in two or three instances; but, on the contrary, they have been doubled, going from $300,000 to $800,000, and from $4,000,000 to $9,000,000.

Mr. ATKINS. That has not been our fault.

Mr. COOK. It has not been the fault of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. ATKINS. It is the fault of the Supervising Architect.

Mr. COOK. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have considered the true intent of the action of the House in preventing or making any recommendation as to appropriation—that the action of the House was intended and designed to leave that whole question with the Committee on Appropriations, as they had charge of the Treasury and knew what amount could be appropriated for public buildings as well as for other governmental purposes. They sent the whole matter of cost to that committee and very properly, I think.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

The message further announced the approval of bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 3462) to amend section 3020 of the Revised Statutes; and

An act (H. R. No. 4432) making additional appropriation for the support of certain Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1880.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to the point which we now make on these bills, and I do not think we can take any other position than we now take. These are Senate bills. They appropriate money. They come to our committee. If they are reported back by our committee they must be considered now, or they must go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; but they contain an appropriation of money which the House by a very decided vote said we should not have jurisdiction of. How can we report them back? We cannot emasculate the bills. They are in themselves appropriation bills. They contain subjects relating to appropriations of money, and the House has said our committee shall have no jurisdiction over appropriations. The House has changed the old rule in that respect. Under the old rule we could do it; but under the new rule we cannot. That rule says "other than appropriations" shall be considered by our committee.

Now, we simply want these bills to be referred where the House has said by a decided vote they should go, namely, to the Committee on Appropriations, and then we may discuss the further question as to whether bills originating in this House shall or shall not make recommendations as to a limitation. I claim that Senate bills appropriating money cannot, by any possible construction of that rule that the Speaker may give to it, go to our committee.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania assert in his opinion the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has not now the right to put a limitation as to the entire cost of a public building?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. If the Speaker will bear with me I did not make that assertion.

Mr. ATKINS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Certainly.

Mr. ATKINS. Is it the purpose of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to take the responsibility of lending their influence to the passage of this act and throw the responsibility upon the Committee on Appropriations? It is our duty to make appropriations in accordance with law—not to make laws. We have been accused of making laws and of an itching to make laws on almost every question. Now, we do not desire to do that.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I will say in response to the question of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, speaking for myself on that committee—and I doubt not that I speak the sentiments of the majority of the committee—expect to bow to the judgment of this House. We yield willingly and cheerfully to the direction of the House. We desire to report back our bills in just such shape as the House desires to have them. We have no fight with the Committee on Appropriations after having settled decisively in the House this question which was before us. I do accept all responsibility that the House chooses to impose upon me, but when the House says by a deliberate vote that one committee shall not have jurisdiction of subjects relating to appropriations, and when a bill comes to my committee that contains anything like an appropriation for any specific purpose, I say I must come to the House and ask to be discharged from its consideration and have it referred to the Committee on Appropriations, which, according to the judgment of the House, alone has jurisdiction of the matter.

Mr. CALKINS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say but a word about the construction of the rules, and what I conceive to be the jurisdiction of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

In the first place I shall not consent as a member to the establishment by law of a public building until the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has first established it and fixed the maximum of its cost. When that is done, then, if a public building seems to be a necessity, no man on this floor will render it a more cheerful support than myself. But the first thing to be done and inquired about it is as to the necessity for the establishment of the building, and then the fixing of the maximum cost. That is exclusively within the jurisdiction of this committee. That is its duty. It cannot escape from it. It must do it.

In the next place, that having been done, the recommendation for the appropriation, under the rules of this House, must of necessity go to the Committee on Appropriations. They are charged with the duty of appropriating money for this and other subjects according to law. Then we have an harmonious whole—the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds establishing by law the location of the public buildings and fixing their maximum cost, and the Committee on Appropriations appropriating the necessary money for their erection. Until they come before the House in that manner, I want it understood that I shall oppose every one of them.

Mr. COOK. I wish to ask one question. The two bills I have offered for reference to the Appropriations Committee, neither of them contemplates building anywhere. They are Senate bills recommending a certain amount for the purchase of land by the Government adjacent to buildings already constructed, one in this city and one in Providence.

Mr. ATKINS. I wish to state I was under a misapprehension as to the nature of the bills when I first addressed the House. I find these are appropriation bills which were introduced into the Senate, passed the Senate, and have come to the House. Now, sir, in my judgment the Senate has no power to originate appropriation bills. I think the Constitution is perfectly plain upon that subject; and for one I am not willing as a member of this House to consider these appropriation bills at all until they have been subjected to a legal investigation. I think the bills should go to the Committee on the Judiciary, and I make that motion. One of them is a bill "authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase additional lots of ground adjoining the new building for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing." The other is a bill "to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase land adjacent to the custom-house in the city of Providence, Rhode Island." It seems to me they are clearly appropriation bills.

Mr. HOOKER. The report which has been made by the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, he says, refers to Senate bills; but, as I understand through other members of that committee, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, with reference to bills which originated in this House and which have been referred to that committee, propose to report those bills back to the House without fixing an amount. I beg to differ from my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] as to the construction of the existing rules. Originally this committee unquestionably under the old rules possessed this power and constantly exercised it, and there never was a bill referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds in reference to which they did not exercise the jurisdiction of determining what amount should be appropriated, either for the purchase of the necessary lands for a public building or for the erection of the buildings themselves. The instances to which my friend from Georgia, [Mr. COOK,] the chairman of the committee, has alluded, where they have gone on and exceeded the amounts, have probably arisen in this way: that primarily there was appropriated so much for the erection of a building and it was known the money appropriated was not sufficient, and hence other bills directing further appropriations have been introduced and referred.

I do not see very well why the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds are deprived under the new rule of the power they had under the old rule. Clause 19 of Rule XI defines what legislation shall be referred to that committee in the following terms:

To the public buildings and occupied and improved grounds of the United States, other than appropriations therefor.

When their report is made to the House it must go on some calendar. Suppose it goes on the House Calendar, then you have got to fix in the House the amount when the bill is considered without the action of a committee, although that is peculiarly a subject which a committee ought to consider, and certainly there is no committee more appropriate for its consideration than the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. Why? Because they receive the whole evidence, and because they receive the estimates of the architect. They receive the evidence, for instance, as to the income that is being derived from the revenue of the offices—from the Post-Office and from other offices into which revenue comes—and they are better prepared to pass upon the question as a committee acting for the House and preparing business for the House than the Appropriations Committee or any other committee, as the whole subject-matter is intrusted to them.

I do not think this committee is shorn of the power to make this investigation and this recommendation. They ought to do it. And whether you refer a specific appropriation to the Committee of the Whole House or act upon the recommendation of a committee in the House you have the action of the House in fixing the amount, which it is almost impossible for a large body of men to do intelligently unless every man reads the whole evidence. This is a function which belongs to some committee, and to none more properly than the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. In the Committee of the Whole by a very decisive vote the right was given to that committee to recommend appropriations to the House. This action was reversed in the House also by a decisive vote; but I do not think the House intended by the terms of its rule to say that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds should be shorn of its power to make the investigation and the recommendation; and I think if it be true that all the bills referred to this committee are to be reported back without fixing the amount, we shall then have discussions in the House or in the Committee of the Whole, where we will have nothing to act upon but the recommendation that a building be erected without specifying the amount.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. These bills are not the unanimous report of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. As I have notified my colleagues that I purposed to oppose the report in the House, I feel at liberty to do so. I do not think this is a practical character of legislation. I do not think those bills in their present condition can be acted upon at all by the Committee on Appropriations. No appropriation can be made until authorized by law, and I do not think those bills in their present form authorize any appropriation. I think it is eminently proper that the duty of fixing the cost of those buildings should be confided to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, that committee having already before them all the facts and data on which they base their opinion in recommending the building at all. It seems to me the proper course to pursue with all these bills—and I suggest that course to my colleagues—is that they be recommitted to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, so that they may come back with a recommendation fixing the limit of the cost.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] raises the point as to the right of the Senate to originate bills making appropriations; and moves that these two bills be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, in order that that constitutional point may be determined.

The motion was agreed to.

STORER COLLEGE, WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. COOK, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 4367) granting about ten acres of land to Storer College at Harper's Ferry, West Virginia, and moved that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that the same be referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

LANDING OF IMMIGRANTS IN NEW YORK.

Mr. COOK also, from the same committee, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 4644) to amend an act entitled "An act for the construction of a public building for the use by the United States Government in the city of New York," approved June 15, 1878; and moved that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. REAGAN. Judging from the title of the bill, it occurs to me that it should not go to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. COOK. The bill has no reference whatever in the world to a public building; its whole purpose is to change the directions concerning the landing of passengers, whether they shall be landed in New York or New Jersey. It is no public building at all.

The motion of Mr. COOK was agreed to.

MONUMENT TO GENERAL CUSTER.

Mr. COOK also, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 4841) for the erection of a monument in the city of Washington to the memory of General George A. Custer and the officers and men of the Seventh United States Cavalry who were killed in the battle of the Little Big Horn, and moved that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that the same be referred to the Committee on the Library.

The motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CLEVELAND, OHIO.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER, from the same committee, reported back, with an amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 536) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to repair and extend the public building owned by the United States at Cleveland, Ohio, and moved that the accompanying report be printed, and the bill and report referred to the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. If this bill calls directly or indirectly for an appropriation, then under the new rule it should go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. If the point is made I will not object to that order.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT PITTSBURGH, PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER, from the same committee, also reported back, with an amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 2850) to provide a building for the use of the United States circuit and district courts, custom-house, and post-office, at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI.

Mr. MURCH, from the same committee, reported back, with amendments, the bill (H. R. No. 2163) to provide for the construction of suitable rooms for the use of the United States circuit and district courts in the public building to be erected in the city of Kansas, in the State of Missouri; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT ROCHESTER, NEW YORK.

Mr. MURCH, from the same committee, also reported back, with an amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 2531) for a public building at Rochester, New York; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT TOLEDO, OHIO.

Mr. MCKENZIE, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 2502, a bill (H. R. No. 5068) for the construction of a building for the use of the United States, at Toledo, Ohio; which was read a first and second time, with the accompanying report ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT MONTGOMERY, ALABAMA.

Mr. MCKENZIE, from the same committee, also reported back, with amendments, the bill (H. R. No. 427) for the erection of a public building in the city of Montgomery, in the State of Alabama; which, with the accompanying report, was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. MCKENZIE. There was an agreement in the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds that these bills should be reported in the same order in which they stood upon the calendar of the committee. I therefore yield to the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. MURCH.]

Mr. CONGER. If these bills require any appropriation to be made, they should be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. All these bills have been referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT JACKSON, MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. MURCH, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 437, a bill (H. R. No. 5069) to provide for the erection of a public building at Jackson, Mississippi, for the use of the district and circuit courts of the United States, for a land office to preserve the records of entries of public lands, an office for the register and receiver of the land office, for the collector of internal revenue, for the post-office, and for other Government purposes; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. MCKENZIE. It was the desire of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds that these bills should go to the House Calendar, as they provide for no appropriation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks these bills come within the scope of the rule in regard to bills requiring appropriations, and unless the House reverses that judgment the Chair will continue to so rule, and will direct these bills to go upon the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. PAGE. Does this bill make an appropriation directly?

Mr. MURCH. It makes no appropriation.

Mr. GARFIELD. Allow me to suggest that it will greatly facilitate reaching these bills if they go now upon the Calendar where they should go. Suppose that they are put upon the House Calendar, and then two or three or four weeks hence when the bills on that calendar are reached the point of order is made, and after discussion and decision they are sent to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. They will then have to go to the foot of the Calendar.

Mr. FRYE. The rule was drawn with great care so as to cover all bills requiring directly or indirectly an appropriation of money. It is evident that these bills in relation to public buildings must require indirectly, if not directly, an expenditure of money.

Mr. MURCH. The committee will not contest that point.

The bill, with the accompanying report, was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT LYNCHBURGH, VIRGINIA.

Mr. MURCH, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, also reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 323, a bill (H. R. No. 5071) making an appropriation for a Government building to be used as a post-office, court-house, and bonded warehouse, at Lynchburgh, in the State of Virginia; which was read a first and second time, with the accompanying report ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CHARLESTON, WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. MCKENZIE, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 1244, a bill (H. R. No. 5070) to provide for a building suitable for a post-office, for the accommodation of the revenue officers and the United States courts and their officers, in the city of Charleston, West Virginia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. MCKENZIE. This bill should go upon the House Calendar before the one just reported by the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. MURCH.] It will thus conform to the order in which it appears upon the calendar of the committee. There was an agreement that these bills should be reported to the House in that order.

Mr. KENNA. I do not understand the gentleman from Maine to object to this course.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection. The bills will be arranged upon the Calendar as suggested.

PUBLIC BUILDING, BROOKLYN, NEW YORK.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 110, a bill (H. R. No. 5072) to provide for the erection of a public building at Brooklyn, New York, for use as a post-office and United States court, and for the accommodation of United States internal-revenue officials, and for other Government purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, PADUCAH, KENTUCKY.

Mr. MURCH, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 607, a bill (H. R. No. 5073) to provide for the construction of a public building at the city of Paducah, State of Kentucky; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, QUINCY, ILLINOIS.

Mr. MURCH, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 809, a bill (H. R. No. 5074) to provide for the erection of a public post-office building in the city of Quincy, in the State of Illinois, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, GREENSBOROUGH, NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. MCKENZIE, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 344, a bill (H. R. No. 5075) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection thereon of a public building in the city of Greensborough, North Carolina; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, MAYSVILLE, KENTUCKY.

Mr. MURCH, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 599, a bill (H. R. No. 5076) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building at the city of Maysville, in the State of Kentucky; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 1738, a bill (H. R. No. 5077) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection thereon of a building suitable for a post-office and other Government offices in the city of Minneapolis, in the State of Minnesota; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT DENVER, COLORADO.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER also, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 1281, a bill (H. R. No. 5078) to provide for the purchase of a suitable site and the erection of a public building in the city of Denver; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, HOUSTON, TEXAS.

Mr. MURCH, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 1050, a bill (H. R. No. 5079) authorizing the construction of a post-office in the city of Houston, Texas; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, CLARKSBURGH, WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 3707, a bill (H. R. No. 5080) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection thereon of a suitable building for the accommodation of the United States courts, the post-office, and other Government offices, in the city of Clarksburgh, in the State of West Virginia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CESSION OF LAND IN MEMPHIS, TENNESSEE.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 1614, a bill (H. R. No. 5081) to cede to the first taxing district of the State of Tennessee a certain lot of land situated in said district; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, PEORIA, ILLINOIS.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 4245, a bill (H. R. No. 5082) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Peoria, in the State of Illinois; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, PORTSMOUTH, OHIO.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER also, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 2089, a bill (H. R. No. 5083) appropriating money for the purchase of a site and the erection of a post-office and other Government offices in the city of Portsmouth, State of Ohio; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, OWENSBOROUGH, KENTUCKY.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER also, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 4697, a bill (H. R. No. 5084) for the purchase of suitable grounds in the city of Owensborough, in the State of Kentucky, and the erection thereon of a public building for post-office, United States collector's office, United States commissioner's office, and for the use of other public officers in said city; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, LOUISVILLE.

Mr. MCKENZIE also, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 3545, a bill (H. R. No. 5085) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Louisville, Kentucky; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADDITIONAL FORCE, HOUSE FOLDING-ROOM.

Mr. MORSE. I am instructed by the Committee on Accounts to report the following resolution, on which I desire to have present action.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the superintendent of the House folding-room be, and is hereby, authorized to employ an additional force of twelve men to fold speeches and other public documents accumulating in the folding-room and to perform such other duties as may be there assigned to them: Provided, The employment of said additional force shall terminate one month after the adjournment of the present session of Congress unless otherwise ordered by the Committee on Accounts; and they shall be paid out of the contingent fund at the rate of $720 per annum while employed.

Mr. MORSE. There is just complaint by members of the House that there is not sufficient help in that department.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I suggest that the words "or boys" be inserted after "men."

Mr. CONGER. I reserve the point of order on this.

The SPEAKER. The point of order will be reserved.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I ask to insert the words "or boys," so it will read "men or boys," leaving the matter to the discretion of the officer having the appointment.

Mr. MORSE. I have no objection to that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of this resolution.

Mr. HAWLEY. I must object.

Mr. ATKINS. Has the gentleman from Massachusetts received any recommendation from the superintendent of the folding-room asking for this force?

Mr. MORSE. We have, and the committee authorized me to make this report.

Mr. MILLS. I know they are a very long way behind.

Mr. HAWLEY. I objected, not knowing exactly what the question was before the House. If we are to have this morning hour according to the new rules, we must not allow ourselves to do business in that hour. I am not against the proposition, but we must save the morning hour for reports from committees for reference.

The SPEAKER. That is an objection, and the resolution will be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MORSE. No; I do not wish that reference, but will withdraw the report for the present, objection having been made.

ADDITIONAL CLERK, COMMITTEE ON WAR CLAIMS.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred a resolution on the 10th of December, 1879, that the Committee on War Claims be authorized to employ an assistant clerk during the Forty-sixth Congress, to be paid from the contingent fund of the House at the rate of $6 per diem, have instructed me to report the same back with the following substitute therefor to which they have agreed unanimously.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on War Claims be, and they are hereby, authorized to employ an assistant clerk during the Forty-sixth Congress, who shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House at the rate of $6 per diem while actually employed: Provided, however, That said assistant clerk shall not be paid during the recess of Congress.

Mr. CALKINS. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state in reference to the Committee on Accounts, that under the new rules that committee has the right to report at any time on all matters of expenditures from the contingent fund of the House. There is, therefore, no occasion for the Committee on Accounts to take up any portion of the morning hour with reports coming in under that privilege.

Mr. CALKINS. It was on that ground I made the objection.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to say, in connection with this ruling of the Chair, that if we are to get these new rules into working order the best way is to enforce them strictly so we shall discover any inaccuracy existing in them, and where, in practice, they may be improved.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the same opinion.

Mr. GARFIELD. But if we are to override them constantly by unanimous consent we will get ourselves into difficulty.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. I withdraw the report.

Mr. ATKINS. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. In accordance with the suggestion of the Speaker, I now submit my report from the Committee on Accounts and ask that the resolution which I now report unanimously from that committee shall be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on War Claims be, and they are hereby, authorized to employ an assistant clerk during the Forty-sixth Congress, who shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House at the rate of $6 per diem while actually employed: Provided, however, That said assistant clerk shall not be paid during the recesses of Congress.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to suggest an amendment. After the word "clerk," where it first appears in the resolution, to insert "for such time as the committee may think necessary," because during the second session of Congress it is not probable that the committee will want the services of a clerk.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. I did not understand the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. REAGAN. I suggest that the resolution be amended by fixing the limit for the employment of a clerk to such time as the committee may deem necessary. That would contemplate his retention during the session and while his services would be necessary; but during the latter part of the Congress it is not at all probable that the services of a clerk will be needed, as no business requiring his services can by any possibility be reached.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. I will state to the gentleman from Texas that we considered this whole question very carefully in the committee. We had the chairman of the Committee on War Claims before us, and we tried in every way to so guard the resolution as to make the employment of this clerk as economical to the House as possible. And it was upon the representations of the chairman of the Committee on War Claims that this resolution was substituted for the original. The chairman of that committee seemed to be equally desirous with the Committee on Accounts not to make the employment of this officer any more expensive to the House than necessary.

Mr. REAGAN. I have no objection to the committee having a clerk for such time as may be actually necessary, but I do object to providing a place and paying for the services of a man when he is not needed.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. The gentleman will perceive that the resolution provides he is only to be paid while actually employed. It is not to be presumed the committee will employ a man when there is nothing to do.

Mr. REAGAN. I know; and I know also that he is not to be paid during the recess. But what I wish is to have inserted after the word "clerk" the words "during such time as his services may be needed by the committee." I propose to offer an amendment of that character, for we all know that during the latter part of a Congress there can be no possible necessity for an additional clerk to that committee.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. I have no objection to the amendment being voted on.

Mr. FORT. I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill a question.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. Certainly.

Mr. FORT. How many clerks has that committee now?

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. One.

Mr. FORT. How many had they formerly or in other Congresses?

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. Two; always two heretofore, as I understand it.

Mr. FORT. The clerks of these different committees seem to be increasing so rapidly that I think it is time the House should inquire into the necessity for this additional service. We started out under the rule of economy, and I hope we will not so soon forget that we are trying to reduce expenditures. I will not undertake to say that the gentleman is mistaken; but I know that for a part of the time, at all events, in the past that committee did not have two clerks, but only one; and if it is true that war claims are now increasing so rapidly as to now require two clerks, it seems to me it would be well to make some inquiries into that matter.

Mr. BAYNE. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. FORT. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAYNE. As a member of the Committee on War Claims I would like to say to the gentleman that the work now before that committee is greater than it has ever been perhaps heretofore.

Mr. FORT. That is just what I supposed.

Mr. BAYNE. There is a great increase in claims of that nature. The office of the commissioners of war claims having ceased, all the claims that were heretofore adjudicated by that commission are now to be referred to the Committee on War Claims, and the consequence is that the number of claims requiring consideration is increasing and is vastly in excess of any number before that committee at any previous time. Moreover, I want to say that the number of these claims has increased to such an extent in consequence of the war claims commission having ceased to exist, it will be necessary to provide additional space or room to receive these claims, to enable them to be placed in proper order, and classified and arranged systematically by the committee.

Mr. FORT. I suppose the gentleman refers to the southern claims commission.

Mr. BAYNE. Yes, sir.

Mr. FORT. The business of that commission is now, as I understand him, before the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. BAYNE. Yes, and that is the reason for this vast increase in the business of that committee.

Mr. WHITE. May I ask whether original claims are increasing before that committee?

Mr. BAYNE. There are a great many there, and there is a great deal of labor upon the members of the committee as well as the clerk. I know that a flood of claims is coming in, in consequence of the expiration of the southern claims commission.

Mr. WHITE. As a subject of interest I wanted to know if this class of claims was increasing or decreasing. It might be important as a matter of record.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania what labor the clerks of that committee have to perform.

Mr. BAYNE. They sort these claims. The committee has now under consideration a resolution which will enable the clerks to separate these claims into particular classes, in order that the members of the committee may not be required to take up and consider a vast number of claims which would be rejected on general principles and under the rules established by the committee.

Mr. WHITE. How many claims are pending there?

Mr. BAYNE. I do not know. I know, however, that there are a great many, and that this additional service is required for the committee. I am the last man to seek the appointment of any person to any position on any committee unless it be absolutely required.

Mr. WILSON. While that private conversation is going on which nobody can hear cannot I offer a resolution?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I want to say in reply to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FORT] that the number of clerks of the Committee on War Claims when that committee was originally constituted in the Forty-third Congress was two; and after a careful investigation by the Committee on Accounts we found the work had so increased that it was necessary to give the same number as when the committee was originally constituted, namely, two. That is all the Committee on Accounts have done, and they have done it after a very full and careful investigation.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to ask one question: why, after the entire vote of Congress, and especially of the democracy, fixed the salary of clerks as sufficient at $4.80 a day, when money was less valuable, the committee now recommend $6? The record of this House shows and the vote of the members of former Congresses shows that, in the opinion of the economic democracy, was all that a clerk ought to have. They voted that amount for clerks under republican rule, and under democratic rule the pay of all these clerks is increased.

Mr. WILSON. Will the gentleman from Michigan never get done howling about the democracy? [Laughter.]

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. I demand the previous question.

Mr. REAGAN. Before the question is put on the demand for the previous question the gentleman from Delaware allows me to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposed the gentleman's amendment as offered originally was pending, to be voted upon by the House.

Mr. REAGAN. No, sir; I have modified it. I ask the Clerk to read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "Forty-sixth Congress" and insert "present session of Congress," making it read:

"That the Committee on War Claims be, and they are hereby, authorized to employ an assistant clerk during the present session of Congress," &c.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. I now demand the previous question on the resolution and amendment.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof Mr. REAGAN's amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was adopted.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOSTETLER. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE] to make a privileged report.

EMPLOYÉS IN FOLDING-ROOM.

Mr. MORSE. I am instructed by the Committee on Accounts to report the resolution which I send to the desk as a substitute for the resolution referred to that committee on motion of the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. McLANE.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the superintendent of the House folding-room be, and he is hereby, authorized to employ an additional force of twelve men or boys to fold speeches and other public documents accumulating in the folding-room, and to perform such other duties as may there be assigned to them: Provided, That the employment of the said additional force shall terminate one month after the adjournment of the present session of Congress, unless otherwise ordered by the Committee on Accounts; and they shall be paid out of the contingent fund at the rate of $720 per annum while employed.

Mr. CONGER. Is that subject to objection?

The SPEAKER. What character of objection?

Mr. CONGER. That it is not in order to report that resolution at this time.

The SPEAKER. The committee have a right to report at any time.

Mr. BREWER. I make the point of order that the resolution appropriates money and should have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. CONGER. I think it will be time enough to provide for the campaign a month or two later.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. BREWER,] and the resolution will be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. MORSE. I withdraw the report for the present.

QUARTERMASTER AND COMMISSARY CLAIMS.

Mr. WILSON. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk for reference to the Committee on Rules, and I ask that it be printed.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution, as follows:

Resolution for the appointment of a special committee to ascertain and report upon the propriety of referring quartermaster and commissary claims against the Government to some other tribunal, and for other purposes.

Mr. CONGER. Why should that resolution be referred to the Committee on Rules?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know, for the Chair has no knowledge of its contents.

Mr. CONGER. I object to the reference of the resolution and to its introduction.

Mr. WILSON. Let me say to the gentleman from Michigan that President Grant, President Hayes, the present Secretary of War, the last Secretary of War, the present Secretary of the Treasury, the last Secretary of the Treasury, the Quartermaster-General and Commissary-General, have all for several years past implored Congress to take these claims from the Departments. And this resolution meets their concurrence.

Mr. CONGER. I do not know but the gentleman from West Virginia may have been appointed special advocate for the distinguished gentlemen he has named, to represent their special interests; but if so, I had not heard of it.

Mr. WILSON. I am not their special advocate.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made the resolution is not before the House.

Mr. WILSON, (addressing Mr. CONGER.) I will pay you for that. Mr. CONGER. The gentleman from West Virginia says in his place, "I will pay you for that."

Mr. WILSON. I did, sir.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to know in what coin, or in what manner?

Mr. WILSON. I will tell the gentleman very frankly.

Mr. CONGER. That is a remark which the gentleman has no business to make.

Mr. WILSON. I have the right to make it, and I make it with full knowledge of exactly what I say.

Mr. CONGER. It is a threat to a member for exercising a right.

Mr. WILSON. I will explain, if I be allowed, what I mean by it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia is not entitled to the floor, objection having been made.

POLITICAL CONTRIBUTIONS.

Mr. HOSTETLER. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being demanded, the House resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2266) to prohibit Federal officers, claimants, and contractors from making contributions for political purposes. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOSTETLER] is on the floor to demand the previous question.

Mr. WILSON. Will the gentleman from Indiana allow me to offer two amendments to the first section of the bill?

Mr. HOSTETLER. I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. UPSON] to offer an amendment.

Mr. CONGER. Has the previous question been ordered?

The SPEAKER. It has not. It has been demanded. The Chair is advised there is an amendment pending to the original text offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. CLAFLIN.] There is then another amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BUTTERWORTH.]

Mr. UPSON. I desire to offer my amendment as a substitute for the substitute offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The SPEAKER. That is not in order. It might come in as an amendment to the substitute.

Mr. CONGER. After the previous question has been demanded?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana vacates the demand for the previous question to let the amendment come in.

Mr. CONGER. Then I suppose it is now in order to move to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOSTETLER] has the floor for the purpose of calling the previous question.

Mr. CONGER. But the first business after the morning hour to-day is the motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. This bill comes over from yesterday as unfinished business, not only under the rules but the Chair thinks by consent.

Mr. CONGER. I had not heard of the assent.

The SPEAKER. It comes over under the rule.

Mr. CONGER. I would ask by what rule business on the House Calendar on any day takes precedence of a motion to go into Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOSTETLER] to call the previous question on this bill, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] did not even seek to obtain the floor.

Mr. CARLISLE. And besides, this bill is a special order of the House.

The SPEAKER. In addition, it is a special order and is correctly in its place.

Mr. HOSTETLER. I now call the previous question on the bill and amendments.

Mr. GARFIELD. There are some gentlemen on both sides of the House who desire an opportunity to speak upon this bill, and I hope the previous question will be voted down.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to offer a single suggestion. Members here have never had an opportunity to read in print the amendments which have been offered. I hope this matter will be allowed to go over to some other day, and then we can take up the deficiency appropriation bill and pass it.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order pending the call for the previous question.

Mr. WILSON. Then I ask leave to print some remarks.

Mr. KEIFER. As there are many gentlemen here who desire to speak upon this bill, I think I must object to granting leave to any member to print his remarks until an opportunity is given to members to speak.

Mr. CARLISLE. Before the House is called upon to vote upon the previous question upon the bill and amendments, the amendment which has not yet been read should be read for the information of the House.

The SPEAKER. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CLAFLIN] and the substitute offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] were read yesterday. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. UPSON] to the substitute of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] will now be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill to prohibit any person whomsoever from demanding, asking, soliciting, or in any manner compelling officers, clerks, or employes of the Government from contributing or paying money for political purposes, and to punish the same and otherwise to promote "civil-service reform."

Be it enacted &c., That it shall not be lawful for any person whomsoever, directly or indirectly, to demand, ask, or solicit, or in any manner compel, require, or induce any officer, clerk, or employe of the Government of the United States to contribute or pay to any committee, or person, or into any fund, any money, property or other valuable thing for any political purpose whatsoever, or to pay any assessment, or percentage upon the income, or emoluments of his salary, or compensation for any political purpose, or to give, loan, advance or pay any money, property, or valuable thing with the intent, assent, permission, knowledge, or understanding that the same may be applied to such purpose. Any person or persons who shall violate any of the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and punished by imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months or by a fine not exceeding $5,000. And any officer, clerk, or employe of the Government of the United States who shall violate any of the provisions of this section, in addition to the punishment aforesaid, after trial and conviction for such violation, shall be immediately dismissed from the office, clerkship, or employment which he may hold.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of each of the heads of Departments of the Federal Government to issue and keep posted a standing order in their respective Departments prohibiting the officers, clerks, employes in said Departments, or other officers, from violating any of the provisions of the first section of this act.

SEC. 3. That it shall not be lawful for any head of Department or other superior officer of the Federal Government to collect, or permit or allow any other person to collect, or receive, from any officer, clerk, or employe in his Department or under his supervision, any assessment, percentage, contribution, gift, loan, or advance of any money, property, or other valuable thing, with the knowledge, intent, understanding, or permission that the same shall or may be used for any political purpose; and any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this section, or any head of Department who shall fail or refuse to promulgate the order as mentioned in the second section of this act, or who shall fail or refuse to dismiss from office or employment any officer, clerk, or employe, in his Department, who shall violate any of the provisions of the first section of this act, on the same coming to his knowledge, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by imprisonment for a period of not less than one month nor more than six months, and, in the discretion of the court, by a fine of not more than $5,000.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs upon seconding the demand for the previous question.

Mr. CARLISLE. I make the point of order that under the new rule no second is required to the demand for the previous question, but the question is upon ordering the main question to be now put.

The SPEAKER. The Chair construes the word "ordered" in the new rule to mean the same as the word "seconded" in the old rule.

Mr. GARFIELD. There are two things in the new rule: first, a motion which the individual makes, and then the order which is made by the House; that applies to the previous question. The main question is another thing. The word "ordered" in regard to the previous question is used in the new rule instead of the word "seconded," which was in the old rule. The main question may be voted on by yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the word "ordered" was employed in the new rule in lieu of the word "seconded" in the old rule.

Mr. CARLISLE. I am sure, when the subject of the new rules was under consideration in Committee of the Whole, many members understood that the new rule in regard to ordering the previous question dispensed with the vote on seconding the demand for the previous question; that any member in his place on the floor could move the previous question as he had the right to make any other motion, and that it was then for the House to determine by a vote whether the main question should be ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the word "seconded" in the old rule was replaced by the word "ordered" in the new rule.

merely because it was thought to be a better word, and not for the purpose of avoiding the two votes required on the "main question."

Mr. CARLISLE. Very well.

The question was taken upon seconding the demand for the previous question; and upon a division there were—ayes 71, noes 91.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. HOSTETLER called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HOSTETLER and Mr. GARFIELD were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 94, noes 4.

Mr. CONGER. I make the point of order that no quorum has voted.

Mr. GOODE. I desire to make a suggestion to my friends on the other side and to my friend from Indiana, [Mr. HOSTETLER.] It is that we allow two hours' further debate on this question.

Mr. KEIFER. Two hours on each side?

Mr. HAWLEY. That is not enough.

Mr. CONGER. I will make this proposition: let the debate continue until those gentlemen who have prepared remarks upon this subject and desire to speak have had an opportunity to do so. There is no desire to delay the consideration of business before the House. I say here that if there is any desire to go forward with the appropriation bills, every man on this side of the House will consent to postpone this matter until the bills which are ready to be reported have been acted upon.

Mr. BUCKNER. Is it in order now to move to refer this bill?

The SPEAKER. The point of order has been raised that no quorum voted. The Chair has allowed discussion among members in order to ascertain if an understanding could be reached in regard to time for debate. It is apparent to the Chair that the only difficulty is in relation to the length of time to be allowed for debate.

Mr. CONGER. The opposition on this side of the House is entirely in connection with the time for debate.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Gentlemen on the other side of the House have occupied more time in this debate than gentlemen on the democratic side. This filibustering movement can arise from no unfairness in allotting the time for debate.

Mr. REED. That is simply because we have more material.

Mr. HOSTETLER. I am perfectly willing to give more time for debate, but I want some understanding as to when we shall have a vote on this question. I thought that matter had already been arranged.

Mr. REED. Let the voting be arranged when we have got through debate.

Mr. BURROWS. Certainly we ought not to be forced to a vote on this bill until the remarkable speech delivered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSE] is published.

Mr. SPARKS. It is published this morning.

Mr. BURROWS. It was not published until this morning.

Mr. SPARKS. Mr. Speaker, what is the next thing in order?

The SPEAKER. There was not a quorum voting, and the point of order was made upon that.

Mr. GARFIELD. I think gentlemen on the other side had better allow the debate to go on.

Mr. SPARKS. How long?

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not know; it is difficult to say. I do not ask any time for myself; but I know there are several gentlemen on this side who feel that they ought to be heard. I have no doubt that before the day is over we can come to some understanding. But let the debate go on now.

Mr. REAGAN. We desire to come to an understanding if it can be reached now.

Mr. WILSON. We ought not to be compelled to vote on this question before seeing the amendments in print.

Mr. CLYMER. I object to debate, and call for the regular order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I move a call of the House.

Mr. WILSON. We do not desire to be called on to vote upon this proposition unless we can see the amendments in print.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is unable to ascertain whether the gentleman from Indiana and the gentleman from Ohio have come to any understanding as to the length of the debate.

Mr. CLYMER. I demand the regular order.

Mr. WILSON. I suggest to the gentleman from Indiana that he let the bill go over until some other day and let the amendments be printed. Then we can go on now with the deficiency appropriation bill. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] that there be a call of the House.

Mr. SPARKS. Let us have it.

Mr. CALKINS. Before that question is put I would like to make a suggestion. This bill is not of any immediate public importance, so it need not be pressed to a vote to-day. My colleague [Mr. HOSTETLER] will, I think, agree with me that a week from to-day would be just as good a time for bringing it to a vote as to-day. Therefore I suggest that the bill be allowed to stand just as it is and take its chances with the other business, if the House should want to take up anything else.

The SPEAKER. The bill is being considered as a special order.

Mr. CALKINS. Let the existing special order be vacated and the bill be made a special order for a week from to-day, to be then brought to a final vote.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not know that I can help toward the settlement of this matter. This bill was in the morning hour many weeks during the extra session. A great deal was said by its friends about gentlemen on this side being unwilling to discuss it. We were just waiting for the proper occasion. The bill has now been before the House for a short time. The debate was led off on the other side by a gentleman who made a speech of two hours—a very able speech, I suppose; I did not listen to it, because I thought I was going to read it. Now, we are not only willing, but exceedingly anxious to discuss this bill. I want the privilege of stating why I would trample upon such a measure. I have been waiting for such an opportunity.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. You have had time.

Mr. HAWLEY. We have not had time enough. We have been told that a corrupt political motive was our only reason for opposing the bill.

Mr. REAGAN. How much time do gentlemen on the other side desire?

Mr. HAWLEY. I was just about to say that I know five or six or eight hours could be occupied on this side.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I insist on my motion for a call of the House.

The question having been put,

The SPEAKER said: A sufficient number having voted in the affirmative, a call is ordered.

The roll was called, when the following members failed to answer:

Aldrich, N. W.	Coffroth,	Jorgensen,	Russell, Daniel L.
Armfield,	Converse,	Killinger,	Singleton, J. W.
Atherton,	Davis, Joseph J.	Lapham,	Smith, William E.
Bachman,	Dick,	Le Fevre,	Steele,
Barlow,	Dunn,	Loring,	Stephens,
Beale,	Elam,	McCoid,	Taylor,
Boyd,	Ellis,	McCook,	Thompson, Wm. G.
Bragg,	Farr,	McKinley,	Townsend, Amos
Briggs,	Frost,	Money,	Wilber,
Cabell,	Garfield,	O'Brien,	Wise.
Caswell,	Gillette,	O'Neill,
Chalmers,	Hayes,	Prescott,
Clark, John B.	Henkle,	Ross,

The SPEAKER. On this call two hundred and forty-three members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the demand for the previous question.

Mr. CONGER. On which a vote by tellers was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The count by tellers will be resumed. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] will please act in the place of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] who is not now in his seat.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 92, noes 2.

Mr. CONGER. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I move a call of the House.

The question having been put,

The SPEAKER said: Only two gentlemen rising—not fifteen, as provided for by the rules, a call of the House is not ordered. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOSTETLER.]

Mr. CONGER. I submit the gentleman from Indiana has lost control of the bill, by all the rules of the House, to those who are opposed to it.

The SPEAKER. No proceeding can go on when a quorum does not appear, this fact being questioned. The Chair supposed the gentleman from Indiana made some suggestion.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask by unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WILLITS] be allowed to go on and make his speech.

Mr. SPARKS. I understand the gentleman from Indiana is willing to hear a proposition.

Mr. HOSTETLER. Yes, I am willing to hear any proposition which gentlemen may submit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio makes the proposition that the gentleman from Michigan be allowed an hour.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to say it has been announced on this side of the House there are several gentlemen who are prepared to make remarks on this subject and who desire to do so. The object, and the only object in now refusing to second the demand for the previous question, is that opportunity may be given to those gentlemen to deliver their speeches. If the gentleman from Indiana will withdraw the demand and let the debate go on, then we can hear all those who wish to speak.

Mr. HOSTETLER. How long does the gentleman want?

Mr. CONGER. I cannot tell how many there are who wish to speak; but we can go on at least for a time.

Mr. GARFIELD. This side of the House will not be unreasonable, I am sure. It is quite impossible to tell now how many there are. I wish to say the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. WILLITS], who is now on the floor, to my knowledge has been preparing on this subject for several weeks. I think it would be injustice to refuse him. He has not got up a speech on the spur of the moment because we have got into this flurry, but he has been preparing it for several weeks. And I know of one other gentleman who perhaps will not take more than half an hour. Beyond that I do not know. I am not speaking for myself, and I say the gentlemen who knew the bill was pending and expected it to be taken up, and wished in good faith to discuss it, should not be denied the opportunity to be heard. I do not think it is right to cut them off from a reasonable chance to debate. I do not think the time heretofore given to this bill is a reasonable time for debate, and therefore I think we had better let the gentlemen who are prepared to speak go on; for the quicker they get their speeches made the sooner there will be no excuse for delay on this side.

Mr. KENNA. In connection with what the gentleman from Ohio has just said, I desire to say one word. I agree that this bill is of such a character as to make it right and proper that there should be a reasonable amount of discussion of it on both sides. I desire to say further that as an individual member of the House and of the committee which reported this measure, I desire that there should be an opportunity to submit and obtain the action of this House upon amendments to the bill, with a view to its perfection, in such shape as will possibly secure its passage. I desire to reach the result intended to be achieved without reaching any other result, and some amendment may be necessary in order to do that.

I am not prepared to say that I am ready to vote for this bill in the form in which it stands. What I rose to say, however, was this, particularly, that while I would be willing to see such discussion as is necessary and proper of the merits of this bill, I would like, at the same time, to see that discussion so proceeded with as not to interfere with the progress of the appropriation bills.

Mr. GARFIELD. So do I. I say we ought to drop this bill any moment the Committee on Appropriations is ready to go on. If they have a bill to go on with now, I will, and I think all on this side will, vote to take it up.

Mr. REED. Let us take up any appropriation bill which is ready at this time.

Mr. KENNA. I do not mean what I understand the gentleman from Ohio to indicate. I am not willing to drop this bill, for I regard the subject one of great importance, but I would vote to take up the regular appropriation bills whenever they are ready.

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not mean to drop it altogether, but merely to lay it aside to dispose of any appropriation bill which is ready.

Mr. KENNA. But I am willing to let the appropriation bill be taken up and considered and not delayed by this bill.

Mr. CONGER. And that is just what we wish.

Mr. REED. That is what we on this side voted for yesterday, and are ready to do it again.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is what we are ready to do now, and it will save time. I hope the gentleman from Michigan will be recognized. The year of good feeling has arrived.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana has the floor.

Mr. HOSTETLER. The day before yesterday, when this bill was up, the understanding was at that time we should come to a vote; that at a certain hour the previous question should be called. I understood most emphatically from the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] that he acceded to my proposition to call the previous question at four o'clock yesterday evening. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSE] took the floor under that understanding, so far as I was concerned. He made his speech for one hour, when his time would have expired under the rules; but, by unanimous consent, that time was extended to two hours.

Mr. CONGER. Then extended again.

Mr. HOSTETLER. For a few minutes.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Ten minutes.

Mr. HOSTETLER. That closed that day. Yesterday the question came up for consideration again.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. RICHARDSON] took the floor for one hour and gave ten minutes to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. YOUNG,] and then his time was extended until he got through with his remarks.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Extended twenty-five minutes.

Mr. HOSTETLER. Then the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] took the floor and spoke for one hour.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Two hours and twenty-five minutes.

Mr. HOSTETLER. Making in all two hours and twenty-five minutes on that side of the House. Now, then, at the close of his speech I called the previous question, as I understood, and as this side of the House understood that to be the agreement, and yet I now understand that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] did not give his consent and it was so stated by him. Therefore he now refuses to recognize the right of this side of the House to call the previous question.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman will remember that I read yesterday from the RECORD of the day before that that was not the understanding of the House. It is in both RECORDS, yesterday and the day before, that that was not the understanding of this side of the House, and that certainly was warrant enough to the gentleman that no such agreement was made on this side of the House.

Mr. HOSTETLER. The gentleman will remember another thing when the understanding I speak of was made. The gentleman from Michigan rose and made a parliamentary inquiry as to the effect of the rules, whether I would be entitled to the hour after calling the previous question. But after reading the RECORD I find he objected at the close. Now, the question resolves itself simply into this: whether or not the arrangement, as understood by this side of the House, and, as I believe, by a large portion of the other side of the House—whether the gentleman from Michigan shall rule and control that side of the House or not.

Mr. GARFIELD. Will the gentleman allow me to say—and certainly he is speaking without sufficient warrant if he represents me as having made any agreement for this side of the House notwithstanding what the gentleman from Michigan has said—the gentleman from Indiana gave notice of his intention to call the previous question at three o'clock, and I suggested to him to postpone the notice, not to say he would call it at three o'clock, but to give the notice for four o'clock; and after a little talk about it he apparently acceded to my suggestion and gave notice he would call the previous question at four o'clock.

Mr. HOSTETLER. At your suggestion.

Mr. GARFIELD. Acting on my suggestion, it is true, to postpone the notice to that time; but he did not ask nor was any consent asked that an agreement should be made that the previous question would be considered as pending at four o'clock. Nobody said that. And what is more, in order to forefend against such understanding, the gentleman from Michigan rose in his place and distinctly disclaimed any such understanding should be had, and furthermore the language here in the RECORD—

Mr. HOSTETLER. I ask for the reading of that.

Mr. GARFIELD. I have it in my hand. I will send it to the desk and let the Clerk read what I have marked.

Mr. HOSTETLER. No; the whole colloquy.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HOSTETLER. Very well; I will give notice that at four o'clock to-morrow I will call the previous question on this bill.

Mr. HOSTETLER. I want the Clerk to commence back of that, where the conversation took place in regard to the previous question.

Mr. HOOKER. Read what the gentleman from Ohio said.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Read all of it.

The Clerk then read as follows:

Mr. HOSTETLER. This bill has been so long before the House, has been so frequently reprinted, and the desire on the part of members is so strong to get it out of the way so that other business may be considered, I will say that in order to give gentlemen on the other side an opportunity to discuss this bill I will not call the previous question until four o'clock this afternoon, if that shall be satisfactory to gentlemen on the other side.

Mr. GARFIELD. I have myself no personal wish about this matter, and I do not know that I shall say a word upon the bill. But I know of two members who are prepared to speak upon it; one is not now in his seat, but is in the city and may not be able to get here in time to speak upon the bill to-day. If the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOSTETLER] knows of any gentleman on his side of the House who is ready to speak now I hope he will let the debate go on without indicating at this time any limit.

Mr. HOSTETLER. I do not propose myself to make any remarks upon this bill at this time, but will reserve my right to speak at the close of the debate.

Mr. GARFIELD. Then I think the gentleman had better fix some time to-morrow when the vote will be taken.

The SPEAKER. At what hour to-morrow?

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not care. All that I desire is that members may have an opportunity to speak. I would say three o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. HOSTETLER. Very well.

Several MEMBERS. Make it four o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks as at present advised if the previous question shall be called at three o'clock and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOSTETLER] shall claim his right to speak an hour after the previous question shall have been ordered, the vote then will not be taken at four o'clock. This was the old practice.

Mr. CONGER. Under the new rules has the member reporting a question the right to speak an hour after the previous question has been called?

The SPEAKER. He has the right to an hour to open and an hour to close the debate.

Mr. CONGER. Is there anything in the rule which authorizes him to occupy an hour after the previous question has been ordered?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman to clause 3 of Rule XIV.

Mr. BURROWS. That is where the debate has extended beyond one day.

The SPEAKER. The debate on this bill has extended beyond one day.

Mr. GARFIELD. In case we should now fix an hour of to-morrow for the vote on this bill, will not the morning hour of to-morrow have to come out of that time?

The SPEAKER. By the rule, the unfinished business comes up after the morning hour for reports of committees.

Mr. GARFIELD. The morning hour would have to be used.

The SPEAKER. It would, for reports of committees.

Mr. GARFIELD. Then I would call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOSTETLER] to the fact that if he names three o'clock to-morrow as the hour, there would be the Journal to be read and the whole morning hour for reports of committees, and that would bring it to half past one o'clock before this bill would come up.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman had better state at what hour to-morrow he will call the previous question.

Mr. HOOKER. The morning hour to-morrow might be dispensed with.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the debate on this bill is to be closed at three o'clock to-morrow, that would leave but an hour and a half for discussion. The gentleman might say that he will call the previous question at the end of two hours after the morning hour to-morrow.

Mr. HOSTETLER. I am willing to do that.

Mr. GARFIELD. I would prefer myself that he should name four o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. HOSTETLER. Very well; I will give notice that at four o'clock to-morrow I will call the previous question on this bill.

Mr. CONGER. It is intimated by the Chair that after the previous question shall have been ordered there would be an hour for debate.

The SPEAKER. Does not the rule allow it?

Mr. CONGER. The rule says that the member reporting a proposition may have an hour to close the debate. But another rule provides that there shall be no debate after the previous question shall have been ordered. It would seem, then, that the member must, under the new rule, take his hour before the previous question is ordered.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Michigan direct the attention of the Chair to that portion of the new rules to which he alludes as to debate in connection with the demand for the previous question?

Mr. CONGER. Clause 3 of Rule XIV says:

"The member reporting the measure under consideration from a committee may open and close, where general debate has been had thereon; and if it shall extend beyond one day, he shall be entitled to one hour to close, notwithstanding he may have used an hour in opening."

Now the rule in regard to the previous question. I cannot turn to it at this moment—

The SPEAKER. Rule XVII relates to the previous question.

Mr. CONGER. Yes, sir. The language of that rule is:

"There shall be a motion for the previous question, which, being ordered by a majority of the members present, if a quorum, shall have the effect to cut off all debate and bring the House to a direct vote upon the immediate question or questions on which it has been asked and ordered."

So that, although the member introducing the proposition has the right to his hour to close the debate, he must use it before he calls the previous question; he must call the previous question at the end of his hour.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that Rule XVII, to which the gentleman refers, must be construed to be in harmony with the previous rule as read, which declares that there may be debate after the previous question is ordered, as the Chair at first supposed.

Mr. MCMAHON. That is in accordance with a familiar principle of law.

Mr. CONGER. The member who introduced the proposition is entitled to an hour to close the debate, and being in possession of the floor he may then call the previous question. I hope there will be no ruling that shall give so broad a construction as the Speaker intimates to a positive rule, which does not in terms prevent the full enforcement of the other rule.

Mr. MCMAHON. Is not the other rule equally positive?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thought so; and the Chair's disposition was to construe them together.

Mr. GARFIELD. The Chair will allow me to say that we have not yet reached a point where the question is really up to be ruled on. I hope the Speaker will hold it open until the point is really made.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hold it open.

Mr. GARFIELD. And we reserve our right to make the point at the proper time.

Mr. BARBER. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. Will the House necessarily return to this calendar to-morrow after the expiration of the morning hour, without a vote to that effect?

The SPEAKER. The bill will go over as unfinished business—not only as unfinished business but by agreement.

Mr. CONGER. I do not desire to be misunderstood—

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not misunderstand the gentleman.

Mr. CONGER. There has been no agreement except the declaration of the gentleman in charge of the bill that he will call the previous question. There has been no agreement on this side of the House so far as I know.

The SPEAKER. The rule of course will control everything in connection with the legislative matters before the House.

Mr. CONGER. I do not wish anything to go by agreement—only by the rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana stated (and the Chair did suppose that it met the views of the minority of the House) that he would call the previous question at four o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. CONGER. We may desire to resist calling the previous question. We do not want to be committed by any agreement.

The SPEAKER. That is a matter within the discretion of the gentleman.

Mr. HOOKER. I rise to a point of order. The House, on motion of the gentleman from Indiana, has proceeded to the consideration of the House Calendar. Now that we have under consideration the first bill on the Calendar, I object to the time being taken up by discussing how long it shall be debated.

The SPEAKER. The title of the bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

"A bill (H. R. No. 2286) to prohibit Federal officers, claimants, and contractors from making contributions for political purposes."

Mr. HOSTETLER. I now, for the purpose of showing that this was the understanding not only on this side but upon the other side of the House, ask the Clerk to read the report of the proceedings at the time when Mr. HOUSE, of Tennessee, asked an extension of his time.

Mr. WHITE. I rise to make an inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOSTETLER] is on the floor.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to make an inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not in order.

Mr. WHITE. I want to know if the speech of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSE] is to be read again?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not in order. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOSTETLER] has sent to the desk to be read as part of his remarks what the Clerk will now read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HOSTETLER. I yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. HOUSE.]

Mr. HOUSE spoke on the pending bill. [He withholds his remarks for revision.]

During the delivery of Mr. HOUSE's speech, when his hour had expired,

Mr. MCKENZIE said: I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Tennessee be permitted to proceed with his remarks.

Mr. BURROWS. I would like to inquire of the gentleman whether, if his time be extended, he proposes to speak on this bill? [Laughter.]

Mr. HOUSE. Yes, sir; I will come up to it in the most natural order in the world. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. TOWNSEND, of Illinois.) The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. KEIFER. Before the gentleman proceeds I only want to say that we feel bound to object if other gentlemen who expect to speak within the time which it was understood would be allowed for discussion are likely to be cut off by this extension of time; but we do not desire, so far as I know, that anybody— [Cries of "We will let you speak!" "We will be fair!"]

Mr. KEIFER. I do not object, then, with that understanding.

Mr. BURROWS. I suppose the gentleman who has this bill in charge will not insist on calling the previous question to-morrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the proposed extension of time? Mr. MCMAHON. I shall object to the time being extended beyond four o'clock to-morrow evening.

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman had better object to the continuation of this speech. Mr. MCMAHON. I only give this notice. Other gentlemen must take the responsibility.

Mr. KEIFER. We are driven to object, in view of the notice given by my colleague, [Mr. MCMAHON.]

Mr. HUMPHREY. Yes, sir; we have to object under the circumstances.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot accept a qualified objection. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. HUMPHREY. No; I will let the gentleman go on, and trust to the honor of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. MCMAHON. I desire to give notice to the House I have charge of an appropriation bill which I want to bring in day after to-morrow; and I shall, therefore, object to anything which runs the debate or voting over to-morrow evening. I give notice in order that gentlemen may govern themselves accordingly.

Mr. HOUSE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a word. I should like very much to go on and complete my remarks—

Mr. KEIFER. I have no objection.

Mr. HOUSE. But I do not wish to do so at the expense of the time of other gentlemen on either side of the House who wish to discuss this bill. I have not often consumed the time of this House, as gentlemen who know me here can attest, and I do not wish to do it now.

Mr. KEIFER. Go on and finish your remarks.

Mr. HOUSE. If there is objection to extending the time fixed to-morrow for taking the vote, I will not go on.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I wish to suggest to my colleague this debate may be kept on after four o'clock to-morrow; so the subject may be disposed of to-morrow.

Mr. HOSTETLER. There now.

Mr. CONGER. That seems to settle it very clearly.

Mr. HOSTETLER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSE] made the statement very positively that if his going on interfered with the arrangement which had been come to he would not do so. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] understood it that way when he made his proposition; and under that arrangement we extended to that side of the House the entire time yesterday.

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman has put his own interpretation on the language I used. I did say that the time which it was understood we were to be allowed for debate was likely to be cut off by the extension of time to the gentleman from Tennessee. When I said that I referred to the understanding that we had on the minority side that the gentlemen on the other side did not intend to let us have any more time than that; and I thought if they had the power to cut us off we ought at least to protest against another hour being taken for the other side out of that very short time. But I did not say anything at that time which indicated, I think, that we had agreed the vote should be taken at a particular hour.

Mr. HOSTETLER. I refer to your remarks as they have been read from the Clerk's desk.

Mr. KEIFER. My remarks referred to the time which gentlemen on the other side proposed to allow for the discussion.

Mr. HOSTETLER. I desire now to say that I will not consent to any proposition for an extension of the time without a distinct understanding being come to.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. It is evident this debate may be continued for a fortnight, unless there be some agreement. I appeal to gentlemen on the other side to name some time when they will let us vote.

Mr. KEIFER. There are one or two gentlemen on this side of the House who desire to speak. They might probably have got their remarks in by this time, if gentlemen on the other side had been willing to listen to them.

Mr. CONGER. We have already stated that what we want on this side is a reasonable time for discussion.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Name your time.

Mr. CONGER. I do not know how many gentlemen want to speak; but we would have been well along now if gentlemen on the other side had not insisted on calling the previous question. I ask gentlemen on the other side to agree to our request, unless they prefer to go on taking up time in this manner, instead of taking up the appropriation bills, which we are so anxious to take up and pass. When they refuse us the opportunity of debate, which they seem so very anxious to avoid, we must resist them.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. The position of the question is simply this: Gentlemen on the other side refuse to come to a vote, and propose to go on indefinitely with the debate. They thereby assume the responsibility of blocking the legislation of this House.

Mr. CONGER. We are asking with pleading tones for appropriation bills that we may vote upon them.

Mr. MCMAHON. I have heard a great deal about bringing up the appropriation bills—

Mr. CONGER. And so have I.

Mr. MCMAHON. Yes; and I desire to say to the House that the appropriation bills would have been ready to bring into the House before now if the Public Printer had been willing to answer certain simple and plain questions which it is necessary the House should have answered before it can vote intelligently on whether it will give $400,000 or $300,000 to the Public Printer. Those questions are still before the Public Printer. They ought to be answered and need to be answered, and I think they will be answered by to-morrow.

Mr. AIKEN. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. AIKEN. I desire to know if it would be in order to move to lay the bill with all the amendments on the table.

The SPEAKER. It would; a quorum being present.

Mr. AIKEN. I make that motion. This is obstructing the public business, and I move to lay the bill with all the amendments on the table. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOSTETLER] demanded the previous question. Pending that demand no quorum appeared. The Chair would have entertained the motion now made by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. AIKEN] if there had been a quorum. The Chair therefore entertains the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina, as there is now a quorum.

Mr. CLYMER. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina to lay the bill and amendments on the table.

Mr. HOSTETLER. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. ATKINS. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ATKINS. Would a motion to recommit take precedence of a motion to lay on the table?

The SPEAKER. It would not.

Mr. McMAHON. Pending the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. If this bill is tabled does it take the substitute with it?

The SPEAKER. It takes everything. The question is on ordering the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Clerk, proceeding to call the roll, called the first name thereon—

Mr. AIKEN. On what have the yeas and nays been ordered?

The SPEAKER. On the motion made by the gentleman himself, to lay the bill and amendments on the table.

Mr. SAMFORD. What has become of the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. McMAHON,] that the House do now adjourn?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood that the gentleman from Ohio did not press that motion.

Mr. McMAHON. I gave the Chair no reason to suppose that I did not press it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McMAHON] states that he insists on his motion, which is one of higher privilege.

Mr. GARFIELD. It is too late.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is not too late.

Mr. GARFIELD. But the roll-call was commenced.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman rose in his place and stated that he insisted upon his motion to adjourn. The Chair has uniformly recognized a member, often the gentleman from Ohio himself, [Mr. GARFIELD,] when he rose in his place and stated on his word that he had made a motion in time.

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not wish to take any snap judgment on my colleague, [Mr. McMAHON,] I will ask the Chair if it be true or not that before the Chair recognized my colleague the first name on the roll was called?

The SPEAKER. The Chair did hear the motion and did recognize the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McMAHON] to make it. But the Chair supposed (which supposition the gentleman now states is not correct) that he did not press his motion. The gentleman now says that he did press his motion.

Mr. GARFIELD. All right.

Mr. McMAHON. And many gentlemen around me here heard me say so.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the motion to lay this bill and amendments on the table; pending which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McMAHON] moves that the House now adjourn.

The motion to adjourn was not agreed to; upon a division—yeas 65, noes 107.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. AIKEN] to lay the bill and pending amendments on the table, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 112, nays 121, not voting 59; as follows:

YEAS—112.

So the motion of Mr. AIKEN was not agreed to.

During the roll-call, while the Clerk was reading the names of those who had not voted on the first call,

Mr. POUND said: I believe the Clerk has passed over my name without calling it. I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to have his name called the second time, if he failed to answer on the first call. If he does not answer on either call, he loses his right to vote.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman's name has not been called the second time.

Mr. POUND. I desire to have my name called a second time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair finds the gentleman is recorded as having voted on the first call.

Mr. POUND. I was not in my seat when my name was first called.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's name is recorded in the negative.

When the completed list is read over, it is the right of any member to correct or change his vote.

Mr. POUND. I do not desire to change or correct my vote, because I have not yet voted.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman did not vote on the first call; and his name has not been called a second time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to have his name properly recorded.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Illinois. But he was not in the Hall when his name was called.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is in the Hall now. It seems that the gentleman is recorded upon the first call although he did not vote. Not having voted on the first call, and being now present, he has the right to have his name called the second time, which the Clerk omitted on second call because he was recorded on first call, as it now appears erroneously.

The name of Mr. POUND was called, and he voted "ay."

When the call of the roll was concluded,

Mr. HENDERSON said: I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER. When a member has not responded upon either the first or the second call, the Chair cannot entertain a request to have his vote recorded.

Mr. HENDERSON. I was called out of the Hall.

Mr. MARTIN, of West Virginia. I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot entertain the request.

The following pairs were announced:

Mr. MARTIN, of West Virginia, with Mr. HENDERSON.

Mr. BEALE with Mr. JORGENSEN.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas, with Mr. DUNN.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina, with Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa.

Mr. ARMFIELD with Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island.

Mr. STEELE with Mr. BOYD.

Mr. ATHERTON with Mr. MCCOID.

Mr. BOUCK with Mr. MCKINLEY.
 Mr. CHALMERS with Mr. VAN VOORHIS.
 Mr. KEIFER with Mr. HENKLE.
 Mr. TAYLOR with Mr. BRIGHAM.
 Mr. MONEY with Mr. MASON.
 Mr. BARLOW with Mr. BACHMAN.
 Mr. COFFROTH with Mr. THOMAS.
 Mr. HAMMOND, of New York, with Mr. O'BRIEN.
 Mr. CRAPO with Mr. GIBSON.
 Mr. ELLIS with Mr. HAYES.
 Mr. BRIGGS with Mr. CONVERSE.
 Mr. ELAM with Mr. DICK.
 Mr. RICHMOND with Mr. PRESCOTT.
 Mr. O'NEILL with Mr. ROSS.
 Mr. CASWELL with Mr. BRAGG.
 Mr. RUSSELL, of North Carolina, with Mr. WISE.

Mr. GIBSON. The Clerk has read an announcement that I am paired with some gentleman. I was not aware of the fact. I suppose some friend has paired me with a gentleman on the republican side. I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. CRAPO. I have declined to vote upon the understanding that I was paired with the gentleman.

Mr. SPRINGER. As both gentlemen are present, I object to the pair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot object to a pair. The gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. CRAPO,] having failed to vote upon both calls, has no right to vote now.

Mr. GIBSON. I withdraw my vote.

The SPEAKER. That the gentleman has the right to do, and it is the correct way to do under the circumstances.

Mr. SPRINGER. When gentlemen are not excused from voting, we have the right to insist that they shall vote.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. FINLEY moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REPORT OF MISSISSIPPI RIVER COMMISSION.

Mr. ROBERTSON rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ROBERTSON] desires to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting the report of the Mississippi River commission, was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CONGER. I submit that it is not in order now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman merely enters the motion under the rule. This document was referred yesterday; and under the rule the motion to reconsider must be made on the same or succeeding day. If the Chair refused to entertain the motion to-day, the gentleman would be deprived of his right.

Mr. CONGER. Are not these reports presented with the understanding that they are not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider?

The SPEAKER. This was a departmental communication laid before the House by the Chair, who ordered that it be referred to the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River; but the gentleman from Michigan thought it belonged to the Committee on Commerce. The gentleman from Louisiana now desires, under the rules, to enter a motion to reconsider, so that the House may properly determine to which committee the communication belongs. If the Chair did not recognize the gentleman this evening the right to enter the motion would be lost. The Chair does not feel like taking that responsibility; hence the recognition.

Mr. CONGER. But under the rules the gentleman has no right to move to reconsider a matter thus referred.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the motion to reconsider is in order.

Mr. JONES, of Texas, asks unanimous consent to print remarks touching the bill under consideration.

Mr. BUCKNER. I move the House do now adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 104, noes 99.

Mr. SPRINGER. Before the vote is announced I desire to give notice that on Tuesday next the Committee on Elections will call up for consideration the case of Bradley against Slemons, and on Wednesday the case of Curtin against Yocum.

Mr. PAGE. I objected to the gentleman from Texas having unanimous consent to print remarks. The Speaker did not take notice of my objection.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. PAGE. I do.

Mr. WILSON. I wish to print some remarks.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman make his objection general?

Mr. PAGE. I do on the question before the House.

Mr. McMAHON. I give notice that if the Committee on Elections calls up the cases referred to, on Tuesday and Wednesday next, I shall be compelled to bring up the appropriation bill to-morrow. I give notice of that.

The SPEAKER. The motion to adjourn has been agreed to.

Accordingly (at four o'clock and twenty-three minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows, viz:

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, March 12, 1880.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The VICE-PRESIDENT signed the enrolled bill (S. No. 474) for the relief of William McGovern, which had previously received the signature of the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HAMLIN. I present the petition of John O'Dee and others, citizens of Maine, praying that Luke Walker, ordnance-sergeant, United States Army, be placed upon the retired list, and the application of the sergeant himself for the same purpose; which I move be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SAULSBURY presented the petition of Nehemiah Ford, of Kenton Hundred, Kent County, Delaware, late private in Company G, First Regiment of Delaware Cavalry Volunteers, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WALLACE presented a petition of citizens of Clarion County, Pennsylvania, and a petition of citizens of Susquehanna County, Pennsylvania, praying for the establishment of a department of agriculture; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Clinton County, Pennsylvania, praying for such legislation as will prevent fluctuations in freights and unjust discriminations in charges for transportation; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. DAWES. I present the petition of Edwards A. Park and others, officers and students of the Andover Theological Seminary, praying that justice be done to the Ute Indians in Colorado, that they be fully protected in their natural and their treaty rights, and that they be not in any way forced to sell or to leave their reservation in violation of such rights. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I also present a petition, praying that the Indians generally throughout the country may be maintained by the care of the Government in the rights to which they are entitled under treaties with the United States. This petition is signed by J. Nelson Trask and a large number of others, citizens of Andover, Massachusetts. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VOORHEES presented the memorial of Flora A. Skinner, widow and administratrix of Gilbert A. Skinner, deceased, praying compensation for services rendered by her husband as physician at the Fort Peck agency, and also praying that her name, together with that of her child, may be placed upon the pension-rolls; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WILLIAMS presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Kentucky, requesting the Senators and Representatives from that State to urge the passage of a bill granting pensions to soldiers of the Mexican war; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a joint resolution of the General Assembly of Kentucky, instructing its Senators and requesting its Representatives to urge the passage of a bill reducing the salary of the President of the United States to $25,000 a year; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a joint resolution of the General Assembly of Kentucky, instructing its Senators and requesting its Representatives to urge the passage of a law for the payment of the claims of soldiers organized under the authority of the State of Kentucky who served in the United States Army during the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOAR presented the petition of Marie Louise Perrin and Trautman Perrin, of Boston, Massachusetts, praying the passage of a law allowing them indemnity for goods lost in the burning of Greytown when bombarded and burnt by the United States sloop of war Cyane, Commander Hollins, on the 13th of July, 1854; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BECK presented a joint resolution of the General Assembly of Kentucky, instructing its Senators and requesting the Representatives from that State to urge the passage by Congress of a bill for the establishment of a life-saving station at the falls of the Ohio River, at Louisville, Kentucky; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Kentucky, asking Congress to erect a Federal court building at Frankfort, Kentucky, and requesting its Senators and Representatives to urge the passage of a bill for that purpose; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also presented a joint resolution of the General Assembly of Kentucky, requesting the Senators and Representatives from that State to urge Congress to grant an increase of pension to Mrs. Jane W. McKee, widow of Colonel William R. McKee, who was killed at Buena Vista, and mother of Lieutenant Hugh McKee, who was killed in battle in Corea, Asia; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BECK. I also present a joint resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Kentucky, relative to the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi River and its tributaries. I ask that this resolution be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Commerce; and is as follows:

Resolution approving the address of the Mississippi Valley commission.

Resolved, That the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, upon consideration of the address of the Mississippi Valley States commission, appointed by the governors of said States, recognize the great importance of the matters therein presented to the State of Kentucky, and conjointly to all the States of the Mississippi Valley, and earnestly commend the same to the favorable consideration of the Congress of the United States, and to the Legislatures of the several States of the Mississippi Valley; and whereas, in view of the magnitude of the Mississippi Valley, covering by far the largest extent of surface drained by one system of waters found in the temperate zones of the earth, which now furnishes to the world a larger portion of material for human subsistence than any equal extent of the earth's surface, furnishing also the great bulk of material that enters into the foreign and domestic commerce of this country; and in view of the fact that the vast resources of this great valley as in the past, so in the future, must continue chiefly dependent upon the facilities afforded to commerce by the Mississippi River and its tributaries for their development; and in view of the great extent to which those resources may be brought under development by extending the navigation of said river and its tributaries by a systematic improvement of the same, the enlargement of the commercial area, and the great increase of both the foreign and domestic commerce of this country thereby: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky deem it appropriate, in response to the address of the Mississippi Valley States commission, to manifest hereby its cordial approval of the same, and to express to the Congress of the United States its conviction that the great natural system of waters in the Mississippi Valley should be improved as a system, and this General Assembly earnestly recommend and desire that Congress shall appoint a suitable commission, or enlarge the Mississippi River commission of engineers, for the purpose of having all the waters of the Mississippi Valley susceptible of navigation, surveyed, examined, explored, or inquired into, and to have reports made showing the benefits to be derived from such a systematic improvement of said waters, and that in due time all necessary appropriations and laws for the purpose of improving the navigation of said waters, whenever it shall be found useful and advantageous to the commerce of the country, shall be made.

Resolved, That the Representatives in Congress from Kentucky are requested and the Senators from Kentucky are hereby instructed to present these resolutions to their respective bodies, and endeavor to secure such action on the part of Congress as may secure the purpose of these resolutions.

Resolved, That his excellency Governor Luke P. Blackburn be requested to forward copies of the same to the governors of the several States of the Mississippi Valley, requesting that they be communicated to the respective Legislatures of said States as an expression of the views of this General Assembly of Kentucky.

J. M. BIGGER,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
CLINTON GRIFFITH,
Speaker of the Senate pro tempore.

Approved March 5, 1880.

By the governor.

Attest:

LUKE P. BLACKBURN,
Governor.
SAMUEL B. CHURCHILL,
Secretary of State.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. INGALLS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1143) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Allison, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. WITHERS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1333) granting an increase of pension by way of arrears to Maria A. Rousseau, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1361) granting an increase of pension to Elisha F. Rogers, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the bill be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. WITHERS. At the request of the Senator from Missouri let the bill be placed on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. VANCE, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4568) for the protection of the Potomac fisheries in the District of Columbia, and for the preservation of shad and herring in the Potomac River, reported it without amendment.

Mr. JONAS, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 890) relating to the equitable and legal rights of parties in possession of certain lands and improvements thereon in California, and to provide jurisdiction to determine those rights, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRUCE, from the Committee on Education and Labor, to whom were referred the bill (S. No. 792) to encourage and aid the education of the colored race in the several States and Territories, and the bill (S. No. 865) to provide for the investment of certain unclaimed pay and bounty moneys now in the Treasury of the United States, and to facilitate and encourage the education of the colored race in the several States and Territories, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bills were postponed indefinitely.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. The Committee on Pensions instruct me to report back the bill (S. No. 1234) amending an act entitled "An act granting a pension to William R. Browne," approved February 7, 1879, adversely. I wish to say in making the report that I act as the organ of the committee, although my own opinion does not correspond with the action of the committee. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] desires that the bill be placed upon the Calendar.

Mr. VOORHEES. Let it be placed upon the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed upon the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

COMMITTEE ON RULES.

Mr. MORGAN, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following resolution:

Resolved, That the forty-seventh standing rule of the Senate be so amended as that the Committee on Rules shall consist of five Senators, instead of three Senators as is now provided by said rule.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I understand that it only increases the membership of the Committee on Rules from three to five.

Mr. MORGAN. From three to five.

Mr. MORRILL. I hardly think that the resolution ought to be acted upon as soon as reported. I should prefer to have it lie over one day.

Mr. MORGAN. It is the unanimous report of the committee. They find it almost impossible to transact their business with but three members.

Mr. MORRILL. In that case I shall not object.

The resolution was considered and agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BECK asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1466) to amend section 4597 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the renewal of applications for patents; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. ROLLINS (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1467) to provide for the ascertainment of claims of American citizens for spoiliations by the French prior to the 31st day of July, 1801; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. TELLER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1468) to enable the State of Colorado to select lands under the act of Congress of July 2, 1862, and the act of July 23, 1866, making a grant of land to States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. TELLER. I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MORRILL. It should be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. TELLER. I defer to the judgment of the Senator from Vermont.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. PADDOCK asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1470) to confirm a certain private land claim in the Territory of New Mexico; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. RANSOM asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1469) to refund to the North Carolina Railroad Company certain moneys illegally assessed against and unlawfully collected from it by the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. VANCE, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of A. M. Powell be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Finance.

ARMY REGISTER.

Mr. ANTHONY submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That 1,000 additional copies of the Army Register be printed for the use of the Senate.

CALVIN BRONSON.

Mr. MORRILL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to communicate to the Senate all the facts and testimony in the possession of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue relating to the claim for the relief of Calvin Bronson, of Toledo, Ohio, and if said claim is just and equitable, to state why it has not been adjusted and paid.

INDUSTRIAL EDUCATION.

Mr. MORGAN submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior is directed to furnish to the Senate such information as is in the possession of the Bureau of Education in relation to the state of technical or industrial education in the schools and colleges endowed in whole or in part by the Government of the United States, and also in other schools and colleges in the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia, and the extent to which provision has been made for the education of females in technical and industrial branches of education and the number of females in attendance at said schools.

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to say that a Senator on the other side of the Chamber, perhaps the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR,] has called for information in regard to the subject of education. I do not know the precise scope of it, but this morning I had a conversation with Mr. Eaton, who is the Commissioner of Education. I mentioned this subject to him, and he agreed that this would be a very valuable addition to the report which he is required to make under that resolution and which he is preparing. I therefore ask the Senate to adopt the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HOAR. I have no objection to the resolution. Two or three years ago the House of Representatives ordered an inquiry into this subject, and by one of its committees had a very thorough examination of all these institutions, and institutions not endowed by the Government. The result of that examination was reported to the House and published I believe as one of the House documents. The Senator may like also to have that coupled with the information in the possession of the Bureau of Education.

Mr. MORGAN. I think the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts is a valuable one. But I ask now for the passage of the resolution as I have offered it.

The resolution was agreed to.

PROPOSED ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. WALLACE. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. GARLAND. I know that is not a debatable motion, but I ask the Senator to withdraw the motion, in order to give us a session to-morrow to consider the bill (H. R. No. 4244) for the establishment of titles in Hot Springs, and for other purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. I think that should be considered to-morrow.

Mr. GARLAND. I insist upon its consideration. That bill has been put off two or three times for the benefit of Senators.

Mr. WALLACE. On the appeal of the Senator from Arkansas, I withdraw the motion I submitted.

ELIZABETH B. CUSTER.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will proceed with the call of the Calendar of General Orders, commencing at the point reached yesterday.

The bill (S. No. 459) for the relief of Elizabeth B. Custer was announced as being first in order upon the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill was reported adversely from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed, in accordance with the report of the committee.

The motion was agreed to.

P. L. WARD.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 1267) for the relief of P. L. Ward, widow and executrix of William Ward, deceased, which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to P. L. Ward, executrix of William Ward, deceased, of Norfolk, Virginia, $2,075.13, in full satisfaction of all claim for beef and vegetables furnished by William Ward to the United States Navy, and in full satisfaction for hay sold to the quartermaster of the United States Army.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Let the report be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. HARRIS February 11, 1880:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of P. L. Ward, widow and executrix of William Ward, deceased, of Norfolk, Virginia, asking for compensation for certain provisions furnished to the Navy of the United States, and certain quartermaster stores furnished the Army of the United States, under contract, have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report: The petition states that petitioner is the widow and executrix of William Ward, deceased. That in June, 1860, William Ward entered into a written contract with the United States for supplying fresh beef and vegetables to the Navy at the Norfolk, Virginia, station, and that under said contract her late husband and testator, on or about the 21st January, 1861, supplied the United States ship Plymouth with the articles named to the amount of $275.13, for which no payment was ever made, and she refers to the records of the Navy Department for the proof. The committee sent the petition to the Navy Department with a request for such information in respect to this claim as the records of that Department could furnish, and received from the Secretary the following reply:

"NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 5, 1880.

"SIR: I have the honor to return herewith the petition of Mrs. L. P. Ward, asking for payment of $275.13, on account of fresh beef and vegetables supplied by her late husband, William Ward, of Norfolk, Virginia, for the use of the United States Navy, which petition was referred to this Department by the honorable Secretary of War, in compliance with your request of the 15th ultimo.

"The account of the late Mr. Ward is correct as shown by the records of the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing in this Department, with the exception that the fresh beef and vegetables referred to were delivered to the United States steamer Brooklyn, instead of the United States steamer Plymouth as stated in the petition.

"Very respectfully,

"R. W. THOMPSON,
Secretary of the Navy.

"Hon. I. G. HARRIS, United States Senate."

From which the committee is satisfied that the articles were furnished under contract as stated in the petition, and have never been paid for, and that the amount, $275.13, is justly due the claimant and should be paid.

The petitioner also states that in the month of August, 1863, her testator entered into a verbal contract with Captain Edwin Ludlow, of the Quartermaster's Department of the United States Army, in the presence of Hon. L. H. Chandler, United States attorney for that district, and one other witness, for the purchase of sixty tons of hay, at $30 per ton, which was delivered by her said testator to the said Ludlow and used by the Army of the United States. That shortly after the delivery said Ludlow left that locality without paying for the hay, though often having promised so to do.

On the 12th December, 1866, her late husband and testator addressed a letter to the Quartermaster-General asking payment for this hay so furnished, reciting the facts of the contract and delivery of the hay, and the fact that no voucher was given, because Captain Ludlow said it was not necessary to give a voucher, as he would pay for the hay as soon as he received funds, which he was daily expecting; but he left there without paying, and without giving any voucher for the sixty tons of hay, and that upon diligent inquiry he had never been able to ascertain the residence of Captain Ludlow since that time.

This letter is indorsed on the back as follows:

"I most unhesitatingly indorse the within statement.

"(Signed)

"L. H. CHANDLER,
United States District Attorney for Virginia."
"J. T. DANIELS."

"(Signed)

On the 16th day of January, 1867, this account was made out upon the regular printed form furnished by the Department, upon which the sale, delivery, and value of the hay, amounting to $1,800, and the loyalty of the claimant are proved by the affidavits of the then claimants William Ward, L. H. Chandler, and J. R. Hunter; and the respectability and loyalty of the said Ward, Chandler, and Hunter are certified to by John E. Doyle, justice of the peace; and the respectability and loyalty of William Ward is also certified to by William W. Wing, postmaster.

The oath of allegiance to the United States of William Ward is also exhibited, and Henry M. Bowden, clerk of the corporation court, certifies to the citizenship, respectability, and loyalty of William Ward, and to the official character of John E. Doyle as a justice of the peace for said county.

The letter above referred to, addressed by William Ward to the Quartermaster-General, and the proof above referred to were sent to the committee by the War Department in answer to a letter from the committee asking for such information as the records of that Department could furnish as to the justice of this claim. The following is the letter from the Secretary of War:

"WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, January 30, 1880.

"SIR: Acknowledging the receipt of your letter of the 15th instant, referring for information memorial of Mrs. P. L. Ward for pay for certain quartermaster stores and beef delivered by her deceased husband, William Ward, in 1860 and 1863, to the Quartermaster's Department of the Army and the naval station at Norfolk, Virginia, respectively, I have the honor in reply to inclose herewith a letter from Mr. Ward, dated December 12, 1866, submitting his claim to the Quartermaster-General, which paper contains all the information on the subject the records of this Department afford.

"No action was taken upon the claim by the Quartermaster-General for the reason that it originated in Virginia, a State declared to be in insurrection during the rebellion.

"Your letter and the memorial have been referred as desired to the honorable Secretary of the Navy, for information from his Department.

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"ALEX. RAMSEY,
Secretary of War.

"Hon. ISHAM G. HARRIS,

"Committee on Claims, United States Senate."

The Quartermaster-General takes no action upon this claim upon no other than the cold, technical ground that the claimant was a resident of a State declared to be in rebellion.

The proof is clear and conclusive that Quartermaster Ludlow contracted for this hay, equally clear as to the contract price amounting to $1,800, equally clear as to the loyalty to the United States of William Ward, who furnished the hay, and who was the husband and is the testator of the petitioner, and equally clear that the hay has never been paid for.

It does not clearly appear when William Ward died. It is certain that it was subsequent to 1867 and before 1878 when this petition was presented by P. L. Ward, widow and executrix. She states that neither her late husband nor herself were ever informed nor did they know of the establishment of what is called the southern claims commission, nor the necessity of presenting this claim to that tribunal, until after the expiration of the time within which it could have been presented; nor did petitioner know of the status of the claim until a few months before the presentation of this petition.

The committee are satisfied that the vegetables and beef, amounting to $275.13, were delivered under contract to the United States Navy, and that sixty tons of hay was sold and delivered to Quartermaster Ludlow, at $30, amounting to $1,800, making an aggregate of $2,075.13; that the same were never paid for, and that the claimant was loyal to the United States, and that this sum is justly due to the claimant and should be paid; and therefore the committee report the accompanying bill, and recommend that it pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMMITTEE ON INTEROCEANIC CANAL.

Mr. GORDON. I ask the Senate to proceed now to the consideration of the resolution providing for the appointment of a special committee on the interoceanic canal.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion of the Senator from Georgia is not in order during the pendency of the morning hour under the special rule for the consideration of the Calendar. The Chair will recognize the Senator at the close of the consideration of the Calendar.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I will say to my friend from Georgia, that at the close of the morning hour there is an appropriation bill pending and we cannot give way to his resolution. The Senator can move now to lay aside the pending order and proceed to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. HARRIS. That can only be done by unanimous consent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That can only be done by unanimous consent during the consideration of the Calendar, under what is known as the Anthony rule.

Mr. MAXEY. There are so many bills on the Calendar reported from various committees, and we so much desire to get rid of everything on the Calendar, that I prefer that the Senator from Georgia should forego the consideration of his resolution this morning. I think it is due to the committees of the Senate that the Calendar should be proceeded with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the resolution indicated by the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. MAXEY. I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas objects, and the next bill on the Calendar will be reported.

JAMES AND WILLIAM VANCE.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 1268) for the relief of James Vance and William Vance; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to James Vance and William Vance $5,500, in full payment for the use of buildings at San Antonio, Texas, between August 5, 1865, and August 20, 1866.

Mr. INGALLS. Let us hear the report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. HEREFORD, from the Committee on Claims, February 11, 1880.

The committee to whom was referred the petition of James Vance and William Vance, asking for payment for use of certain buildings at San Antonio, Texas, report as follows:

The same matter was before the Senate in the Forty-fifth Congress, and a favorable report was made thereon by the Committee on Claims.

This claim is for rent for the use and occupation of certain buildings in San Antonio, Texas, from the 5th day of August, 1865, to the 20th day of August, 1866, as well as the rental of a certain dwelling-house from September 1, 1865, to April 30, 1866.

The principal buildings, exclusive of the dwelling-house, were five in number, containing twenty-two rooms; two of these were store-houses, each thirty feet wide by one hundred and ten feet deep, with two barracks, each thirty feet wide and one hundred and sixty-seven feet deep. These buildings had been rented before the war of the claimants, the Government paying rental therefor at the rate of $625 per month.

At the time actual hostilities ceased, which was before the 5th of August, 1865, these buildings were in a damaged condition, and the claimants allege that at the request of Captain H. S. Clubb, assistant quartermaster, they repaired the buildings at an expense of between seven and eight thousand dollars in gold; that such repairs were made for the purpose of inducing the Government to rent the buildings. On the 5th day of August, 1865, the Government, by its assistant quartermaster, took possession of the buildings before mentioned as well as the dwelling-house of the claimants.

The evidence is satisfactory on the question of possession having been given the Government by the claimants.

It was in no sense a taking of possession by force, or without the consent of the owners. It is evident that the claimants and the assistant quartermaster understood that rent was to be paid for the use and occupation of the premises. The claimants allege that there was no positive agreement as to the amount to be paid, but it was supposed that the amount allowed would be the same as had been paid before the war. The assistant quartermaster reported the use and occupation of the premises to the Department at Washington, with a diagram of the buildings, streets, &c., and under the head of "Rate of hire or compensation," entered "Rate not settled." This statement was made monthly during the time these buildings were so occupied, and the testimony shows that it was the intention of the quartermaster and the claimants that rent was to be paid at such sum as should be fixed at Washington, and there is nothing in the case that will warrant the idea that it was taken possession of by force, or without the consent of the owners first obtained. It is evident that this was the belief of the claimants, (that rent was to be paid,) for, in the spring of 1866, the claimants presented the claim for rent of the premises, and were informed, May 9, 1866, that "under existing decision of the War Department, rent in States heretofore in rebellion cannot be paid by the Quartermaster's Department." This, the Department claims, brings the case within the rule laid down by the Supreme Court in the case of Elliott vs. United States, 9 Wallace, page 45, and this is undoubtedly correct. The case of Elliott vs. United States only decided that there was not such a contract as would entitle the plaintiff to sue in the Court of Claims, and it must be admitted that in this case the claimants have no standing in the Court of Claims. If they had they would doubtless go into that court.

Congress has uniformly allowed rent to claimants, where the premises occupied by the Army were occupied under contract.

It is, under the provision of law, the duty of the Quartermaster's Department to furnish quarters for officers, and the Quartermaster's Department must provide store-rooms, warehouses, depots for its supplies, and it cannot be said that while the Quartermaster's Department might contract for officers' quarters it could not contract for a building in which to put the stores indispensable to the existence of the Army rank and file. If Congress is justified in recognizing as valid the contract made for the convenience of the officers of the Army, and the clerical force necessary for the efficiency of the Army, it certainly will be justified in recognizing the contracts made by the same officers for the rental of buildings, without which the Quartermaster's Department would hardly have been able to discharge the duties imposed on it by law, the least of which was the furnishing quarters for officers and their staff.

The claimants were, indeed, to expend a large amount of money in repairing the buildings, putting them in condition to be occupied by the Government, and under a contract with the assistant quartermaster the claimants surrendered to the Government the possession of the buildings at a time when war existed only in name and not in fact.

Such contract was made about two months after the Government of the United States had officially notified the governments of Europe that the war of the rebellion was at an end, that the authority of the United States was regarded in all of the late rebellious States. No armed force appeared against the Government in the State of Texas after August 1, 1865, and the Government did not after that time exercise the right (not denied to it in war) to seize the property of the citizens of disloyal States and occupy the same without compensation to the owners.

Under all the circumstances, your committee think it was the duty of the Government, on the 9th of May, 1866, if the intention was to repudiate the contract, to have surrendered to the claimants the possession which had been acquired under a promise to pay rent, and, not having so surrendered the premises, your committee think that it does not comport with the dignity of the Government to say that such rent ought not to be paid.

The Government did pay rent for the premises, exclusive of the dwelling-house after August 20, at the rate of $5,000 per annum for a period, and subsequently at the rate of $6,000 per annum, and your committee think that the rent for the buildings so occupied, exclusive of the dwelling, ought to be paid at the rate of $5,000 per annum, and that the evidence shows that the rent of the dwelling-house was worth at least $50 per month, making the total rent due the claimants the sum of $5,500 for the rental of the property, exclusive of the dwelling-house, and $300 for the use of the dwelling, or a total of $5,500.

The committee therefore recommend that amount be allowed in full of all claims of claimants, and report the accompanying bill.

Mr. MAXEY. I desire to call the attention of the Senator who reported the bill to the fact that I have it from the immediate representative of that district—the sixth congressional district, Judge UPSON—that Mr. William Vance is dead; also, that James Vance has been adjudged by the proper court a lunatic, and is in the hands of what is called in Texas a guardian of both his person and estate. I therefore move in view of these facts, in line 5, after the name "James Vance," to insert the words "or his legal representatives."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAXEY. In lines 5 and 6, I move to strike out "William Vance" and insert "the legal representatives of William Vance, deceased."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAXEY. The title should be changed to correspond with these amendments.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of James Vance or his legal representatives, and the legal representatives of William Vance, deceased."

COMMITTEE ON INTEROCEANIC CANAL.

Mr. GORDON. I wish to ask again unanimous consent to consider the resolution providing for the appointment of a select committee on the subject of an interoceanic canal. There are a number of papers on that subject necessary to be considered by some committee or other, and it is proper the matter should be disposed of. I hope there will be no objection to considering it. It will take but a few moments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the Secretary will report the resolution.

The Chief Clerk read the following resolution, submitted by Mr. GORDON on the 29th of January:

Resolved, That a committee of nine be appointed to take into consideration the subject of the construction of a canal to connect the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans; and that all papers, documents, and information relating to said subject be referred to said committee.

Be it further resolved, That said committee be authorized to confer and act concurrently with any similar committee of the House of Representatives; and that said committee be authorized to employ a clerk.

Mr. SAULSBURY. That I understand is the resolution now before the Senate. I do not believe we ought to raise a special committee on this subject; and I only rise for the purpose of stating my reason for that opinion. We have a sufficient number of committees of this body to consider that whole subject, and in my opinion it is a subject more nearly related at the present stage of affairs to our Foreign Relations Committee than to any other committee of this body, and I believe it would be an act of gross injustice now to take a subject which legitimately and properly belongs to that committee in its present condition and place it in the hands of any other standing committee or of a special committee. The time may come hereafter, if we consider this subject, when the commercial aspect of the affair will come under review, and at that time it might be properly referred to the Committee on Commerce; but in the present aspect of the case the very first and primary questions to be inquired into are those in connection with our foreign relations, and it would be eminently proper, therefore, that this subject should go to that committee, and not to any special committee or any other standing committee of this body.

I confess that if I were the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations I should feel that an indignity had been offered to my committee if a question of this kind were taken from my committee and referred to a special committee of this body. And because I am unwilling by my vote to do anything that would reflect directly or indirectly upon any committee of this body, I cannot consent to vote for a resolution raising a special committee to whom this matter shall be referred.

Mr. EATON. Mr. President, early in the session, perhaps on the second day of the session or possibly the third—I have now forgotten which it was—believing that this whole matter should be brought before the Senate, I moved a resolution asking information from the President of the United States with regard to all matters connected with this interoceanic canal project and calling for everything that has transpired in the last ten or twelve years. That report has been made. That report has been sent to the Committee on Foreign Relations, where in my simplicity I supposed these questions belonged. But my friend from Georgia proposes to raise a special committee to investigate the whole matter. Individually I should be very glad to avoid or evade the labor that attaches to this matter; but as the organ of the Committee on Foreign Relations I cannot permit a resolution of this character to pass without saying a word or two.

Mr. President, at the base, at the foundation of this whole matter, are questions connected with our foreign relations. Incidental to those I agree are questions with regard to international law; incidental are questions with regard to commerce. That is true; but some committee must have charge of this matter, and now I propose to say a word with regard to the committee of which I have the honor to be the head. On that committee are who? The Senator from Maine, [Mr. HAMLIN,] if not the oldest, one of the oldest Senators in this body; a man with as much information with regard to our foreign affairs as any other man in this broad land, no matter where the other man may be. There is the Senator from New York, [Mr. CONKLING,] a most distinguished member of the Judiciary Committee. There is the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. JOHNSTON,] long at the head of the bench of his State. There is the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. CARPENTER,] one of the brightest legal minds in America. There is the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. HILL,] there is the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. PENDLETON,] there is the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. KIRKWOOD.] Where can you get a better committee, leaving out the chairman—where can you find a better committee in this Senate to investigate this whole question than the Committee on Foreign Relations? It belongs there. We have in our hands now two months' work which I have delayed because I did not propose to go into that work and then have the business taken from my hands. If the Senate in its wisdom chooses to appoint a special committee, it will give me great pleasure to report all these matters back, so that the special committee may have them. Some committee ought at once to undertake this labor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. My impression is that we ought not to have any more special committees. As to the question to what committee this subject ought to go, that can be decided after we decide the question whether or not we ought to have a special committee. The Committee on Commerce already has this subject in charge in part; the Committee on Foreign Relations has it in part. We have now forty-five committees, thirty-four of which are standing. Certainly one of those forty-five committees ought to be able to take charge of this question without adding a further committee, and of course carrying whatever expense, whether it be little or much, with it.

It occurs to me, as the Senator from Connecticut has well said, that the subject belongs to his committee to a very considerable extent; certainly all that part of it relating to foreign relations. Then the commercial part of it belongs very properly to the Committee on Commerce. It appears to me that it will be better not to have another special committee. There are many things connected with a special committee that involve expense, trips, and additional employes, room, &c. That, however, one Senator has said, is a small question. It may be; yet it enters into the consideration of the matter.

Again, this question has been pending before one or the other of these committees for two months; and why not let it stay there? Why add another committee?

If this resolution is to pass, it ought to be amended, I submit to my friend from Georgia. It provides for a clerk, but no way of paying him. The resolution provides for employing a clerk, but makes no provision as to his payment. That may come in hereafter, the Senator from Georgia may say. Very true, that and other things may come in hereafter; but if there is to be a special committee we ought to know now all that it involves. My own impression is, that instead of having a special committee, if we are to raise one for this particular purpose, it ought to be a permanent committee, because it will carry with it, in my humble judgment, a long service, perhaps as long as the question lasts, and it will not be gotten rid of within the next year or the next Congress.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I desire to state to my colleague that I was not in the Senate Chamber when the resolution was called up. I think it is proper, without taking part in the debate, that I should say that my neighbor who sits near me, the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. GROOME,] offered a resolution of the same character previously to the one offered by my colleague. He is not now in his seat, and I think he desires to be here when this matter is passed upon. I think it my duty to say that to the Senate.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. President, I most respectfully submit to my colleague that priority in the introduction of resolutions has nothing to do with their merits. It is pretty well known, I think, that I had introduced a resolution upon this subject on the first or second day of the session. But the question should be treated upon its merits, and personal considerations should not enter into the discussion at all. I have to regret that the phrase now given to it forbids my debating the question any further. It is evident to my mind, and must be to the Senate, that the Senator from Connecticut is impressed with the belief that the committee of which he is chairman is entitled to this subject; and he has thought proper to bring the personnel of that committee before the Senate. Well, sir, not only have I nothing to say in derogation of any member of that committee, but I most heartily join in all the compliments he has just paid those Senators. It is very well known, sir, that I could have had no personal ambitions or ends to subserve in the introduction of the resolution, for I have declared, when the subject was before the Senate on a former occasion, that should the committee be appointed I should ask to be excused from service upon it. And now, sir, in view of what my colleague has said, and of the fact that the names of the Senators composing the Committee on Foreign Relations and their claims to the consideration of the Senate have been presented by the chairman of that committee, it is not for me to further resist the wishes of that committee. If, therefore, it is the pleasure of the Senate that this subject shall be considered by the Committee on Foreign Relations, it certainly is mine.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I do not rise to make a speech; but upon the first presentation of this resolution it struck me that the subject properly belonged to the Committee on Foreign Relations. On turning the subject a little further around there seemed to be involved in it questions of law that appeared to require consideration at the hands of the Law Committee of the Senate; and then as there were treaty obligations involved in it, the Committee on Foreign Relations seemed to be the proper committee. But on turning the question entirely over, there are other considerations which seemed to refer it as well to the Committee on Naval Affairs and the Committee on Military Affairs, because if we intend to make our declarations good it may be necessary to look into the condition of our Army and Navy.

This, sir, is the greatest question that has been before the Senate during this session of Congress. It is one requiring all the ability; all the knowledge that all the committees of the Senate can bring to it and to the country. I hope that a special committee will be appointed, and that the ablest and best men of all the committees of the Senate will be selected for the special committee. If ever there was a question before a deliberative body demanding the exercise of the highest ability and patriotism, it is certainly this question, for let me say to Senators that the American people have made up their minds upon this subject. There may be some differences of opinion here, but the country is of one mind in this regard.

The people of the United States do not intend that any foreign nation or all foreign nations shall erect a Chinese wall or dig a ditch across this continent that shall stand as a barrier against their aspirations to empire or commercial supremacy upon this continent. That is the fiat and that is the feeling of the people of this whole country from the North to the South, from the East to the West, and that statesman or politician who puts himself up against this current of popular opinion will be swept away as by a rushing freight train.

I hope, sir, that this special committee will be raised, and that the ablest and most patriotic and the best informed men upon all the subjects pertaining to this question will be selected for that committee.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. President, I wish to say that this resolution was introduced by me for the reasons I gave when the subject was before the Senate some weeks ago. Those reasons I then thought and still think ought to induce the Senate to appoint a select committee to consider this important and grave subject. Without, therefore, abandoning one position I then assumed, without abating in any degree my profound conviction that this subject merits, if any one which has ever come before the American Senate did, a select committee to consider it in all its varied phases and its grave commercial, national, and international importance; still adhering to the opinion and again venturing the prediction that no one of the standing committees, with its interruptions by its regular, routine duties can ever give the subject the consecutive and undivided attention which its gravity demands; yet in view of the peculiar character which the debate this morning assumes, I rise to ask the privilege of withdrawing the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia asks leave to withdraw his resolution.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I wish to say to my colleague that I only referred to the resolution offered by the Senator from Maryland in connection with the question of priority. I merely mentioned it because that Senator, who is my neighbor here, was not present, and I understood he desired to be here during the consideration of the resolution. The course my colleague has since thought proper to take, I have no objection to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution is withdrawn.

Mr. GROOME. I should like the consent of the Senate to call up the resolution which I offered on the 17th of December last. I propose to call it up for the purpose of moving its indefinite postponement.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read and objections asked.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Whereas it is desirable to have all reports, communications, and other data concerning the proposed interoceanic canal carefully and fully considered and introduced and speedily reported upon: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That a special select committee of nine Senators (to be appointed by the presiding officer of the Senate) be appointed, whose duty it shall be to examine into the subject of selection of a suitable route for the construction of an interoceanic ship-canal across the American isthmus; and that all petitions, memorials, resolutions, bills and reports on such canal or other mode of facilitating communication between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans be referred to this committee; that they have the services of a clerk to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate during the sessions, and that said committee have authority to report to the Senate at any time such resolution, bill, or report as may be best adapted to secure such communication between said oceans.

Mr. GROOME. I move that the resolution be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator may withdraw it if he pleases. It has never been amended or the yeas and nays ordered.

Mr. GROOME. Then I ask leave to withdraw the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and it is withdrawn.

Mr. PLATT. I ask unanimous consent to take up at this time the joint resolution introduced by me (S. R. No. 66) in relation to an interoceanic canal, for the purpose of reference.

Mr. HARRIS. I simply rise to give notice that I shall insist on the regular order this morning hour after this matter is disposed of.

Mr. PLATT. I only call it up for reference.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution by its title.

Mr. PLATT. I move the reference of the joint resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

PRINTING OF A BILL.

Mr. THURMAN. I ask consent to offer a resolution for printing five hundred additional copies of the Senate bill in relation to the Geneva award and the proposed amendments. I have been informed by the officer in charge of our document-room that the supply is almost exhausted, and it appears there will not be enough for Senators before the discussion is at an end.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That five hundred additional copies of the bill (S. No. 1194) in relation to the distribution of the unappropriated moneys of the Geneva award, and the proposed amendments thereto, be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. ANTHONY. I have no objection to that resolution and to other resolutions for printing; but the Senate is probably aware that the appropriation for the public printing is nearly exhausted and will probably be entirely exhausted to-morrow, and on Monday we shall have no money to go on with the printing, as it is made a penal offense for the Public Printer to subject the Government to any obligation unless the money is appropriated.

Mr. HOAR. How will that affect the RECORD?

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not think the RECORD will appear on Tuesday morning unless an appropriation bill is passed to supply the deficiency in the public printing.

Mr. THURMAN. That will be a very great calamity. Such as has never befallen the country in my time. [Laughter.] I do not know how we shall stand up under it.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand reports are now printed only up to No. 322, and we cannot get any reports later than that.

WINNEBAGO INDIANS.

Mr. HARRIS. Now I demand the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The call of the Calendar will be proceeded with.

The bill (S. No. 323) for the relief of the Winnebago Indians in Wisconsin, and to aid them to obtain subsistence by agricultural pursuits, and to promote their civilization, was announced as in order.

Mr. THURMAN. The subject of that bill is not entirely a stranger to me. Some years ago the Winnebagoes of Wisconsin were removed west and settled in Nebraska, if I remember aright—

Mr. TELLER. It is impossible to hear the Senator.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is unable to hear the Senator from Ohio, owing to loud conversation carried on by Senators in their seats.

Mr. THURMAN. Some years ago, I was saying, a treaty was made with the Winnebagoes of Wisconsin, by which they agreed to remove west of the Mississippi River, and most of them did so, but a portion of them refused to leave their homes in Wisconsin, and remained there. They ceased to have any connection whatever with the tribe, and the tribe, that was then settled west of the Mississippi River, and I think within the limits of Nebraska, refused to recognize them as any longer members of the tribe, or to allow them to receive any portion of the annuities payable by the Government.

It seemed to me upon the facts of the case as it was argued here several years ago on a bill introduced by the Senator from Wisconsin not now a member of this body [Mr. Howe] to remove those Indians remaining in Wisconsin west of the Mississippi, that in point of fact they had abandoned their tribal relations and had come under the jurisdiction of the United States, and were under the fourteenth amendment citizens of the United States, and I protested against their forcible removal from the State of Wisconsin; but that Senator's influence was so great that he carried his bill, and in my judgment the United States forcibly removed so many citizens of the United States from their domicile in the State of Wisconsin and took them west of the Mississippi River. They did not like it, and they got back one after another, and now this bill is for their relief after they have come back from the forced exodus imposed by the Government of the United States, and this bill undertakes to say that part of the annuities due to the Winnebagoes as a tribe shall go to these men who have utterly abandoned their tribal relations.

The subject, Mr. President, is too large a subject to be disposed of under the Anthony rule, and therefore for the first time I believe in my life, I will object to the consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. With the consent of the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. LOGAN,] who reported this bill from the Committee on Indian Affairs, I give notice that I will call it up at an early day, when the Senate can consider it at length.

Mr. THURMAN. I will help the Senator to do it. I do not know but that I may be for the bill when I come to study it. I never heard of it until this moment, but it is an old subject with me, and I will help the Senator to take it up at any convenient time—when it can be fully discussed, I mean.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I introduced this bill during the Forty-fifth Congress. It was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, was fully considered by that committee, was reported favorably from that committee by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] who at that time was chairman of the committee. It was not acted on by the Senate for want of time. It was reported late in the session! I again introduced the bill during the extra session of the Forty-sixth Congress, and again it was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and during the present session it has been reported favorably from that committee by the Senator from Illinois. A written report was submitted by the Senator from Iowa when he reported the bill from the Committee on Indian Affairs, and a written report was also submitted by the Senator from Illinois who recently reported the same bill from that committee. This bill has the emphatic approval of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill has gone over. The Secretary will report the next bill on the Calendar.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT DENVER.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 1269) for the erection of a public building at Denver, Colorado; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to procure a proper site and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults, in the city of Denver, Colorado, for the accommodation of the United States district and circuit courts, post-office, land-office, and other Government offices in that city, at a cost not exceeding $200,000, including cost of site, which site shall be such as will afford an open space between the building authorized and any other building of not less than forty feet; and the sum of $75,000 is appropriated for the purpose herein mentioned.

Mr. HILL, of Colorado. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill by striking out all of the bill after the word "States," in the eighteenth line. The effect of the provision in the bill which I move to strike out will be to prevent any action to carry out the object of the bill until the Legislature of the State of Colorado shall meet, and this is not necessary to protect the interest of the Government. The enabling act under which Colorado was admitted provided that the constitutional convention should provide, by an ordinance irrevocable without the consent of the United States, "that no taxes shall be imposed by the State on lands or property therein belonging to or which may hereafter be purchased by the United States."

The constitutional convention accordingly adopted an ordinance, as follows:

That no tax shall be imposed by the State on lands or property therein belonging to or which may hereafter be purchased by the United States.

That this ordinance shall be irrevocable without the consent of the United States and the people of the State of Colorado.

This clause is, therefore, unnecessary to protect the interest of the United States, and I hope the amendment I offer will be adopted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator's colleague [Mr. TELLER] gave notice of an amendment which will be reported.

Mr. TELLER. I would rather hear the amendment proposed by my colleague.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks the Senator's amendment was to perfect matter which the other Senator proposes to strike out, and therefore it is first in order.

Mr. TELLER. My proposition was to strike out the word "nor," in line 18, and insert in lieu thereof:

And no expenditure of money shall be made on the building proposed to be erected on said site.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That comes within the matter which the Senator's colleague proposes to strike out, and is entitled to priority.

Mr. TELLER. If the clause be so amended, and then the Senate should see fit to strike out the whole clause, I should be entirely satisfied with that, which I understand is what the amendment proposed by my colleague aims at. But if the Senate should conclude not to strike out the whole clause, then I should like to have it amended in this way.

At the last session of the Forty-fifth Congress, on my motion, the Senate inserted in an appropriation bill an appropriation of $50,000 for the purchase of a site and the commencement of a building at Denver. I suppose that if that money had been then expended it would have bought nearly if not quite double the land that the same amount of money will buy to-day; and if this bill passes as it came from the committee, we shall be compelled to wait nearly a year longer before the Legislature will be in session before we can provide for the non-taxing of this property; and in the mean time property is not gradually but very rapidly going up. As a matter of economy, it would be very much better to get the land now, and the Government will suffer nothing by buying the land speedily, but on the contrary will make great gain, and then it will not commence the construction of the building until after the State relinquishes the right to tax. I should like to have it so amended; but as near as I can understand from the noise and confusion here what it is, I hope that the motion of my colleague will prevail.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair then understands the Senator temporarily to withdraw his own amendment.

Mr. TELLER. I will if I lose nothing by it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You can move it again.

Mr. TELLER. Then I withdraw it until after my colleague's amendment is acted on.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. HILL,] which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all of the bill after the word "States," in line 18, as follows:

Nor until the State of Colorado shall duly release and relinquish to the United States the right to tax or in any way assess said site or the property of the United States that may be thereon, and shall cede jurisdiction over the same during the time that the United States shall remain the owner thereof.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not think I should have any objection to striking out the tax provision after what has been read in the enabling act and in the constitution and ordinance of the State of Colorado, but that only relates to the right to tax; the question of jurisdiction is still left open, and it is proposed by this amendment that the United States shall proceed to buy this property, and set up its courts and post-office, and so forth, on it without having jurisdiction ceded to it by the State. That I am entirely opposed to upon grounds which it is quite unnecessary to state, because it appears to me that they are obvious to everybody.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. HILL.]

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Mr. President—

Mr. EDMUNDS. I was about to ask whether the question was divisible so as to take it on the tax part first, and then on the jurisdiction part next.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Coming as this bill does from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, I take the liberty to say to the Senate that this subject has been considered in that committee, and for my part I have no hesitation in saying that I see no practical benefit that can possibly result from this jurisdiction clause in this or any similar bills. It never has been, as I am told, customary in the past although I think there is a general statute on the subject, but the Constitution in itself is full enough.

I understand the organic law to be that if a piece of land is purchased within the limits of a State for any public purpose, with the consent of the State, without any act of cession formally made, such purchase vests eo instanti, as we lawyers term it, jurisdiction over the locus in quo in the United States. In some cases this cession of jurisdiction may not be obtainable at the time. It might be important to proceed to the construction of a building long in advance of the time fixed by the local law for the meeting of the Legislature which is to make the cession. In some States, as in mine, there is a general law on this subject authorizing the governor of the State to cede jurisdiction to the General Government over places and localities required by the Federal Government for Federal purposes.

The Constitution reads as follows:

The Congress shall have power to exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever over such district (not exceeding ten miles square) as may, by cession of particular States, and the acceptance of Congress, become the seat of the Government of the United States, and to exercise like authority over all places purchased by the consent of the Legislature of the State in which the same shall be, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dock-yards, and other needful buildings.

In the case of arsenals and dock-yards I think it has been usual to cede jurisdiction; but in the case of an ordinary building for post-office purposes, for a custom-house, or anything of that kind, it has never been thought necessary to exact a cession of jurisdiction.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair reminds the Senator that the morning hour has expired.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the Senator from Florida will be allowed to proceed and finish his remarks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the Senator from Florida will proceed.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President—

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from Florida is only to proceed and finish his remarks. That is always a courtesy extended to every Senator who is speaking. It is not to finish the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. To that I have no objection.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. In the case of fortifications, navy-yards, and extensive public works, I think it is all-important that the jurisdiction should be ceded. I know that it was ceded in my State over the navy-yards near my home, and that within that locality the inhabitants to-day, according to one view taken of the Constitution, have no political rights whatever. They are within the sole and exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, just as much so as if they resided within the District of Columbia. The jurisdiction contemplated by the Constitution is exclusive jurisdiction within the body of the State and the erecting of a distinct governmental authority within the State, taking under its control the people and changing their civil and political status. I will give an illustration of it to the Senator from Vermont. There are residing within what is known as the naval reservation in my own county nearly two thousand people. The land upon which they live is known as the naval reserve. The State of Florida, under a general law enacted for the purpose, through its governor ceded exclusive jurisdiction to the United States for the purpose of a dock-yard. Those people live there to-day; they have got their habitations and their homes and all the surroundings of civilization. They have no rules of property. They are troubled at times in regard to the rule that shall govern the passing of estates, questions of inheritance, of intestacy; and since I have been here the Secretary of the Navy has been appealed to to act as a judge of probate to settle the estate of a citizen living upon the naval reserve, and in another case he was asked to authorize the commanding officer to dispossess by a sort of naval ejectment a person who held an adverse position against another. I do not quarrel with the jurisdiction at all, and a year or so ago I brought forth a bill here to confine that jurisdiction within the walls of the navy-yard and not extend it outside, as it now extends. In cases of that kind there may be some necessity for such a jurisdiction, but I can see none in the case of a custom-house or a post-office, and I shall certainly vote against that provision.

Mr. TELLER. I do not desire to discuss the question, but I ask the Senator who has the appropriation bill in charge if he will give us a few moments. I think we can pass this bill soon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to continuing the consideration of this bill?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Let it be subject to a call for the regular order.

Mr. TELLER. Of course.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is not necessary to dispute the proposition of the Senator from Florida as to the propriety of rectifying matters at Pensacola. That is one thing, and I leave that apart; I now propose to attend to this thing which provides for the purchase by the United States of a suitable site for a building at Denver, Colorado, which shall accommodate the United States district and circuit courts, the post-office, land office, and other Government offices in that city. It is not therefore an effort to obtain a territory in which people are to reside and thereby to lose their political rights; but it is an effort to obtain a place for the strict governmental operations to go on; and the question is whether, according to the Constitution of the United States or the supremacy of the United States as a government, it is to proceed contrary to all precedent to erect a building of this character and establish its courts in a place where the authority of the State, exercised through a county judge and a sheriff or a constable, can invade that building at their free will and pleasure and take possession, on process that calls for it, of any public document of the United States—

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Well, if the Senator will pardon me a moment, I should like for once in my life to get a consecutive sentence. I left off speaking about taking a public document of the United States, I believe; and so I say, are we to allow a State to take a witness or the judge himself off the bench in response to some State process? I for one will never vote for any such proposition at all. I hold that the United States is entitled to absolute political supremacy in the places where it carries on its political and governmental operations, and I believe the whole history of the Government has been that in all such cases the States have been called upon, before we proceed to the expense of establishing permanent quarters for courts, &c., to give up their jurisdiction over that building.

Mr. HOAR and Mr. JONES of Florida addressed the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will yield to any one who can get the floor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I agree with what the Senator from Vermont says to a great extent; but I wish to know if the courts of the United States have not within themselves inherent authority in the exercise of their jurisdiction to protect themselves against an invasion from any quarter.

Mr. HOAR. I believe the floor was awarded to me; if so I will say a word. I rose to disagree with the Senator from Vermont.

I have no doubt, Mr. President, that the absolute safety of all the processes of the United States freedom from all State jurisdiction or control, from being meddled with from any quarter, can be secured by proper provision; but I am opposed, if the matter can be helped, to creating in the principal cities of all the States of this country these little Alsatis into which no State process can penetrate—a post-office building or a court-house building, to which, of course, the public must have the right of free resort; into which if a criminal flees at night he is secure from police officers; in which if a fraudulent marriage ceremony is performed the State penalty, the State law, is without power.

It seems to me that the United States document, the United States judge, the United States witness, the United States process, the United States record are secure everywhere from State process, not because of the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States territorially in the court-house or the place where they are kept, but because of the character of the witness or document or officer or record, which protects them from interference by any other authority whatever. The United States witness is just as secure on his way to the court-house as he is in the court-house, if he is needed. The record of the United States court is just as secure out of the court-house in which the United States have exclusive jurisdiction as in it, in my judgment.

It seems to me, therefore, that while the evil which the Senator from Vermont suggests can be avoided, and is avoided by the very character of the matter or officer which he supposes to be interfered with, on the other hand this policy which has gone on now for a great while, of building up these little places in the midst of populous cities without (for all ordinary practical purposes of governing the city) any law whatever prevailing in them, ought to be discontinued.

Mr. BLAINE. Has it not always—

Mr. ALLISON. Regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa demands the regular order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the Senator from Iowa will wait a minute. Mr. BLAINE. I know it has been the habit in the little city I reside in, where there is a United States arsenal which embraces thirty or forty acres of ground round about, to serve State process there. The reservation was made so that the process of the State of Maine can be served on that ground just as freely as it can be elsewhere.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa demands the regular order, which is the unfinished business.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I appeal to the Senator from Iowa to let me have a minute for I had not finished; I was interrupted in what I wanted to say. I had stated only a certain portion of the objections I had on this ground, and then was interrupted by the Senator from Massachusetts—

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Vermont said he yielded the floor to whoever was entitled to it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; I did not say exactly that; but I will not waste the time of the Senator from Iowa in disputing with the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. My colleague and others got up at the same time I did.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will not waste time in disputing with the Senator from Massachusetts as to what extent I did yield. I did not rise to say that I had not yielded the floor to the Senator from Massachusetts to speak, but to say that I had not half concluded the points to which I wished to call the attention of the Senate when I was interrupted on half a dozen sides and I said I would yield. So I will not waste any time about that.

Now the Senator from Massachusetts says that every court of the United States can protect itself. Well, when it is exerting its functions, it can; but it cannot very easily protect itself or its officers or officers against invasion when it is not sitting and when it is not there, by any process known outside of the State of Massachusetts. There may be some process there that I am not advised about. A postmaster of the United States cannot protect himself or his papers against an invasion of State process, and he ought not to in a great many cases; but take the city of Boston, for instance; suppose a search-warrant by some police magistrate was issued directing a constable or a policeman, whichever exercises the authority in Boston, to search the desks in the custom-house in Boston to see if he cannot find a stolen paper or whatever it is that is mentioned in the warrant; would that be exactly the sort of thing for the United States to submit to? I think everybody would say no. I think everybody would agree that a custom-house of the United States should be free from that species of invasion under color of State process; but it is perfectly competent at the same time, as the Senator from Maine has said, and it exists in many of the States, in these sessions to reserve a limited authority to serve process against persons. It has been found, whether it has been reserved or has not been reserved, in every State in this Union that there is never any difficulty in serving State process. If a man goes into the custom-house, running away from a constable in the city of Baltimore to-day, and the police go in and carry him out, and the sovereign authority of the United States consents to it by its acquiescence, it does not undertake to defend against that act; it is perfectly glad to have it done; but it has the authority to guard against abuses and pretenses which enable sometimes a State under critical and difficult circumstances to undertake to take possession of the property of the United States, and to interfere with its operations.

That is the point which the Constitution referred to when it provided for exclusive dominion over places of this character. It did not intend to provide that the United States in any department of its government carrying it on might not acquiesce in the exertion of the power of the process of the State to get persons who had gone into what the Senator from Massachusetts calls an Alsatia. I did not know that these places had become such, but it perhaps illustrates his idea. There has never been any practical difficulty in that respect; but the question is whether the United States is to preserve to itself the authority to defend its own possession and its own officers, executive, judicial, administrative, and of every kind, and its own papers and its own possession of its public buildings. That is the point. There is not any practical difficulty in a time of good order and good feeling, even if you have an exclusive grant without any limitation or reservation at all, and there never has been and there never will be; but the question is whether as a principle and as a right we are to give it up and expose ourselves entirely in all respects to the exertion of the power of the State. That is the question.

Thanking the Senator from Iowa, I have now finished.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Iowa allow me half a minute?

Mr. GARLAND. I wish to ask the Senator from Iowa to yield to me for one minute only to make a motion.

Mr. ALLISON. In reference to the matter which will come up regularly at the next meeting of the Senate?

Mr. GARLAND. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Senator from Iowa to allow me half a minute.

Mr. ALLISON. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas, and I will also yield half a minute to the Senator from Massachusetts.

TITLES AT HOT SPRINGS.

Mr. GARLAND. This morning I made a request of the Senator from Pennsylvania to withdraw his motion that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to Monday. I did that in order to have the Hot Springs bill considered to-morrow. Now I wish to make a change in my motion, at the suggestion of the Senator from Rhode Island and several others, and to move that the bill (H. R. No. 4244) for the establishment of titles in Hot Springs, and for other purposes, be made the special order immediately after disposing of the appropriation bills in charge of the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from West Virginia, and I hope the Senate will grant me this request.

Mr. DAWES. I do not like to interfere with the request made by the Senator from Arkansas; but the Senator will recollect that next after these bills stands the Geneva award bill on which the Senator himself has the floor.

Mr. GARLAND. I will yield the floor to the Senator from Massachusetts or anybody else on that; but this bill has been shoved off—

Mr. DAWES. The Senator will allow me. I do not want to object to the Senator's request, because it refers to a matter of special local interest to him. I only call to the Senator's mind the position of the bill upon which he has the floor, and I ask him not to crowd that bill any further than is absolutely necessary, because it would do the bill no good for the Senator from Arkansas to yield the floor to me on it if he had a special assignment which would precede it. The country would very much more desire to hear from the Senator from Arkansas on the Geneva award than from me. It was not for the purpose of hoping myself to do any good to the bill, but to urge the Senator himself to get up the Geneva award and address the Senate on that subject as he has the floor on it, that I made the suggestion.

Mr. GARLAND. This bill takes up much more of my time than the Geneva award and all the other bills I have had any connection with. It is not merely a local matter, but the United States is interested in the Hot Springs bill; and I do ask Senators, for heaven's sake, if not for mine, give me a chance to have this bill disposed of. I never made such a request before of the Senate, and I reckon it will be the last one of the kind I shall make.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suggest to the Senator from Arkansas, inasmuch as I am opposed to special orders, that he give notice so that the Senate may consider it meantime and look up the measure—notice that immediately after these appropriation bills are disposed of he will move the Hot Springs bill. He will then be recognized for that purpose, and the Senate can decide whether they will take it up or not. I should vote with him to take it up.

Mr. GARLAND. The gentlemen objecting to its consideration now will object to it then; but if the Senator from Vermont thinks anything will be accomplished by that, I will give that notice, at the same time not believing it is going to amount to anything if the Senate is indisposed to consider the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Arkansas indicate the particular appropriation bill he wishes to follow?

Mr. GARLAND. I mean the fortification bill and the star-service bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. And the bill relating to permanent appropriations?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh, no, that is a general bill. I suggest to the Senator from Arkansas not to except the bill as to permanent appropriations, which is not one of the kind of appropriation bills that fall within the practice of the Senate as entitled to precedence. That is a bill of an important general character.

Mr. GARLAND. I suggest, then, that after the consideration of the two appropriation bills, one in charge of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] and the other of the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WALLACE,] I will move that the Senate take up the Hot Springs bill for disposition.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will recognize the Senator at that time.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. ALLISON. Now I yield half a minute to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. I withdraw my application; I will not trespass upon the Senate.

Mr. BLAINE. I want a whole minute.

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask permission of the Senator from Iowa to renew the motion—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. To whom does the Senator from Iowa yield?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not yield to any Senator at this time.

Mr. BLAINE. Will not the honorable Senator allow me to ask a question?

Mr. ALLISON. In a moment, when I get the bill up.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The unfinished business is House bill No. 2787, the fortification appropriation bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. Now I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Let it be understood that we are to finish these two appropriation bills to-day.

Mr. ANTHONY. I have no objection to that understanding.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island.

The motion was agreed to.

THE GENEVA AWARD.

Mr. BLAINE. I desire to ask the honorable Senator from Ohio, with the permission of the Senator from Iowa, at what time he expects to call the attention of the Senate to the Geneva award bill.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not know how many times I have been asked that question. I am asked it all around; it is not original with the Senator from Maine. I suppose I must say a word with regard to this Geneva award bill, as I am appealed to so often about it.

The Senate is aware that the two Houses of Congress have never yet been able to agree as to the distribution of the balance of the Geneva award now in the Treasury, and therefore there has been no distribution of that money. This has certainly not been any fault of mine, and I do not say it is the fault of anybody. I certainly have thought, and have expressed myself perhaps more strongly than it was decorous in me to do, that the Government was guilty of gross injustice in not distributing this money; but I do not say it is the fault of anybody. It is the result of a difference of opinion among members of this body and of the other House of Congress, opinions that we are bound to presume are honestly entertained and which so far have not been reconciled.

Last winter the Judiciary Committee of the Senate undertook again to try and frame a bill that should meet the acceptance of both Houses of Congress, and after a great deal of consideration reported a bill through its chairman to the Senate. He reported it, as it was his place to do, although personally he did not approve the bill. The shortness of the session and the debates which sprang up on the appropriation bills prevented that bill from being acted on. At the extra session the subject was not acted upon because there seemed to be a universal understanding in both Houses that no legislation of a general character should be taken up at that session except appropriation bills, and therefore nothing was done. At the present session, the Judiciary Committee being composed in great part of new members, some of whom had never had occasion to look into this subject at all, the matter was taken up and underwent much study before we finally came to a vote upon it in that committee. Just as soon as the members had made up their opinions, we reported a bill. It was reported, if my recollection is right, on the second day of February. I gave notice that on the next Monday I would ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of that bill. It was necessary to give some time that Senators might see what the bill was, and it was also very proper that the bill should be printed and go abroad, that those who were interested in its provisions, either for or against what it proposed to enact, should also have an opportunity to study it and make known their views, and a week was a very short time. I gave notice, however, that I would on that day week, which would be the 9th day of February, ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of that bill. But before that time, what was called the 5 per cent. bill was taken up by the Senate, and when Monday came that 5 per cent. bill was the unfinished business, and of course it was impossible for me to get up the Geneva award bill for the action of the Senate. I did, however, succeed in getting the Senator who had the 5 per cent. bill in charge to lay it aside informally in order that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DAVIS] might address the Senate upon the Geneva award bill. Then afterward by a vote of the body the Senate saw fit to take up the Fitz-John Porter bill, as it has been called, and that has occupied our time ever since, more or less.

Yesterday, in view of what I confess was a surprising thing to me, that the debate on that bill seemed to be taking somewhat of a party character, that it threatened to be prolonged to a most inconvenient length very contrary to what I think might have been reasonably expected—for I did suppose when it was taken up that a bill which simply was to inquire whether injustice had been done to one of the most gallant officers that ever was in the Army of the United States, and whose great services to his country before this accusation was made against him were recognized from one end of the land to the other—I did suppose that there would be no party in the discussion of a bill like that, but that everybody would be anxious to consider it on its merits and to decide upon it as speedily as could be done with justice to the Government and justice to the officer accused. But I saw on yesterday what seemed to threaten a debate of indefinite duration upon that bill; and therefore I gave notice that if that was to be the case, if we were to have a month's debate and of the character that had taken place in some respects upon that bill, then

I should feel bound to antagonize the Geneva award bill at a much shorter period; and I say now that when the appropriation bills are over, all that are ready to be reported, it is my purpose to leave it to the Senate to decide whether or not it will proceed with the consideration of the Geneva award bill. I shall move the Senate to proceed to its consideration, and the Senate will decide the question for itself.

One word more. If there is any Senator here who is of the opinion that a majority of this Senate are opposed to the bill reported by the Judiciary Committee, it is perfectly competent, and it not only is competent but it is proper for him to move to postpone all previous orders and take up that bill. I will not have that bill in my charge one moment after a majority of the Senate shall decide against its main features. I hope that will never be the case; but should that be the case, then the bill passes wholly out of my charge. And therefore I say now that if any Senator here thinks that a majority of the Senate are opposed to the main features of that bill, I will thank him to try that question, and to move to postpone all prior orders and take up that bill, and if he can carry a substitute for the bill or put an amendment upon it that will defeat the main features of the bill, then I will surrender the charge of the bill to him.

Mr. BLAINE. The honorable Senator from Ohio knows better than I that the courtesy of the Senate does not permit, in the stage which the Geneva award bill now occupies, any Senator to come in and assume to take charge of it. Therefore we must all wait on the motions of the honorable Senator from Ohio.

I desire to say a single word in regard to his statement about the difference between the two Houses always defeating the disposition of the remainder of that fund. I think I am correct in stating that the Senate has never passed a bill on that question at all; it has simply said "nay" to the House propositions; it has simply defeated the House propositions. It has never yet sent to the House a solitary proposition touching the disposition of that fund. The honorable Senator from Massachusetts on my right [Mr. HOAR] endeavored at the outset of this session to induce the Senate to move promptly and to take the initiative and to send to the House some proposition on which an ultimate agreement might be reached.

But the Senator from Ohio says that a good deal of delay occurred because of the youthful nature and the inexperience of some members of the Judiciary Committee. When we read the names of the members of that committee, of course the whole Senate will recognize that they are a juvenile, an immature, and an inexperienced body of men! Mr. THURMAN is chairman, and its other members are Mr. McDONALD, Mr. BAYARD, Mr. GARLAND, Mr. LAMAR, Mr. DAVIS of Illinois, Mr. EDMUNDS, Mr. CONKLING, Mr. CARPENTER. I do not know which one of these inexperienced Senators it was that the delay was occasioned by.

Mr. THURMAN. I did not use the word "inexperienced" or anything like it, but simply the word "new." I said there were some new members put on the committee who had not had occasion to examine this question before, and I think that might be the case with an old and an experienced man as well as with one who was inexperienced.

Mr. ALLISON. I cannot yield for a discussion of the Geneva award.

Mr. BLAINE. We are not discussing the Geneva award, much less Fitz-John Porter, which case the honorable Senator from Ohio injected a speech about in the middle of what he was saying about the Geneva award; but I have got from him the assurance, which I am sure my constituents will hear with great satisfaction, that he will urge the bill upon the attention of the Senate in some season to ground the hope on at least that it will reach the House in time to be considered by that body, and that the House will not be forced to do as the Senate has heretofore chosen to do, give a simple negative to a proposition from the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. I insist on the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa calls for the unfinished business of yesterday.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 2787) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations be reported and acted upon as they are reached in the reading of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. To which the Chair hears no objection. The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 3, after the words "one hundred" and before "thousand," to insert "and fifty;" so as to make the paragraph read:

That the sum of $150,000 be, and the same is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the protection, preservation, and repair of fortifications and other works of defense, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, the same to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 16, after the word "rifles," to strike out "two hundred and twenty-five" and insert "and the manufacture of four improved breech-loading twelve-inch rifled guns, four hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For the armament of sea-coast fortifications, including heavy guns and howitzers for flank defense, carriages, projectiles, fuses, powder, and implements, their trial and proof, and all necessary expenses incident thereto, and for machine guns, including the conversion of smooth-bore cannon into rifles, and the manufacture of four improved breech-loading twelve-inch rifled guns, $400,000.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear some explanation of the necessity for the large increase proposed.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say in response to the inquiry made by the Senator from Missouri that this subject was very carefully examined by the Committee on Appropriations, and in making such examination we found that at this moment we have but one of this large class of guns. The Ordnance Department seemed to be very anxious to have the appropriation increased, in order that they may convert, as they are now converting, eleven-inch smooth-bore guns into eight-inch rifled guns, and also convert fifteen-inch smooth-bore guns into eleven-inch rifled guns. The conversion of the eleven-inch smooth-bore into eight-inch rifles has been progressing for some years, and small appropriations have been made from time to time for this purpose. I believe it is admitted on all hands that these eight-inch rifles are ineffectual as a means of defense of our sea-coast. Indeed it was stated by the Chief of Engineers and by the Chief of Ordnance that at this moment there is no armament at any of our fortifications sufficient to defend our sea-coast cities.

After a full consideration of this subject the committee believed that it was wise to manufacture new guns as well as to convert the fifteen-inch smooth-bores into eleven-inch rifled guns. Therefore we propose the amendment, which if adopted will authorize the manufacture of four new twelve-inch guns at a cost of about $40,000 apiece, and still enable the Ordnance Department to go on making conversions as heretofore. That is the judgment of the Committee on Appropriations after a careful examination of this subject.

I suppose I need not say, what is perfectly well known to every Senator here, that at this moment we have no guns that are sufficient to protect our sea-coast harbors; and it is only a question of public policy whether we shall enter upon the manufacture of guns necessary for these defenses. The estimate of the Department is that these guns will cost about $40,000 each, and therefore there can be manufactured four of them with the additional appropriation proposed by the committee.

Mr. KERNAN. Mr. President, I have listened attentively to the explanation of this amendment. My information is that our seaboard harbors are in a very defenseless condition; an iron-clad could enter now either of them. If a war should occur, which I hope and believe will not occur, our cities on these harbors would be liable to great detriment. The harbor of New York, I am informed, is entirely defenseless against an ordinary modern iron-clad for the want of guns and other apparatus.

I am glad that the committee has increased this appropriation. Indeed, my information is that it should be made much larger. I think the estimate of the Ordnance Department is much larger, but the committee have increased it above the appropriation made by the House. I am in favor of the increase.

I avail myself of this occasion to have read as part of my remarks a memorial from the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, which was recently presented to the Senate and is before the Committee on Military Affairs. It is not long, and I ask that it be read, as it states the opinion of a body of men in whom I have great confidence, and also states the condition of the defenses of that important harbor, calling the attention of Congress to the subject in order that there may be action to properly guard us in the event that there should be a war with any naval power.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. COCKRELL in the chair.) The memorial will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Memorial for an increased appropriation for the fortifications in New York Harbor.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

May it please your honorable bodies:

It is respectfully represented by the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, that New York Harbor is completely defenseless, in case of war, against iron-clad war ships of modern type, a single one of which might enter it with impunity, and do incalculable injury to public and private property, besides inflicting a well-nigh paralyzing blow to the resources of the nation.

From five to six hundred rifled cannon are immediately required for existing fortifications in the harbor, mostly of larger caliber than any possessed by the United States, which cannot be provided by the Ordnance Department for lack of necessary appropriations for the purpose by Congress, although such have been urgently recommended by the executive government, in view of the utterly unprotected condition of our sea-coast.

The appropriation recommended by the House of Representatives in the fortification appropriation bill, lately passed by that branch of Congress, is entirely inadequate for the purpose for which the Chief of Ordnance has asked $950,000 for expenditure during the next fiscal year. It is intended to be sufficient only to defray the cost of, at most, thirty-five comparatively small rifled guns, with which, in case of need, to defend our thousands of miles of sea-coast against metal-plated steamships, armed with cannon throwing projectiles of over a ton weight, with a range of nine miles.

At this rate of annual expenditure it would take half a century to provide an effectual armament merely for the harbor of New York, should the whole of the funds appropriated be applied to that purpose.

Great cannon are required, such as have been produced by Great Britain and the European continental powers; and it would take years to provide all those needed for New York Harbor alone, if all the available gun-making machinery of the country and unlimited money were to be placed at the disposition of the Ordnance Department.

Great Britain, with the most powerful fleet in existence, has expended upon the defenses of nine of her harbors $35,000,000, and is still actively engaged in the work. She expends about $10,000,000 annually for new cannon.

Similar liberal expenditures for the like purpose are imperatively called for on the part of the United States, for until sufficient weapons of defense are provided, the chief commercial ports of the nation are exposed to capture so soon as war is declared, and our Government thus deprived of most of its revenues, which are derived from these sources; meanwhile our excessive weakness to resist attack is in itself sufficient to invite imposition and insult to the nation, and renders it powerless to resent injuries or extend protection to our countrymen at home or abroad.

For such reasons, and especially for the protection of the immense amount of national property of various kinds collected in New York City, and of the commerce and wealth from which so large an amount of the Federal revenues are drawn, independent of local considerations, it is pre-eminently important that this harbor shall be put in an efficient state of defense, and your memorialists therefore pray that an appropriation be made from the national Treasury of sums adequate to enable the Federal Government to provide, with all practical expedition, such heavy rifled ordnance and other protecting weapons as are deemed necessary by the Bureau of Ordnance and Engineers. And your memorialists will ever pray.

NEW YORK, February 5, 1880.

Mr. KERNAN. The memorial states, I believe, correctly the defenseless condition of all our harbors, and especially of New York Harbor, and the necessity of protection. I think it would be wise for us each year to appropriate larger sums than is here proposed to provide rifled cannon and other means of defending our harbors. It is certainly wise to provide now against war with any country having a naval force and armament.

I am in favor of this amendment proposed by the committee, and I certainly would move to increase the sum to the amount asked by the Ordnance Department except that I am informed that the committee are unwilling to favor a larger appropriation, as they do not think we would be able to have it adopted by the other House.

I wished to call attention to this subject and to express my opinion of what is necessary and proper. I shall vote for the amendment; indeed, I would move to increase the amount proposed by the committee, except that there is no probability that the increased amount would be voted.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I hope the amendment will be adopted. What has been said by the Senator from New York and read at the desk with respect to the harbor of New York is true of the harbor of every commercial city in the Union. All these harbors are exposed now to not only the great powers of Europe but to the minor powers. Third-rate powers in Europe are in possession of ships of war that can at a distance of seven miles from any of the commercial cities of this Union send shells weighing a ton into the midst of the population of any of these cities and lay them waste. Our fortifications as they have been constructed in times past afford no protection against the war vessels of this character built by other nations.

Great Britain is not only spending the millions of dollars indicated in the communication read at the desk for the defense of her own harbors, but she is at the same time arming herself, and all the powers of Europe that have any force upon the ocean are arming themselves in a way to command our commercial cities all along the coast, Boston, as well as New York and Philadelphia. An armed vessel of no greater power than Italy is now upon the ocean can come within reach of the city of Philadelphia and out of reach of any fortifications there existing, and shell that city to destruction in a few hours, and we have no protection against it. In company with the torpedoes that are being improved and perfected, this system of heavy guns at fortifications is absolutely necessary to protect the commercial cities upon the coast.

The guns that are contemplated by the amendment cannot be constructed except at great expense, I am aware, and at great cost of time. There is no such thing as proper preparation for such an emergency after the emergency arises. The guns must be prepared beforehand or not prepared at all. Any trouble with a foreign nation is, under the existing condition of things, a matter of sudden arising. It is not a matter which takes as much time as heretofore it has done. It begins and it ends in a few weeks, or at most in a few months; whereas the construction of these guns costs the time of six months or a year. Unless we begin their construction we had better never undertake any more the expenditure of money for the defense of our harbors.

I do not know particularly, because in no region of the country where I am are any of the manufacturing establishments where these guns are constructed, but I understand there are but two manufacturing establishments in existence in this country where they can be constructed. If they are permitted to go down and go out of existence those who use their skill in the construction of these guns will pass into other employments, and it will be years before an establishment sufficient to construct them can be reared and men gathered together to perform the work the necessity for which may be upon us in an hour or a day. It would be quite useless to ever think of protecting our harbors against any emergency if we wait until the emergency arises.

Therefore, it is in the interest of the commercial cities upon the coast especially, but of the whole country as well, that we should look at the question whether we will continue to protect our harbors by fortification, in conjunction with torpedoes and other modern methods of defense, or whether we will abandon them and trust to Providence to protect them against any emergency that may arise. I hope that the amendment will prevail.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, the wisdom and importance of precautions touching the defenses of our harbors, is so manifest that no argument need be addressed to it. But every argument which might be made in that behalf, would, it seems to me, fail entirely to recommend this amendment. There are several ways, three perhaps, acknowledged of defending a harbor. One is by coast defenses, and it is to such defenses that this amendment applies; another is by floating batteries of some species; and a third, if that be a third, by torpedo boats or other appliances for the use of torpedoes. As I say, this amendment applies to the augmentation of coast fortifications, that is, of fortifications on the shore speaking to the harbor or the sea.

It is proposed that four breech-loading, twelve-inch rifled cannon be cast. Where are they to be put and how are they to be used? Are they to be put into the coast fortifications of the harbor of New York? No, sir, there is no coast fortification which will receive one of these guns. The dimensions of the guns and the nature of the coast defenses are repugnant to each other. No use can be made of either of these guns in the harbor of New York except to plant it on the parapet, place it above the fortifications somewhere, to the end that it may speak as any gun may speak out of doors and uncovered. I am right about that, I think.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the Senator is right. I will say, if the Senator will allow me, that the Chief of Engineers who was before us upon this identical question did say that these twelve-inch guns could be used effectively en barbette or over parapets, and that they were important and essential to be used at four places, one of them at Fort Schuyler, another at Sandy Hook, these two being in the neighborhood of New York, another in the neighborhood of Fortress Monroe, and another to protect the harbor of San Francisco, at or near Mare Island, I believe, in California; so that these four guns were designated not only with reference to their utility, but with reference to the exact places where they would be put in case they were manufactured.

Mr. CONKLING. Surely the Committee on Appropriations did not need the Chief of Engineers to tell them that room could be found for a twelve-inch gun out of doors, either at Fortress Monroe, at Governor's Island, or anywhere under the sky above us. I once heard of a man who was so tall that he could not stand up out of doors, but I never heard of a gun so large that you could not find room for it out of doors. I say, and I venture to express the confident belief that neither the Chief of Engineers nor anybody else will gainsay it, that there is no fortification in the harbor of New York which can receive one of these twelve-inch guns. Of course, using the phrase of the Senator, it may be planted en barbette, using the equivalent phrase that I do you may put it on the parapet, as you may put it anywhere else uncovered out of doors; there is no doubt about it.

The facts to which the chamber of commerce has called the attention of the Senate, and which in general terms are very familiar to the Senate, I submit demand a very different answer from this. I do not mean to deny that it may be very well to cast four twelve-inch guns, to be used as occasion may require; but to do that as a provision professing to be adequate to arm the harbors of this country, to arm even the single harbor of New York, is, I submit, very illogical and very insufficient. If the theory of harbor defense which utilizes coast fortifications is to be adopted, then two things are necessary in that harbor and every other; first, to adapt the coast fortifications to the reception, accommodation, and handling of large guns, or else to construct new ones so adapted, and then to arm those fortifications adequately. Everybody must see that that is the requirement if that theory of harbor defense is to be adopted. If, on the other hand, floating batteries, armed batteries carrying heavy guns, which although they are not sea-going vessels can live and move in harbors, be thought the better mode of defense, then of course that could be done. I have heard, and heard in the Senate, reference made to great British iron-clads as if they were sea-going vessels, and as if we were in great danger from them. Although I hope that everybody will feel the danger as far as it exists, I should be very sorry to have it supposed by the people of New York, or the people anywhere else, that these immense armored vessels or batteries are likely to cross the ocean, or to attempt to cross it, unless they have some vessels to lighter them as consorts. I do not understand at all that those ships are devised for any such purpose.

But without exaggeration, there is no doubt abundant reason for giving attention to the condition of our harbors. Although I do not mean to criticize the committee for what it has done in this regard, it seems to me that the defect in this amendment is one which increasing its amount would not cure. If they had said eight guns, or twelve guns, or twenty guns, still the fact would remain that the only provision here suggested is for a few large guns which are to be put somewhere out of doors.

I do not know that it is worth while to attempt or to hope to change the action of the committee upon this bill at this time, but I venture to say that it is so inadequate a provision that it ought hardly to be regarded as dealing with the subject at all.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, there is a good deal in what was said by the Senator from New York [Mr. CONKLING] in his closing remarks, that so far as attempting to defend the harbors of the United States with the guns that we are providing for, it is hardly worth while to begin unless we expect to go farther. I will state the condition of things existing at present. We have no guns now that will protect our harbors against the iron-clads of Europe that are known to be able to cross the ocean. We have continued for the last ten or twelve years trusting to luck or to Providence, hoping that there would be no necessity for defense. Changes in the penetrative power of the great guns and in the resisting power of the fortifications have been going on so rapidly in the last ten or twelve years that any attempt to do anything would be demonstrated to be a failure almost before the gun or the fortification could be made or put in a shape to be used.

The United States has been relying upon the fact that she was far removed from the great belligerent powers of the Old World and had no particular desire to fight anybody. We have believed also that in a war that closed fifteen years ago there was so much military prowess developed that nobody was very anxious to get into a fight with us. We have waited and watched and have seen the result of the experiments in other countries, saving our money while they have been wasting theirs.

England alone, as we were informed, spent $12,000,000 on what are known as the Armstrong guns, and has abandoned them all after wasting that much money. She expended, year by year, vast amounts upon her fortifications. It was ascertained after a while that the penetrating power of the great guns was such that the fortifications she had built were wholly inadequate to resist attack.

Meanwhile we have been waiting and spending very little money indeed. We have been converting a few eleven-inch smooth-bores, of which we had a great number, into eight-inch rifles. Their penetrating power is such as to be able to protect all the harbors of the United States where vessels with a draught of eighteen feet and under could possibly enter. None of the great iron-clads draw less than twenty-six feet of water, while in very many of the ports of the United States eighteen feet or twenty feet is the maximum depth. Where the eight-inch rifles have been converted from eleven-inch smooth-bores they would render very efficient service and penetrate any ship armored light enough to enter those harbors.

We have commenced changing our fifteen-inch smooth-bores into eleven-inch rifles. We have made the experiment with one. It had been fired over three hundred times—three hundred and twenty I think, as reported to us. It was supposed that before the 1st of July they would fire it three hundred and fifty or perhaps four hundred times. After firing it over three hundred times it is now in as good order as it was when it was first fired. The Department came to the conclusion that if it stood the strain of three hundred and fifty shots they could then pronounce to a certainty that it was a good gun. We have a large number more that we ought to convert into eleven-inch rifles.

Mr. KERNAN. As I understand, this appropriation of $400,000 is to be applied in attempts to convert these smooth-bores into rifled guns which are to be used.

Mr. BECK. The Senator will observe that nothing else was contemplated by the action of the House in the $225,000 appropriated by them. We are still going to progress in that direction, converting as many of those guns as we can, believing, though it is not yet entirely satisfactorily demonstrated, that that will be a first-rate gun. It was made equally apparent to the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate that a twelve-inch gun is a much more powerful gun than an eleven-inch gun, and we thought as the armor of the ships of the Old World is increasing in strength and in its power of resistance, as new material is being used, we ought to be making guns of that character and testing them.

The Ordnance Department laid before us a diagram which I hold in my hand, showing the penetrating power of projectiles that have been tested thoroughly. It was shown that the twelve-inch gun has a much greater penetrating power than the eleven-inch gun. The eleven-inch rifle, for example, weighs sixty thousand pounds, uses ninety-five pounds of powder, and throws a ball weighing five hundred and fifty pounds. The twelve-inch rifle weighs ninety thousand pounds, requires one hundred and twenty pounds of powder, and throws a projectile weighing seven hundred pounds.

Mr. CONKLING. How much does the twelve-inch gun cost?

Mr. BECK. Forty thousand dollars.

Mr. CONKLING. How much to rifle it?

Mr. ALLISON. Forty thousand dollars is the cost of a new gun.

Mr. BECK. The cost of a new gun. I can state the cost of the conversion to an eight-inch rifle. I made some memoranda in committee, thinking some Senator might desire the information, at the time we had the Chief of Engineers and the Chief of Ordnance before us. My recollection is that it would cost about $7,500 to convert into a breech-loader an eight-inch smooth-bore, and about $15,000 to convert the fifteen-inch smooth-bore into an eleven-inch rifle. They said the penetrating power of those guns at from a thousand to fifteen hundred yards would be such as to pierce any ship now afloat except two.

Mr. KERNAN. The ships now used?

Mr. BECK. The ships that are now used.

Mr. KERNAN. A twelve-inch gun?

Mr. BECK. A twelve-inch gun. Here is the diagram, the caliber of the gun laid down and its penetrating power, and each grade of vessel up to the largest, of which there are only two.

Mr. CONKLING. Which are the two; the Duilio and what other?

Mr. BECK. The Inflexible and the Duilio.

Mr. ALLISON. The Duilio is an Italian ship.

Mr. BECK. All the other iron-clad ships they assure us are penetrable by a twelve-inch rifled gun. We thought that it was a wise thing not to attempt at present to spend enough to arm and protect all the ports, New York, Boston, Portland, and other places, because there is a large number of our seaports into which those ships cannot enter. I took the precaution to inquire of the Chief of Ordnance how many of our ports would be in danger from those large ships, and on the 17th of January General Benét, the Chief of Ordnance wrote me this note:

In compliance with your verbal request, and as covering the information desired, I give on the next page a letter from the Chief of Engineers to the House Committee on Military Affairs. It will be seen that many of our most important harbors can be entered by the most powerful iron-clads in the world.

The list comprehends the harbors of Penobscot, Kennebec, Portland, Portsmouth, (New Hampshire,) Boston, Narragansett Bay, "a great strategic position" is added, New London Harbor, New York Harbor, Philadelphia Harbor, "excepting those drawing twenty-five feet and over," Hampton Roads, the Tortugas, and San Francisco. Each of those harbors could be entered by any of these large armored ships. While they have not progressed far enough to make it sure that those twelve-inch guns would be a success, they are perfectly sure that there are very many harbors in the United States where they could be placed as against ships that had only twelve inches of armor; and if we have to make larger guns it will be to meet exigencies that may arise hereafter; but, for the time being, we thought it wise to increase the appropriation of the House from $225,000 up to $400,000 in order to give a chance to make a beginning, at least to have such guns as will in all probability answer the purpose.

We were assured, furthermore, that while we had a torpedo system that is quite valuable, yet torpedoes without big guns to protect them are of very little value; that the great armored ships of the world could come into our harbors, and if they were not driven back by land batteries, they could fish up the torpedoes, taking them up at their leisure and pass on. The officers thought that it was necessary to have guns to protect those torpedoes, and to make it impossible for a ship to stay long enough to take them up in passing along. While the Senator from New York [Mr. CONKLING] is correct in saying that we have no fortification now large enough to place these guns in casemates, Fort Schuyler can be converted to that use. That I suppose is the most important fort at New York, because Fort Lafayette is perhaps not in a condition to be used for that purpose without a great deal of cost. We could, by throwing two casemates into one, place eleven or twelve inch guns in the casemates of Fort Schuyler now.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. We have added $50,000 for that purpose.

Mr. BECK. We have added $50,000 to what the House had appropriated, in order that some test might be made by General Wright, the Chief of Engineers, in that direction. The difficulty that we had and the difficulty the engineers have had is the want of absolute knowledge as to what will be necessary, but all agree that it is a step in the right direction.

I confess for one that it seems to me we are exposing ourselves to very great risks by not having more guns and better fortifications than we have. I can see, and Senators can see, questions that may arise by the approach of great railroads along the Mexican frontier. Here is one road going now from San Antonio toward El Paso and thence across to Guaymas, and it will get there to a certainty. There is another going from Fort Worth in the same direction. There is another advancing from Fort Yuma coming in this direction. There is that great road, the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé, heading down there now, and they are obliged somehow or other, by some means, by some arrangement with Mexico to get to that great Gulf of Southern California. Complications may arise growing out of those things that may require us to be in a condition where at least we ought to be prepared for defense.

We were speaking this morning about a great interoceanic canal. The President sent a message to us within the last few days reasserting what is known as the Monroe doctrine, which most of us approve; I do certainly. Complications may arise there. Bills have been introduced appropriating several hundred thousand dollars to send two ships of war to do something, I do not know what. Our ships might just as well be carpenter shops as ships of war as against the great armored ships of the world. We might be insulted at any time anywhere, at Boston, New York, San Francisco, or at Hampton Roads certainly, leaving out Philadelphia and other places where foreign ships of war would have some difficulty in entering. I hope we shall not be, but at the same time we ought surely to be going as far as this amendment proposes to go in making experiments in the direction of putting ourselves in a condition to know how best to defend ourselves.

If we had the guns and if we had to put them out of doors I have no doubt we should put them on the torpedo lines and drive the ships off, because the penetrating power of a twelve-inch rifle is shown by the engineers to be sufficient to penetrate any ship that would be likely to cross the Atlantic. If not we shall have to make bigger ones.

I am free to say, living as I do in an interior State, that I would spend any amount of money, I do not care whether it is $50,000,000 or $100,000,000, to build up all the fortifications and construct all the guns that are necessary to protect the harbors of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, or any of the great harbors of the country, against foreign invasion anywhere. I would not see an iron-clad of Spain, or of France, or of England, lying in the harbor of New York or any other harbor demanding tribute, no matter what it might cost to defend against her coming. I would rather pay a million for defense than one cent for tribute. But I thought, and the committee thought, we had gone as far as the House would agree to perhaps, as far as the engineers had information sufficient to enable us now to go, and that we ought to progress still further as soon as we know that we are right.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Mr. President, I do not rise for the purpose of antagonizing the amendment, but simply to express my gratification that the Committee on Appropriations have seen fit to report an appropriation for this purpose, and I believe it would have been far wiser if the committee had reported an additional appropriation to that which they have presented to us.

I have been somewhat amused at some of the remarks that have been made here on the floor of the Senate respecting the danger which would naturally result in case we should be attacked by some of the foreign iron-clads, some of which have been named to-day by the honorable Senator from Kentucky. I have been investigating with a distinguished naval officer the amount of water necessary to float one of those batteries into any of the American ports, and as near as we can judge there is scarcely any of the American ports into which a vessel like the Duilio, or the Inflexible, or any vessel of that class, having the ordnance and resisting power that those vessels have, could possibly enter. It certainly would be impossible for either of those vessels, or any vessel of that class or character, to cross the bar at Sandy Hook. We have a fortification at Sandy Hook partially completed which could very easily be put in a condition to receive a gun of the character that the committee propose to have constructed. That is near the city of New York, although distant some eighteen or twenty miles from the city. We have three additional fortifications which, perhaps, with a little alteration would enable each to receive a gun of like character. I submit that if each of the fortifications spoken of were supplied with one or more guns—perhaps one would not be sufficient—by which an enfilading fire could be brought to bear across the harbor and upon any object coming up through the narrows, the result would be that a hostile vessel would have a very stormy time in reaching the port of New York.

In addition to that, in this connection, let me state what the opinion of that distinguished naval officer is respecting the character of a fortification or of an obstruction in the river which would absolutely prevent a vessel from reaching the city or getting to a point near enough to bombard it. He states that by taking some of the old naval vessels which have been condemned as practically worthless and placing them in the channel, then by an efficient torpedo service, which I am glad to see that the committee here have reported an appropriation of money for the purpose of investigating and completing, and with the fortifications manned by heavy ordnance, the result would be that it would be almost impossible for a vessel of any class, certainly one having sufficient thickness of armor, to cross the bar at Sandy Hook, to reach the city of New York, or within a sufficient distance of the city to bombard it.

The same condition of things exists with respect to Philadelphia. Certainly no vessel of that class could pass up the Delaware River to Philadelphia. There are some cities along the coast that I suppose are not situated so advantageously; but in the past it has not been a difficult thing to secure appropriations of money from Congress for floating batteries. Large appropriations of money have been made for the purpose of building what are called floating batteries or monitors. We have to-day four or five of those monitors under construction; one of them at Cramp's yard at Philadelphia, one at the yard of Harlan & Hollingsworth, at Wilmington, one at John Roach's yard at Chester, Pennsylvania, and one at the Mare Island navy-yard in California. There has been up to this time an amount of money, I think, exceeding $2,000,000, expended upon each of those vessels for the purpose of securing a ship fit and proper and sufficient in all its requirements for harbor defense.

A board of survey has recently been held upon one of those monitors where an appropriation I think of about $2,400,000 has been already expended. That board of survey examined into the merits of the whole case; they examined the vessel, which is already in quite a forward state of completion. The report of the board is that if the vessel were completed in accordance with the original plans and specifications the deck of the vessel would be two feet and four inches under water when lying at the dock. And the board of survey have made recommendations to the Secretary of the Navy. After deducting 37 per cent. of the resisting power of the vessel, after deducting 37 per cent. of the plating which was put upon her, they found then that if she were completed in accordance with the plan she would be about four inches and a half under water.

I only state this to show that while we have been very profuse in the expenditure of money in the past for the purpose of making floating batteries, I think it is about time now that we should turn our attention to some other kind of armament, having been so exceedingly unfortunate as to get nothing as a result from the vast expenditure that we have incurred.

Mr. President, I am glad to know that the Committee on Appropriations have taken hold of this matter in the right direction. I believe that appropriations of money should be made for an efficient torpedo service and for placing heavy armaments upon land fortifications at all the forts, manning properly whatever number of guns may be needed, and defending them properly.

With respect to the guns that the committee propose to construct, I have one word to say. I believe it is the intention to convert our smooth-bore cannon into rifled guns. They are now fifteen-inch guns, I understand, and the purpose is to rifle them to eleven-inch guns. There is a variety of opinions existing among engineers in respect to the policy of such a conversion. I understand, and reliably, that the experiments thus far made prove that they will be almost entirely worthless after they have gone through that transformation.

Mr. BECK and others. No, no.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator from New Jersey allow me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. McPHERSON. I do.

Mr. ALLISON. I think one hundred and ten smooth-bore eleven-inch guns have been converted into eight-inch rifled guns, and after repeated tests and experiments they are found to be useful as rifled guns. But one fifteen-inch smooth-bore has been converted into an eleven-inch rifle, and, as was stated by the Senator from Kentucky, that is now undergoing a test; there have been fired, I think, three hundred and twenty-five shots from this eleven-inch rifled gun.

Mr. WITHERS. It is found to be an effective weapon?

Mr. ALLISON. Very effective. The Chief of Ordnance, who certainly is entitled to our respect and consideration for skill and knowledge of construction, states that in his judgment these guns will be effectual weapons in the future.

Mr. McPHERSON. My information is, that in the number of experiments which the honorable Senator states has been made, it has yet been impossible to get the point of the shot to hit the target first, but in nine cases out of ten the tail end of the shot went foremost. If that is to be the result; if after we have expended hundreds of thousands of dollars in rifling guns for the purpose of making an efficient and effective weapon it is impossible then to determine whether the point of the shot is to hit the target or the other end of the shot, I submit it would be very difficult to prove to me that it would be a very efficient weapon.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will allow me, he certainly cannot state as a fact resulting from the conversion that the tail goes before the head?

Mr. McPHERSON. I simply state that my information is, that instead of the shot going in a certain straight direction it will wobble over and over, and it is as liable to hit the target sideways as on the point. I simply make this statement, and I make it upon the authority of an officer whose name, if I were to mention it to Senators, would lead them to think that an opinion from such a source would be worthy of a great deal of consideration.

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator let me understand him before he goes further?

Mr. McPHERSON. Certainly.

Mr. CONKLING. Did the Senator state that the ball out of a rifled cannon will wind; that it turns over in this way? [Illustrating.]

Mr. McPHERSON. Yes, sir, a ball from these rifled cannon; I am speaking of these particular rifled cannon.

Mr. CONKLING. Are they cut to wind, or cut straight?

Mr. McPHERSON. They are cut to wind, I understand.

Mr. CONKLING. They wind, and still they turn over.

Mr. McPHERSON. I so understand.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask the Senator entirely for information; I disclaim any knowledge about it; but with some knowledge of small-arms in this respect, I know that a ball shot out of a smooth bore must naturally turn over in this way [illustrating;] but I am surprised too to know that a ball, large or small, shot out of a rifled bore, if the rifle winds, should turn over in this way. I do not mean to dispute the Senator's statement.

Mr. McPHERSON. I repeat the statement as it was made to me by a gentleman whose authority I think would not be questioned if his name was mentioned. A further statement made to me is that the smooth-bore guns are a great deal more efficient weapons than after they have been converted into rifled guns.

Mr. ALLISON. Does the same officer make that statement?

Mr. McPHERSON. The same officer makes that statement. With respect to the manufacture of improved breech-loading twelve-inch guns, I suppose the intention is simply to commence at the start and make a new gun, and I am certainly in favor of that. I am also in favor of smooth-bore cannon if they can be made efficient weapons. If further experiments are necessary, well and good.

Mr. WITHERS. Mr. President, I rise simply to state, in justice to myself, that I dissented from the proposed increase of the appropriation made by the House for the purpose indicated, and I will briefly give my reason for this dissent.

It is not that I am not actuated by as sincere a desire as my friend from Kentucky or any other Senator to secure, as far as possible, all our harbors against insults from any foreign power, but it is for the reason that ever since the war there has been an unsolved problem which has vexed the minds of the engineer officers of the Army and the Navy. This unsolved problem is the relative advancement made in the improvements in the construction of guns and of armor. The policy which has influenced Congress since the close of the war has been not to expend hundreds of thousands and millions of dollars in the prosecution of these experiments in order to ascertain which will be the most effective method of securing safety to our harbors; but to await the results of experiments which were being instituted by other nations. For example, as has just been cited, in England thirty-five millions per annum are expended upon fortifications and ten or twelve millions per annum in experimenting in gunnery and armor plating. These experiments are still being prosecuted; they have never yet reached a successful solution. The problem is yet unsolved, as it was in the beginning.

That wise economy which has hitherto prompted the Congress of the United States in refraining from embarking upon this expensive experiment, it seems to me should still prevail at the present time, because it is by no means clear that if we shall go into the manufacture of these twelve-inch rifles we shall have added one iota to the security of our harbors. Certain it is that guns of much larger caliber, of much greater power, are possessed by all the European maritime nations, before which these twelve-inch guns would not be able to live an hour.

Why, then, should we abandon the policy which we have heretofore pursued? Why should we embark in this system of experimental expenditure, involving millions of dollars, when probably every dollar of that expenditure will be found ultimately to have been useless? I think the same economy which has actuated us heretofore should still prevail, because it is not true economy to expend hundreds of thousands of dollars in the manufacture of guns which may ultimately prove of little value.

I know that differences of opinion have existed among scientific men as to the relative advantages of heavy guns and of floating batteries, or torpedoes as a means of harbor defense, but we have been experimenting with torpedoes, and the experiments are reported to us to be of a very successful character. It is a much less expensive method of defense than that of providing immense fortifications with immense arms.

Mr. McPHERSON. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WITHERS. Certainly.

Mr. McPHERSON. Let me suppose a case. We will suppose that one of the large vessels of which we have spoken was coming into the port of New York. Do I understand the Senator to say that if we had an efficient torpedo service it would be possible for us to resist the passage of that vessel by torpedoes?

Mr. WITHERS. Certainly I do.

Mr. McPHERSON. Is it not always possible to take torpedoes out of the way of the ships?

Mr. WITHERS. It is possible; but torpedoes would be much more effective in fact than a twelve-inch rifle.

Mr. McPHERSON. How could you reach the vessel at all by torpedoes if guards were put out about the ship, as they usually are, for the purpose of keeping the torpedoes away from the vessel? How could you reach it with your resisting force at all? I should like to have the Senator answer the question.

Mr. WITHERS. I will state in reply to the Senator from New Jersey that the experience of other nations in torpedo service has demonstrated their capacity of usefulness. All the appliances which modern ingenuity has been able to bring to bear have been powerless to protect war vessels against the influence of torpedoes. One experimental vessel which was constructed here exhibited its power in our harbor last year, and its projectors are very sanguine of complete and ultimate success in that class of torpedoes, the course of which is directed from the shore. It is not dependent upon any other agency than that which it contains; it is automatic.

Mr. McPHERSON. May I ask another question?

Mr. WITHERS. Certainly.

Mr. McPHERSON. Is it not necessary for the torpedoes to come in contact with the vessel?

Mr. WITHERS. No, sir; not of necessity. If a torpedo is exploded under a vessel or in the neighborhood of one of these iron-clads it sends destruction to the vessel.

Mr. McPHERSON. If sufficient guards are put out around a vessel to prevent a torpedo from either coming in contact with the sides or going underneath it, certainly the vessel would remain unharmed.

Mr. WITHERS. If such precautions could be adopted as would prevent the approach of any torpedo to the neighborhood of the vessel, it is manifest it would be removed from the vessel; but that system has never been devised. The explosion of torpedoes in the late Russo-Turco war has demonstrated the power of the torpedo against iron-clad vessels.

Every argument which has been adduced in support of this increased expenditure was just as applicable fifteen years ago as it is to-day. Our harbors were just as defenseless, as much exposed to insult fifteen years ago, and have been every year from that time to the present, as they are to-day. The recommendations of the Chief of Ordnance have been year by year brought before Congress in favor of the appropriation of hundreds of thousands, nay, of millions of dollars to increase the efficacy of our guns and to promote the efficiency of our harbor defenses. What argument has been adduced to show that we should abandon the policy which we have heretofore pursued and under which we have rested quietly?

The atmosphere of the Chamber smelt sulphurous this morning, I admit, at the indication of possibilities in the near future growing out of the assertion of the Monroe doctrine. I feel no apprehension on that subject. I think my friend, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, would indicate to the Senate that our prospects of peace with all the world and, as a celebrated historical quotation adds, "and the rest of mankind" are at this moment exceedingly fair. What cloud arises upon our horizon? There is no prospect whatever, so far as I know, of any breach of our friendly relations with the European maritime powers; and even if there were I assert that this proposed increase of the appropriation would not tend to secure by one iota the safety of our large commercial cities and their harbors.

Mr. President, I could go on and reply to some of the positions taken by my friend from New Jersey, [Mr. McPHERSON,] but as I consider they are not germane particularly to the matter I will close, having expressed what I had in view in indicating the causes which prompted me to resist this increase of appropriation.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. President, I differ with the committee in the conclusion it has reached in increasing this appropriation. I could not see why we should now, after five years of economical administration, of cheap iron, of the ability of the Government to procure money at a low rate, just when iron had gone to a high price and the price of labor had become nearer its just remuneration, just when everything that entered into ordnance had become expensive, enter upon a large expenditure of money for arming our fortifications? For what reason shall this be done now? Where is the war cloud? On what side of the horizon does the speck of war appear? The argument that would arm our fortifications and create new ones, that would enter upon a policy such as this amendment indicates, would carry us logically and inevitably to the maintenance of a large standing army and thoroughly armed fortifications. This amendment plainly indicates we are to enter upon that policy which goes to the full extent of both equipping and changing our fortifications. The argument of the Senator from New York [Mr. CONKLING] who sits the farthest from me convinced the Senate that such must be the result. We must change the character of our fortifications as well as the mode of arming them. Are we ready to do that? Why shall we do it? What power is there now threatening us that the Government should prepare to resist and expose us to incur the enormous expenditure of public money consequent on a change of policy? I can see no reason for it; I see no cause for it at all. On the contrary, I believe the people want us (and I think it is good policy that we should do so) to continue in our attempt at an economical administration of the Government, to continue to retrench our expenditures, to go forward in the effort to reduce both the interest and the debt of the Federal Government, to reduce taxation, to save money, and to lessen at every point the burdens of the people. This has seemed to me to be the true policy. Why should we change it now? I can see no good reason for it. There is not in any section of the world any threat of war against our Government. There is no cause, it seems to me, for thus increasing the expenses of the Government at such a time as this, and our present policy should be continued.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. President, my residence is so far removed from the sea-coast on either side of our country that I do not know that I can state to the Senate that I have any other interest in this bill than that of other citizens of the nation; but I presume we all feel an interest in the defenses of our sea-coast, and I think the appropriation now before the Senate is in the right direction. If we have been, as has been stated by the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. WITHERS,] entirely defenseless throughout all our harbors for fifteen years past, that, it seems to me, is no argument why we should remain entirely defenseless for fifteen years to come, or for any other period.

Experiments have been progressing for the defense of harbors by a system of torpedoes alluded to by the Senator from Virginia, and I am happy to concur with the Senator in the opinion that advances have been made in that direction; but those experiments have not determined that we have a sufficient defense. If we are to have fortifications in our harbors, we must have guns, and we should have the most efficient that we can procure. For years the government of Great Britain has been making experiments in the improvement of her vessels, iron-clads, to prepare against any assault that can be made upon them; she has been improving both her guns and her projectiles, so that she has arrived at a condition now far in advance of other countries so far as her vessels are concerned. We have been converting our smooth-bore guns into eleven-inch rifles, and we are progressing in that direction; but every smooth-bore gun that we convert into a rifle is of smaller caliber, and it costs more to use our large smooth-bore guns converted into rifles than it would to manufacture those rifles themselves. We convert a fifteen-inch smooth-bore into an eleven-inch rifle and use up all our smooth-bore guns in that way, when we can manufacture twelve-inch rifles at a cost less than is put on the Government by the manufacture of the smooth-bore and its conversion into a rifle, losing and diminishing the capacity of the smooth-bore to that extent.

Mr. WITHERS. Will the Senator permit me to correct him?

Mr. McMILLAN. Certainly.

Mr. WITHERS. The statement is made to us by the Chief of Ordnance that the cost of the conversion of fifteen-inch smooth-bores to eleven-inch rifles is about fifteen or sixteen thousand dollars each.

The cost of the making of a new breech-loading twelve-inch rifle is $40,000.

Mr. McMILLAN. The conversion of the smooth-bore into the rifle is one thing, but the cost of the smooth-bore, which the Government has already incurred, and the conversion of that into a rifle is a different thing.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. On that point, with the exception of the distinguished naval officer that the Senator from New Jersey speaks of, I know now of no officer in the Army or Navy who regards a smooth-bore gun as of any material value in naval or fortification warfare.

Mr. McMILLAN. I do not dispute the statement of the Senator from Iowa so far as that is concerned; but the smooth-bore guns are for other purposes very efficient, and they may be used to great advantage.

The only point I desire to suggest here is that this is an economical measure; that we can keep our present smooth-bores, use them for the purposes for which they can be used efficiently, and in this way resort to the manufacture of rifles and save the smooth-bores for the purposes for which they can be used. The experiment, so far as I am advised, with reference to this twelve-inch rifle-gun has been successful; it may be pronounced successful; I think it is so regarded by the officers of the different departments of the Army. I think, therefore, that this is a measure of economy and that it is a measure of prudence in preparing for the defense of our harbors, whatever advance may be made in the system of torpedoes.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I do not propose to delay the Senate; but I desire to say in reply to what has been said by the Senator from Virginia in regard to the torpedoes, that the proof was made conclusive before the committee that a torpedo system without guns to defend it was absolutely worthless, and that the armored ships of the world that carry armor with them and about them make torpedoes absolutely useless as to them, if you give them time to pick them up and prepare for them. For example, an armored ship draws twenty-five feet of water, if you please; she throws her armor around her twenty-six feet from her guard and it sinks her down twenty-five feet in the water. If the torpedo is sent from the shore or is put by any means under the surface at a greater depth than twenty-five feet, it does not touch her of course. If the guard that is thrown around twenty-five feet from her keel is struck by the torpedo and the torpedo explodes, and it is twenty-five feet from the point where it strikes to the top of the water and twenty-six feet to the ship, the explosion passes out on top of the water and never goes near the ship at all; it is as absolutely harmless as if I were to snap my finger at it passing by. The explosive force always escapes at the weakest point, and the guard being further distant from the ship than the top of the water from the point where the torpedo strikes it, the torpedo does not do any harm at all. It goes off at the top of the water because that point is nearest, and it never reaches the ship.

Mr. WITHERS. I wish to ask the Senator from Kentucky if it is not equally true that whatever the depth of water may be, if the torpedo is submerged sufficiently below the keel of the vessel to pass to the right and explode, it is dangerous to the iron-clad?

Mr. BECK. I am not sure that I am advised about that; and I would rather not answer the question for fear I might not answer it correctly; but the general idea from the information given to us by the engineer officers and the ordnance officers is that if you have no land batteries to guard your torpedoes and allow the ships to go with their guards and take them up at their leisure, for they can fish them up as easily as they can anything else, the torpedoes are of no use at all, and therefore we must have some guns.

I am as anxious as the Senator from Pennsylvania or the Senator from Virginia to be economical in the expenditure of the public money; but I am not willing to say that in the present condition of the world's armored ships and in the progress that the world is making in that direction we ought to stand absolutely still and do nothing, to allow ourselves to be, as we should be liable to be, insulted by any second or third class power, or have our harbors entered and our people paying tribute, without making some move in the direction of preventing that mischief from happening. I have no idea that any power is going to attack us to-day; but wars have occurred among all the nations of the world. We are a people who are asserting ourselves in divers places at present, at some places directly and at some indirectly, and the surest way to prevent any nation from attempting to attack us is to let that nation understand that we are prepared for an attack.

Take the interoceanic canal question, if you please; take our relations with Mexico. If the nations of the world understand that we have not the ships, that we have not the guns to prevent their ships sailing into the harbor of New York, they will be much more ready to defy us, to insult us, and to drive us to a humiliating position than they will if they know that we are preparing guns to defend ourselves; and it is no extravagant waste of public money for a nation to provide such things as will protect its great seaport cities from the insults of foreign nations.

I am not looking to war on the land. No nation upon earth, and not all the world combined, in my judgment, will ever attack this people upon the land; and I do not look to a standing army for our protection. I believe a well-organized militia may be raised at once to repel all the attacks that can be made on us anywhere by land; but all the militia we have got, all the men we have got could not prevent an English or a French iron-clad sailing into the port of New York, unless we had some guns there to stop it. We cannot prepare for that in a day. We may try sand batteries; but of what avail will they be? We may have to expose our weakness more than we like by trying to save all the expense we can, but we must have the guns, we must begin to make them unless we expect to submit to whatever any other nation may impose upon us.

Why do we support an army? Why do we maintain a navy? Why do we have that nucleus of defense? Simply because war may become necessary. You may dispense with all your army on the same theory that gentlemen say we want no guns. Why do we want guns? We propose to make a beginning to see if these are good, and if so build more of the same sort, or others if these be not good enough, so as to prepare to defend ourselves on the sea as we are doing to-day on the land. The increase of the sum of $225,000 that the House gave to convert smooth-bores into rifles to $400,000, to include the building of four more first-class rifled guns, is neither extravagant nor is it approaching extravagance. We can cut off in many other places where there are needless expenditures of public money double, quadruple, yes, ten times that, and to great advantage.

That is all I desire to say.

Mr. WITHERS. All the argument of the Senator from Kentucky will resolve itself into this: that we should expend this money to secure protection for our harbors, not in the construction of twelve-inch rifles but in such guns as are used by European nations, such guns as Krupp manufactures, such guns as are now manufactured in England, of eighty or one hundred tons. Those are the guns really effective; and every argument urged by the Senator from Kentucky would indicate to us that it is throwing away money to manufacture these little twelve-inch rifles, that we ought to devote it to the construction of guns of eighty or one hundred tons.

Mr. BECK. My only answer to that is that our engineers say that the twelve-inch rifles will keep off every iron-clad ship now floated except the Inflexible and the Duillo, and they can never come.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I have no apprehension of a war. I live very near the coast, but I do not think we are in any danger from a foreign war within any short time, nor do I believe that the best protection against the possibility of a foreign war is the arming of forts along our coast. I believe that we have a stronger argument to address to the nations of the earth than simply mounting heavy cannon upon our forts. We ought to build up our Navy. That is where our protection arises. We should build up our Navy and teach the nations of the earth that if they venture upon a war with us we have the capacity to destroy their commerce, and thus appeal to their fear in reference to their pecuniary interests. You have an additional security in that against the possibility of a foreign war.

Now, in reference to whether it is advisable to have guns of a larger caliber, I have heard the Senator from New York say that there was no proper position in which guns of that capacity could be mounted about the harbor of New York, if I understood him aright. That may be the case in the other harbors of the country.

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator will pardon me, I did not say there was no place about the harbor of New York where such guns could be mounted. I only said that the existing coast fortifications about New York were not adequate to receive these guns. Of course they could be put out of doors or put on parapets, but they cannot be brought within the fortifications, and from there speak like fortification guns.

Mr. SAULSBURY. That was my understanding; but perhaps I was unfortunate in the expression I used in representing what the Senator had said. My understanding was that none of our forts are at present sufficiently constructed to mount these guns. What is the consequence if that is true of all our harbors and forts? Then when you have the guns, you must go to work and erect fortifications to mount the guns so that they may be valuable for purposes of defense. In my opinion, it would be better to economize in reference to fortifications, and make more liberal appropriations to the Navy of the country. I believe that we have expended a very large amount upon the Navy of this country, much of which has been wasted; but nevertheless our true arm of protection against foreign invasion is in the Navy of this country. Whenever we have a sufficient navy upon the high seas, you may rest assured that the commercial nations of Europe are not going to risk the destruction of their commerce by engaging in a war with us. If, therefore, we would provide against possibility of collision with foreign powers, in my opinion we had better take care of our Navy; put that upon a footing to enable it to cope with the navies of England, France, Italy, and the other nations of Europe.

I think the condition of our Navy at present is a reproach to the nation. Notwithstanding we have spent within the last ten years more than $200,000,000 upon the Navy, to-day, according to the best information I can get—and some of that has been derived from investigations where Admiral Porter and other naval officers testified—our Navy is not in a condition to meet a third-class European navy upon the high seas.

So far as this bill is concerned, I believe the additional expenditure of $175,000 for the purpose of manufacturing four twelve-inch guns is unnecessary and will not avail anything. Perhaps, before they are ever used except for the purpose of showing what they can do, before there is any possibility of their being used in a foreign war, some other man will invent another gun, and say that the capacity of that gun is so much superior to these that he will come here for an appropriation and ask us to make an appropriation for the manufacture of his gun. So far as I am concerned, I shall vote against the additional appropriation.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Delaware is as anxious as any one can be to see that the country is properly defended from foreign powers; but he devotes his attention entirely to an increase of the Navy. He proposes that whatever be expended shall be expended upon an increase of the Navy. I quite agree with him as to the necessity of an increase of the Navy, and as to the advantages to the country and the indispensable necessity of increasing the Navy; but I cannot quite understand that if we do that we have accomplished all that we can if we yet leave the harbors of the nation unprotected and leave them open to any foreign enemy which may be able to cross the ocean, and without the slightest obstruction to enter our harbors and destroy our commercial towns, and destroy our Navy in harbor. I cannot quite understand the economy which oppresses my friend from Delaware as well as my friend from Pennsylvania so as to leave the harbors of the country unprotected.

The Senator from Virginia says that the policy we have pursued for the last fifteen years is the policy we should continue. That is the policy of letting everything alone, and doing nothing toward protecting the coast of the United States, for the reason that for the last fifteen years no harm has come from it, and no harm having come from it for the last fifteen years, he is satisfied that the best way for us is to trust Providence for the next fifteen years. Now, sir, if we have escaped for the last fifteen years, it seems to me that that is no reason why we should expect to escape hereafter. I would put as much trust in that power which the Senator from Virginia seems to repose upon as any one; but I am inclined to think that Providence expects of us something on our part, and does not propose to enter into the business of our coast defense unless we are willing to defend ourselves.

The Senator from Virginia says furthermore that it is not quite certain yet that we know the best way to defend our harbors, and therefore he does not propose to make any effort toward it until by some revelation in which the nation shall have no part, some divine revelation from that power which has for the last fifteen years taken care of us, a light shall be shed upon this question that shall leave nothing for us but to walk in the path opened for us by somebody else. He does not know yet that a twelve-inch gun will do that which a fifteen-inch gun may hereafter prove that it is necessary to accomplish. Well, I do not know it. Nobody can know it. Nobody can know whether an eleven-inch gun will be sufficient to protect our harbors or not. But I am quite certain that they will not be protected without some sort of a gun. As to the torpedo upon which my friend from Virginia is willing to rest and repose himself with perfect security, I am not quite certain that he can tell us that it will always explode at the right moment and in the right place. I think experiments have demonstrated that the torpedo alone is quite harmless, that without protection in connection with the torpedo it will be of comparatively little service in defending our harbors.

The Senator from Pennsylvania desires to pursue that course of economy which has so illustrated the administration of public affairs for the last fifteen years—

Mr. WALLACE. The Senator misstates what I said. I said that I could not understand the policy that would be silent while material was cheap and labor was cheap for five years, and immediately when they became dear should undertake to expend large amounts of money in building fortifications or guns to put upon them.

Mr. DAWES. I understood the Senator to say just that. The policy which has been pursued for the last fifteen years is that which the Senator from Pennsylvania so admires that he desires to continue it. It is a policy of doing nothing, so enologized by the Senator from Virginia. That is the policy, to do nothing toward the protection of our harbors. The reason that has so commended that policy to the Senator from Pennsylvania is that now iron is high, labor is high, it will cost more to-day to do anything toward defending our harbors than it would have cost five years ago; and he cannot understand why, having escaped for fifteen years any harm, especially now—that was it I believe—especially now, when iron is high and labor is high, we should do anything toward defending our harbors. I hope the Senator from Pennsylvania does not expect iron to be lower for a good many years or labor to be lower. I hope my friend from Pennsylvania is not about to adopt any policy or approve any policy that will bring iron down or labor down. If the Senator does not, then the Senator does not propose to do anything toward harbor defense for a long time to come. In other words, the proposition of the Senators from Pennsylvania and Virginia is to abandon the coast defenses altogether, because they do not see to-day any cloud of war in the horizon. Well, sir, shall we wait till the cloud appears and is about to break, and then look about us to discover which is the best method of coast defense then, or had we better address ourselves to it now in time of peace and when no danger is pressing upon us? Had we better wait till the cloud does appear in the horizon before we make a contract to construct a gun that it will take a year and a half to complete, when the cloud will burst and have spent itself and gone before the gun can be constructed?

I do not understand this policy. I do not understand the economy of this policy. I have not been so greatly charmed with the policy of the last fifteen years as the two Senators on the other side seem at this moment to be. I have been one of those who have believed that it has been anything but a policy of economy to permit the Navy of this country to go to decay and to pass off from the ocean, or the harbors to go undefended, while all other nations have been embracing every kind of possible improvement, have been devoting themselves to the investigation of every new method, have been increasing their expenditures at home and putting upon the ocean new kinds of armament of every nature and we have been quietly waiting here to see the cloud arise. That is not true economy. That is not following the precept of the Father of his Country "in time of peace, prepare for war." That is not the way to keep the peace. That is not the way to protect the flag. That is not the way to inspire respect for the flag upon the ocean. The true course is in this very time of peace, when we see no danger at hand, to take care at every point and in every possible way that when danger does arise we shall be prepared for it.

Mr. WITHERS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Massachusetts were permitted to state his adversary's positions unchallenged he could certainly secure a great forensic triumph. As I never proposed in the argument which I addressed to the Senate to await for some special revelation from Heaven in order that we might be apprised of the existence of any danger, I think it unnecessary to reply to that fiction of the Senator's fancy.

I do not propose to repose myself quietly upon torpedoes as furnishing the sole defense for our harbors. I merely mentioned them as one of the elements of defense.

But, sir, I want to go further, and I desire to call the attention especially of the Senator from Massachusetts to the fact that this do-nothing policy, this "masterly inactivity" which he taunts me with observing or advocating, is the policy which was pursued by himself and his political associates upon this subject ever since the close of the war. What change has come over the spirit of his dream? Why is it that this champion of economy on the subject of fortifications and gunnery during all these fifteen years now comes before the Senate as the champion of reckless and indefinite expenditures in the same direction? Were not the war clouds just as far below the horizon apparently during these fifteen years as they are to-day? Why is it, then, I ask, that this champion of economy in former days comes now before us and advocates, with his associates, the most extravagant, in my judgment, and useless expenditure of the public money? There is an answer which will suggest itself to the mind, I have no doubt, of every Senator present.

I think, Mr. President, that this proposed departure is one which should challenge our criticism and examination. It is not the mere increase which is now suggested that is objectionable; it is that this is to be the entering wedge, if it amounts to anything at all, to an expenditure of millions upon millions of dollars of the public money, because it is manifest that the construction of four guns will be absolutely worthless as a means of defense, and four times four, and ten times four, and fifty times four will be required before you can put your harbor defenses in such condition as will enable you to challenge the movement of any hostile force; and you must construct more than twelve-inch rifles, you will have to construct eighty to one hundred ton guns; you will have to construct a system of fortifications of which England furnishes the example in spending thirty-five millions per annum in perfecting her fortifications. Is the Congress of the United States prepared to embark in such a system of public expenditure?

Manifestly, however, there is no parallelism between the condition of England and this country; and the argument that may well apply with force to the policy of England in reference to fortifications and batteries would be entirely inapplicable to this country. England is in Europe, separated by a narrow channel from other maritime powers equal almost, if not entirely so, to herself. It is necessary, therefore, that she should protect her seaboard by the most elaborate and perfect system of defense which her engineers are able to devise. We occupy a very different position. We do not expect a collision with any European nation. There is no earthly probability, so far as I know, that such a thing is in the near or in the remote future; and the argument of the Senator from Massachusetts would resolve itself into this, that because we may by possibility be thus involved in a foreign war, we should expend millions of dollars in arming for it now.

The maxim "in peace prepare for war" is a very good one within certain limitations; but the Father of his Country never designed it for such an application as that which has been given it by the Senator from Massachusetts. By parity of reasoning, if some one should convince that pacific Senator, who I have no doubt holds in horror everything like the carrying of any weapon on his person, that some foot-pad or ruffian may possibly attack him before he gets to his boarding-house to-night, he ought to sling revolvers around his person and put a bowie-knife in his bosom—precisely the same argument in the one case would apply to the individual as applies in the other to nations. We propose that no foreign nation with impunity shall insult us. We suppose that no foreign nation proposes to invade our country, to enter our harbors, or insult our flag. And, sir, trusting that the Senate in voting upon this bill will heed less the appeals of the Senator from Massachusetts than they did his practice when he was in a position to control this very subject, and when these same recommendations came up year by year from the chief of the Ordnance Department, to which he paid not the slightest attention, I hope the Senate of the United States will turn a deaf ear to the appeals which he makes to them to-day.

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. President, I rise to defend my honorable friends on the other side of the Chamber from any such insinuation as has been hinted by the honorable Senator from Virginia. I do not believe those who are associated with us upon the other side have been troubled with any surplus of economy with respect to this matter. I expect in a very few days to be able to show, and as I think conclusively to the Senate, that they have made appropriations of money for the purpose of completing or perfecting the Navy, or making additions to the Navy, of something like seven or eight million dollars on three or four vessels of war without knowing whether they would sink or swim when they were completed. Events have shown that they will not float.

Mr. WITHERS. Just one moment to call the Senator's attention to the fact that my remarks were not addressed at all to the expenditures for the Navy but to the fortification bills.

Mr. McPHERSON. I expect to show that an expenditure of about $8,000,000 has been made for the construction of four or five iron-clads for harbor defense without knowing when the appropriations were made whether they would sink or swim. It is now determined, and I think determined by a board of competent officers, that if completed they will sink while lying at the dock. I do not believe that it is exactly fair to charge the gentlemen on the other side of this Chamber with a very great amount of economy.

Mr. ALLISON. Do I understand the Senator from New Jersey to say that a board of officers of the Navy have condemned the four monitors of which he is speaking?

Mr. McPHERSON. Yes, sir. I mean to say that the construction of the four monitors was commenced by a proposition made by certain contractors with the Navy Department, and the proposition read in this wise: "I propose to build a certain vessel," undescribed, "in accordance with plans and specifications," and the plans and specifications incomplete, "for a certain sum of money." The Navy Department said in reply, "Your proposition to do certain work is accepted." The vessels were commenced; appropriations of money have been made to the amount of millions of dollars for the purpose of constructing those monitors. Five of them were commenced. In relation to one of the monitors a board of survey was appointed by the Secretary of the Navy for determining whether the vessel when complete would be of any service to the Government. The first board reported that after deducting 37 per cent. of the weight of armament proposed by the plans and specifications furnished, not by the Navy Department, nor by any officer of that Department, but by a favorite contractor—that when 37 per cent. of the weight of armament was taken from that vessel she would sink at the dock. Not satisfied with that a second board of survey was appointed by the Secretary of the Navy, which concurred in the first report. Not yet satisfied with that, the honorable chairman of the House Committee on Naval Affairs then decided that some further information was needed, and the Secretary of the Navy was requested to name two officers, and he selected two of the most capable naval officers of this or any other Government—one was Chief-Constructor Lenthall, and the other Chief-Engineer Isherwood, of the Navy—who for integrity of character and for capacity have no superior in this country or in any other in their respective stations; and these gentlemen declared, after they had made a survey of this particular vessel, that the vessel when lying at the dock, if completed in accordance with the plans and specifications named in the second board's report, she would then be four feet under water.

But one of the five vessels has ever been inspected by any board of officers, much less a competent board. The Terror, which lies to-day at Cramp's yard in Philadelphia, the Monadnock, which lies at the Mare Island navy-yard, California, the Amphitrite, which lies at the yard of Harlan & Hollingsworth at Wilmington, and the Miantonomah—but I speak specially of the three first named—were commenced in exactly the same way by plans and specifications furnished not by the Navy Department but by the contractors themselves. The contractor proposed to build a vessel for a certain sum of money. The Government said to him, go on and build the vessel in accordance with your own plans and specifications, and at your own price. They dealt with $50,000 or $100,000 as though it was a simple bagatelle, and the vessels were ordered to be constructed. Upon those three vessels, as I say and repeat, an appropriation of millions of dollars has been made, not directly, but indirectly. I say that it is not known to-day that any one of these vessels would float, if completed, in any kind of a manner in which the military adaptation of the vessel would be considered of any value whatever. Let it be remembered that I speak of the Puritan, upon which three several boards of survey have been held, and it is shown that after deducting 37 per cent. of her weight of armament, and that entirely at the expense of the military adaptation of the vessel, then she will sink.

What sort of economy is that which our honorable friends on the other side speak of that can appropriate millions of money out of the Federal Treasury simply upon the recommendation of some contractor who wanted work to perform for the Government, and that too at his own price? The Government did not even go to the expense or the trouble of furnishing that contractor a plan or specification upon which his vessel should be built, but he agreed to build for a certain number of hundreds of thousands of dollars an undescribed vessel.

Mr. President, talk of economy; talk of an appropriation of $175,000 for the purpose of harbor defense, when our friends on the other side have appropriated, as has been stated, in the neighborhood of $200,000,000 in the last ten years for naval purposes, and if it has all been expended in the manner that I have described in reference to these four vessels, I think it is about time we began to investigate the subject.

I wish now to give notice that within a very few days I expect, in answer to certain petitions which have been handed us, one I think from the State of California and others from other States respecting the condition of these monitors, to be able to present to the Senate a detailed report giving the history of the whole affair from beginning to end. Then I believe my honorable friend from Virginia will not be willing to say that there is any economy on the other side of the Chamber with respect to naval matters.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, modern naval science appears to be an attempt to solve the old problem of an irresistible force meeting an impenetrable body. The effort of the great naval powers for the last fifteen years in Europe has been to construct, in the first place, an armor that no projectile would penetrate, and then to make a gun that no armor could resist; and thus far they have pretty well succeeded. The little iron-clad monitor that destroyed the rebel fleet during the war would to-day be as useless as an empty cheese-box, and the gun that five years afterward would have destroyed it would to-day be as useless against the first-class iron-clads of the world as a pop-gun against the rock of Gibraltar. And in my judgment any money that is expended to-day in pursuance of this amendment offered by the Committee on Appropriations if it would to-day result in the construction of a gun that would destroy one of the iron-clads, will in twelve months from now be utterly useless. I believe the money might just exactly as well be thrown into the Atlantic Ocean; and on this account I shall very cordially for one vote against the amendment offered by the committee.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Mr. President, only a word or two. I have no wish to delay a vote, and I want the bill to pass.

Something has been said about economy, and the Senator from Virginia and the Senator from Massachusetts especially spoke of the expenditures for fortifications for the last few years. I have the figures here. Let me say to the Senator from Massachusetts that for the last three years, 1878, 1879, and 1880, the expenditures for this purpose, the expenditures for three years covering the whole subject of this bill were $275,000 each year. This bill as it comes from the House appropriates $375,000. The Senate Committee on Appropriations has amended it in two particulars, one for the preservation of forts and the other for guns, &c., amounting, the first to $50,000 and the second to $175,000, making $600,000 in all in this bill for the purpose of fortifications. This is more than double as much as any similar bill for the last three years has contained, and I think the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from New York ought to be satisfied with the present bill in view of that fact.

Mr. DAWES. I am a good deal surprised at the statement of the Senator from West Virginia that, though this Government expends nearly $300,000,000 in different ways every year, the whole amount expended upon coast defenses, upon fortifications in the time he specifies is such a pitiful sum as that which he mentions. I should have been willing to say that the Government should have expended fourfold that amount every year if it had properly regarded the importance of the defense of the harbors of the Union. How much, I ask the Senator from West Virginia, has the Government expended every year for the improvement of harbors and rivers? How much did it expend last year? Was it not near $7,000,000? I am not criticising it. I am comparing that expenditure with the pitiful sum of a few hundred thousand dollars in three or four years for defending the harbors, the importance of which as the outlets to his rivers, as the means of making them effective, cannot be overestimated. Only this little sum for their protection against the world has been expended.

Sir, I am ashamed of it, instead of commending it; but, whether it be worthy of commendation or condemnation, I said not a word about it. It was the Senator from Virginia who held up for admiration the course of the last fifteen years as the course to be pursued for fifteen years more. It was not I, sir. I said I did not approve of the policy of letting the defenses of our harbors go to decay or our Navy to be despoiled and rotted at our harbors or waste away without being built up or protected. It was not I, sir, who urged that course. Now, the Senator from West Virginia has presented to the country an argument stronger than it is possible for any other want to present, to show the necessity of doing something, of beginning to repair and to turn from a policy like that which has been pursued for the last fifteen years.

We are called upon by somebody to take the few good-for-nothing ships of war we have and sink them in our harbors as a method for defense. The few ships of war we have, somebody has told us to-day, we had better take into New York Harbor and into Charleston Harbor and sink them there, and thus defend our harbors; but we had better not spend a dollar for preparation to manufacture a gun that will be of any worth to us in defending those harbors.

The Senator from Virginia says that he hopes nobody will attack me on my way to my home to-night, but he does not think it necessary for me in order to take care of myself that I shall in advance guard myself with bowie-knives and pistols. Would the Senator from Virginia expect me when I am attacked to ask the assailant to wait a minute while I can run and buy a revolver to take care of myself? [Laughter.] The Senator from Virginia and myself would be in a pitiable position if going down the Avenue we should be assailed by some ruffian and we should beg him to hold on a minute until we go somewhere and find out where the best revolver is, and whose make is the best, and where we can get it the cheapest, and whether iron is high or not, and whether the laborers are entitled to more to-day than they were yesterday, and ask him to wait, beg him to wait! [Laughter.]

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts has attained the mature age of forty years at least, and I apprehend he has never yet had the necessity to equip himself with an arsenal either of revolvers or bowie-knives. The same thing applies to us as a people. For sixty-five years we have had no necessity to prepare for a war with a foreign power; for sixty-five years we have pursued a policy that simply meant justice, moderation, fair-dealing with the nations of the earth, and to protect ourselves by protecting our just relations with every nation on the face of the earth. This was the policy that was inculcated by the fathers of the Republic, and it has been the policy for sixty-five years, as the policy of peace has been the policy of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Now, sir, until there comes some reason for preparing for a war with foreign nations, I am unwilling in the condition of progress in the art of war, in the condition of trial of the great implements of war, to enter upon the expenditure of millions upon millions in arming our fortifications, in constructing our fortifications anew, in making for this people an expenditure of perhaps $100,000,000, or, if one course obtains, another sum; I am unwilling in this condition of progress in the world to enter upon a reversal of the policy that has been, I admit, a waiting policy, but is a policy that cannot be laughed down. It is one that is founded deep and broad in the Constitution of this country and its relations with other nations. It means simply that fair dealing with other nations is the best protection of peace with other nations. We cannot, by equipping ourselves with large guns, by making fortifications, insure peace.

When the time comes that the experiments of nations whose trade is war, whose people are in a continual state of turmoil because of apprehensions of war, shall have brought to those people the determination that the point has been reached at which the best gun that can be found has been found, then, sir, I shall go with you in equipping the fortifications of this country with that gun. But until that time does come, it is just and true economy to stand by the policy that we have stood upon during the past five years, that of appropriating simply enough to keep our fortifications from rusting and going to decay. When that time shall have arrived, I shall be with the Senator from Massachusetts in giving, not bristling fortifications that shall make us the equal of Russia or England, but a just measure of defense for our important harbors.

The Senator says that I ought not to find fault with the increase of the price of iron or the compensation of laborers. I do not, sir; but, putting the Government in my own place, I assert that it would be most unwise for me to enter upon the construction of a piece of work that I had to construct after the prices that had entered into that construction had become threefold that which they were during the five years preceding. Hence I say it is unwise and inexpedient, because of the reasons given by the Senator from Virginia and the reasons which I have just feebly attempted to give to the Senator from Massachusetts. I am unwilling as a Senator here to enter upon a policy that I know the Senator from Massachusetts will agree with me must entail upon the Government the expenditure of hundreds, if not thousands, of millions in reconstructing our fortifications, in placing new guns upon them, because the world is not to the point at which we ought to start, and because the necessities of this people demonstrate that it becomes us to take care of our money to pay our debts.

Mr. EATON. As a member of the Committee on Appropriations I desire to say that I am not myself in favor of a great expenditure of the public money at any time; and I do not propose at this time to call names against our friends on the other side of the Chamber if they have failed in the last ten years to properly prepare for defense of the country. The question is, is it proper that this bill should pass now in the form proposed, not whether the matter ought to have been done ten years or fifteen years ago or five years ago.

Now, sir, so far as the Committee on Appropriations can learn, it takes eighteen months to construct, to build a gun of the character four of which this committee have recommended that the United States should build, at an expense of perhaps $40,000 to the gun. If I am wrong my friend from Iowa will correct me.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator is right.

Mr. EATON. It is about that. Now, I desire to say that we have waited for fifteen years, and my good friend from Virginia places his reliance not only upon Providence but on torpedoes. He has waited fifteen years on the faith of Providence and on the faith of torpedoes, and now he—

Mr. WITHERS. And have we not been perfectly safe?

Mr. EATON. You have been perfectly safe; but both may fail you, though I hope neither will. But here is an expenditure of $40,000 a gun for four guns. There is not an armored ship afloat anywhere that can cross the Atlantic Ocean that would not be destroyed by this gun—not one.

They talk about those two Italian ships. The best engineers in France and Germany say that they cannot stand a storm in the Bay of Biscay, and England has not sent one out for the last four years that has not turned topsy-turvy and gone to the bottom.

Here is a gun at an expense of $40,000 that can destroy any ship that can cross the Atlantic Ocean at this time. Do not talk about your eighty-ton and your one-hundred-ton guns. They are not necessary. Science has determined this matter; science has determined that it is impossible that you should sail an armored ship across the Atlantic of the character of the two Italian ships. There is not a scientific man, so far as I know, in the army or navy of any country in the world but what has determined that question.

Now, I would build these four guns, and I am sorry that my friend from Kansas and my friend from Massachusetts who are so anxious to build them now did not build them four or six or eight years ago.

Mr. DAWES. So am I.

Mr. EATON. So are you. I am happy to get the admission from you. I do not propose myself to scold my republican friends because they failed to do this thing four years ago. If it is right to do it let us do it now—all of us, republicans and democrats—and not talk about whether it will cost $5 a ton more for iron or five cents an hour more for labor. If it is necessary let us do it.

I hope that this bill will pass as amended, and that we shall build these four guns—only four—as proposed. But, says my friend from Virginia—I think it was he, or perhaps it was the Senator from Kansas—in a very little while some new projectile will be discovered, some new armor will be invented that this gun will not penetrate. Very well, Mr. President; whatever guns we can make here to-day that we know will protect the harbors of Charleston and Norfolk and Boston and New York let us make them; and if there shall turn out to be an armored ship hereafter that can cross the Atlantic that these guns will not be effective against, then they can be placed at other points in our extended sea-coast, and we will have other guns to protect the great ports of entry of the country. I think there can be no loss here, no loss to the country in any sense, in constructing these four guns, and I hope the Senate will do it.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, I only want to say one word in vindication of the truth of history as to congressional legislation upon this subject. The Senator from Connecticut has expressed his regret that this side of the Chamber did not four years ago inaugurate this policy which some of our friends are now contending for. I want to say to that Senator that the policy of doing nothing except appropriating merely enough money to prevent our fortifications from going to ruin was adopted just four years ago, when the other end of the Capitol announced the policy before the country of saving $40,000,000, as they said they were going to save, when they went to work and cut down everything everywhere, without rhyme or reason, for the purpose of making a showing on paper of saving $40,000,000, and afterward came in and made up a very large proportion of it by deficiency bills.

I know that for several years I have, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, struggled to have some appropriations made for harbor defenses. I did not believe in the policy of merely preventing them from rotting down. But I say to the Senators on the other side that it has been utterly impossible to do it, because appropriations for this purpose would count in the appropriation bills, and they would fall at the other end of the Capitol to show a large saving upon former appropriations. And hence the policy has been adopted and pursued to leave our harbors utterly defenseless, as they have been left for the last few years.

I am very glad to see that a new spirit is taking possession of some of our friends on that subject, and I for one am ready to co-operate with them to the best of my ability in making the necessary appropriations for arming these forts to some extent. I protested against this four years ago from this very place where I am now speaking. I attempted to show then that it was bad economy; that instead of suspending all these works at a time when the appeal made by the Senator from Pennsylvania could not be made that everything was high priced, but at a time when the labor of the country was prostrate, when iron was almost worthless, when it would be not only a benefit to the country to make these appropriations but a benefit to the people to have the work to do, the true course was to go on with these works. But that was refused because it was believed it would swell the aggregate of appropriations, and consequently these defenses were left unprovided for.

Mr. EATON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield?

Mr. WINDOM. Certainly.

Mr. EATON. I hope my friend will not misunderstand me. I think I used the expression that I had no hard words to say with regard to my friends on the other side; no matter what caused this thing, whether it should have been done ten years ago or five years ago or four years ago, if it is right let us do it now. That was my expression. I certainly did not mean to say one word to give cause for any expression from my friend from Minnesota of the character which he has chosen to use with regard to me.

Mr. WINDOM. My friend did use the expression "four years ago."

Mr. EATON. I think I said "ten years ago, or five years ago, or four years ago."

Mr. WINDOM. The expression "four years ago" was what struck my ear, and I remembered so well what took place four years ago, when the hue and cry was raised that forty millions must be saved, that I could not avoid making the remarks I have made in vindication of the truth of history, not with any personal reference to the remarks of my friend from Connecticut, however.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations striking out "two hundred and twenty-five" and inserting in lieu thereof "and the manufacture of four improved breech-loading twelve-inch rifled guns, four hundred."

Mr. WITHERS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not intend to occupy time; but inasmuch as the yeas and nays are to be called on this question, I desire to say a single word before the vote is taken.

Every argument made by those who oppose this amendment is an argument against this whole bill; and if these arguments are to prevail and control Senators in their votes, then this bill ought to be laid on the table, because every part of it and every feature of it is of the same character as the proposed amendment.

There are three things here. First, we propose to keep our fortifications in substantial repair; we do not propose to enter upon a new method of constructing fortifications. Secondly, we propose to continue experiments with reference to torpedoes. Thirdly, we propose to build gradually and systematically rifle-guns. All of these and each of them are essential to protect our harbors and our sea-coast defenses. All experiments which have been made with torpedoes show that they are ineffectual against methods and machines which have been invented to destroy them. The great English iron-clad ships have guards surrounding them which go along and lift up the torpedoes. There is no question about that. And the same principles of electricity which will set a mine of torpedoes on fire from the shore can also be used for counter-mining purposes and set torpedoes on fire from on board ship; and repeated experiments have been made showing that this can be done. So you cannot rely for your defense wholly on any torpedo system. A fleet of iron-clads comes up and the first iron-clad destroys entirely the torpedoes in the channel, and the remaining vessels of the fleet pass on and shell New York City or any of our great cities on the east or on the west.

I do not anticipate any trouble with any foreign nation more than any other Senators do, but if it is necessary to protect these fortifications at all, let us protect them with modern guns. Smooth-bore guns of course are of no effect against modern vessels, and we have only to-day one hundred and ten eight-inch rifled cannon in the United States. We have but one twelve-and-a-quarter-inch rifle-gun and an eleven-inch gun altered from a fifteen-inch smooth-bore. That to-day constitutes the modern system of guns in our Army and Navy and upon our fortifications.

Now, we simply propose here to add to this present armament four new twelve-inch rifle-guns, and we intend that these rifled guns shall be put at the places where they are most needed. The Senator from New York said in his remarks that he knew, and it did not need an engineer to tell him, that a twelve-inch rifled gun could be put anywhere en barbette or in parapet. I know of course that a twelve-inch rifled gun can be put out on the prairies in the State where I live; but I do not suppose the Chief of Engineers will order it there. I suppose he will order it in New York Harbor or at Hampton Roads or at some other place where the heavy iron-clads can enter a harbor; and that to the extent of its ability it will resist that entrance; and we have only four or five of those places.

Mr. President, I submit that if we are to have any fortification bill at all, we should begin this process of manufacturing new guns. The Chief of Engineers told us that to properly protect the harbor of New York alone would require some four or five hundred of these guns, and with new fortifications added also. We simply make this beginning, it is an experiment, with $175,000, and that is all. I should be willing myself to increase it to $500,000, or $900,000 as the Ordnance Department recommend. We have added simply a small sum here for the purpose of building two guns instead of using the whole appropriations for the transformation of smooth-bores into rifled guns.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, I only desire to state in a very few words the reasons which induce me to support the amendment offered by the Committee on Appropriations.

We have not from Portland, Maine, to the mouth of the Rio Grande one single well-defended harbor. We have not in the entire American Navy enough good sea-going vessels to make a respectable Pinare fleet. That is our condition, and we would find it a startling condition if we should get into a war with a foreign country.

The policy of the Government has been, whether wisely or unwisely I will not say, to make appropriations simply to preserve and protect the existing harbor defenses and make the necessary repairs. The purpose of this amendment is to make four improved breech-loading twelve-inch rifled guns. It is claimed, and said to be so on the authority of scientific men, that these guns will pierce any iron-clad vessel afloat and be capable of sinking it. While I have grave doubts of the realization of these expectations, they appear to be entertained by those who ought to know, and it is an experiment which, if successful, will far more than compensate the appropriation, and if unsuccessful we can try some other plan. The scientific men may be right and I may be wrong, but if we can make twelve-inch rifled guns which will sink the strongest sea-going iron-clad vessels, then it is an experiment well worth the expenditure of the comparatively trifling amount of money which is put down here, and if that experiment results successfully with that class of guns or with guns still more improved, we may protect our harbors from Portland to the mouth of the Rio Grande as they ought to be protected, and at comparatively small cost.

Mr. EATON. Will the Senator allow me one word?

Mr. MAXEY. Certainly.

Mr. EATON. I think my friend alluded to a remark I made. I said that except the Italian iron-clad and one other there were no ships afloat that this projectile would not pierce, though I did not say, nor have I ever heard, that any scientific man has said that a projectile from this gun would pierce either of these ships; but they can no more come here than I can swim there.

Mr. MAXEY. I was going to ask the Senator from Connecticut if he supposed that the iron-clad vessels to which he referred will ever cross the Atlantic Ocean?

Mr. EATON. No; they cannot get here.

Mr. MAXEY. As a matter of course I am referring to the class of vessels which are sea-going vessels—iron-clads—made for the purpose of attack and defense; the vessels to which he refers are simply splendid floating batteries, designed for harbor defense—not attack. I had no reference to those two vessels of which the Senator makes mention, for of course I have not thought they will ever attempt to cross the Atlantic. I had in mind the class of vessels which might attack New York Harbor, Boston Harbor, or any other harbor in the United States, and I say I do not believe that these guns would sink the class of iron-clad sea-going vessels now made by the great nations of the world, and designed for both attack and defense.

At the same time I do not care to put my individual opinion against what is classed as the scientific opinion, and entertained by members of the Appropriations Committee, who appear convinced of the feasibility of the plan by those who have made this subject a study. At all events it is well worth the experiment, and if this experiment shall prove the fact that twelve-inch rifled guns can protect our harbors, then we can begin in due time, and I hope not very far off, to protect our harbors from Portland to the mouth of the Rio Grande; from Sitka to San Diego. Then, in connection with the shore batteries of such guns and the torpedo system, which has been tried very recently in the Turco-Russian war and elsewhere, we may feel reasonably secure. I do not believe that the torpedo system would be of any avail whatever unless protected by shore batteries. If shore batteries can be made out of this kind of guns, all right, you will at least have some sort of protection to your harbors.

This simply is in the nature of an experiment, and on an exceedingly small scale. If it be a wise thing to make these guns, as the committee tell us it is from the information they have, the amount is a mere trifle; and it is sound policy, it is sound economy on the part of the United States Government to make the appropriation, if the testimony before the committee was fairly satisfactory, as I have no doubt it was to them. For that reason I shall support the bill, and I do hope and trust that the time will come when the Naval Committee will courageously bring in here and present a bill for an American Navy such as is worthy of the American people, and then I hope that such navigation laws will be enacted as will enable ships built anywhere to be bought by Americans and registered under the American flag and let the American people go upon the markets of the world and get for their money the best ships they can for the least amount of money. Let the free flag of America protect American owned and registered ships wherever built. Thus we shall have, very soon, a marine to protect worthy the American people, a Navy to protect it, and our great commercial cities on the seaboard protected by an efficient Navy and proper defenses of their harbors. All that cannot be done in a day, but this is a step in the right direction. Let us have well-defended harbors; a merchant marine worthy this great country, and a Navy capable of protecting it on every sea, in every clime.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, if I do not say anything on this amendment, will the next thing to be done be to take the question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question before the Senate is on the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations on which the yeas and nays have been ordered, and if the Senate is ready for the question those Senators favoring it will, as their names are called, answer "yea," and those opposed answer "nay."

Mr. MORRILL. Then I will not say anything.

The question being taken by yeas and nays resulted—yeas 47, nays 12; as follows:

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I desire to offer the following amendment, to come in on line 18, after the word "dollars"—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from Pennsylvania that from line 18 to 27 has not been read. Let that be read, and then his amendment can be taken up.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Committee on Appropriations has no further amendment, but the reading of the bill should be completed.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Now the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the proposed amendment, which was, after the word "dollars," in line 18, to insert:

Provided, That the manufacture of said guns shall not be confined to guns exclusively of any one system.

Mr. WITHERS. I suggest to the Senator from Pennsylvania whether that matter had not better be left to the Ordnance Department.

Mr. WALLACE. The Senate has determined that these four guns shall be constructed. Pennsylvania thinks one of them ought to be built on a different system from that which the Ordnance Department has agreed upon, the Crispin system. As the bill now stands, there will be four guns built of one class. We think there are other guns quite as good as that. This is to permit the department to adopt one of those guns.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. As I understand, there are two or three different kinds or systems of guns, and this money is to be expended in experimenting upon the different kinds of guns; but the Ordnance Department, as I am told, and I believe such to be the fact, have determined to expend it all upon one system, to make four guns of one kind. If there are other guns of equal value with the one they have determined upon I want one of those guns tried. They have one system of rifling called the Crispin system. There is another one called the Mann system. There is still another which has some other name. Each manufacturer claims that his gun is at least equally good with the others, and probably a little better. I want the experiments made upon more than one kind.

Mr. SAULSBURY. May I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania whether the inventor of this gun has a patent upon it—Mr. Crispin?

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I do not know anything about that; whether there is a patent or not on the gun. There are probably patents on all these guns, but I do not know it to be so.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I know in the Post-Office Department there are provisions that the Department shall pay nothing for royalty; and I do not know but that it would be a very proper provision to put on this bill that no part of the money appropriated shall be used to pay royalty to an inventor.

Mr. WALLACE. I think there is nothing of that kind in reference to either of these systems or descriptions of guns. As I said when I was up before, the guns which the Ordnance Department has selected are known as the Crispin guns. I think they have been testing a number of guns of different character for the last six, eight, perhaps ten years. A gun known as the Mann gun has been constructed in Pennsylvania and is believed to be quite the equal of the Crispin gun. Our apprehension is that if the bill stands as it is, the department will apply the money exclusively to the purchase of the four guns of the Crispin character. We want an opportunity to have one of the other guns built and tested. That is all there is of it. The department has seen the gun and I think there is no royalty on it whatever, no claim for patent whatever. I think I may safely say that in neither character of guns is there any attempt to claim any patent or royalty whatever. The simple purpose of this amendment is to require the department to build one of another series of guns than those four that they have as I understand it, agreed or undertaken to build.

Mr. BECK. The matter was laid before the sub-committee and I believe before the whole committee as well, by the Senator from Pennsylvania as to requiring the department to make some of the four guns of a different character from the others; and the committee believed it was not good policy for Congress to dictate to the department what character of guns they should use. We assumed that the Ordnance Office, after all the experiments they have made and with all the information they have obtained, were much better qualified to judge as to what was the best gun than either the Senate or the House of Representatives. This amendment will compel the department to take some other gun even if they are satisfied one is much the best. We were unwilling to say that.

You will observe the language "and for machine guns, including the conversion of smooth-bore cannon into rifles." Some years ago it was "for the purchase of the Gatling gun," and as soon as that was inserted, although I believed the Gatling gun was the best, men came from all parts of the country and said "we have guns equal to the Gatling gun; this gun, that gun, which is quite as good." The committee then very properly, instead of limiting the Ordnance Department to any particular gun, even the Gatling as a "machine gun," as was once proposed, leaving it for the department to determine, thought it would not be proper for us to say they shall select a particular gun whether they like it or not. Let them get the best, and be responsible to us and the country for what they do. That is the objection we had to the suggestion.

Mr. McPHERSON. I did not hear the Senator from Kentucky.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey will suspend his remarks until the Senate is in order.

Mr. McPHERSON. I rose simply to make an inquiry. I understand the Senator from Kentucky has already answered the inquiry, but not being able to hear him I wish to put a question. Would not the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania have the effect of compelling the Ordnance Department to accept guns which they did not approve of?

Mr. BECK. Certainly; that is the very reason why I said we should not do it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CAMERON.]

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MAIL TRANSPORTATION DEFICIENCY.

Mr. WALLACE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4736) to provide for a deficiency in the appropriations for the transportation of the mails on star routes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WALLACE. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I rise to a personal explanation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. ALLISON. What is the question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana is recognized.

CHARGES AGAINST SENATOR KELLOGG.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I ask that the Secretary read the extract that I have marked.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana asks that an extract be read by the Secretary. The Secretary will read it.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

CHARGES AGAINST SENATOR HILL—THE WOMAN RAYMOND BROUGHT TO WASHINGTON FOR POLITICAL PURPOSES.

It is well understood in Washington that the woman Jessie Raymond was carried there by W. P. KELLOGG, the carpet-bag Senator from Louisiana, and that he has been threatening for some time to have this suit brought unless Senator HILL would cease his efforts to have him (KELLOGG) unseated. The story of the seduction is not believed by those acquainted with the facts, and, even if it be true, resort to so dastardly a means to attain a political end can only recoil on the head of the concocter of the scheme.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, this article is published in the New Orleans Democrat, which reached me in my mail last night. The same matter in substance I find was recently telegraphed from this city to several points in the South. I have never heretofore noticed a newspaper article, however unjustly or falsely it may have reflected upon me. I do not know that I ought to notice this even now; but possessed, as I am, of some information that I deem reliable, and which leads me to believe that there is a settled purpose in this article, and others of like import, to prejudice me regarding a matter that may come before this Senate, or to divert public attention from another quarter to myself, or in some manner prejudice me, I feel justified in calling attention to this article.

I desire to say that the article read by the Secretary, so far as it relates to me, is absolutely false in every respect; that I never at any time had any connection whatever with the matter alluded to in this article either directly or indirectly; nor had I any knowledge of the matter until it was generally known; nor had any other person or persons, with my knowledge or consent, any connection, directly or indirectly, with this matter. I pronounce the authors or originators of this charge, whoever they may be, or wherever they may be, wanton and malicious calumniators, who characteristically strike in the dark and in the back, but are too cowardly to come to the front.

Mr. WALLACE. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I offer a resolution—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania withdraw his motion?

Mr. WALLACE. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Whereas the following appears in the New Orleans Democrat, a newspaper published in New Orleans, on the 9th day of March, 1880, purporting to be extracted from a newspaper called the Charleston News:

"It is well understood in Washington that the woman Jessie Raymond was carried there by W. P. KELLOGG, the carpet-bag Senator from Louisiana, and that he has been threatening for some time to have this suit brought unless Senator HILL would cease his efforts to have him (KELLOGG) unseated. The story of the seduction is not believed by those acquainted with the facts; and, even if it be true, resort to so dastardly a means to attain a political end can only recoil on the head of the concocter of the scheme."

Resolved, That a committee of five Senators be appointed by the Chair who shall inquire and report concerning the truth of the charges and allegations in said article and the facts and circumstances connected therewith. Said committee shall have power to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to employ a clerk and stenographer, and to sit during the sessions of the Senate.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, has the Senate come to this, that every article scandalizing a Senator that appears in any newspaper in the country, great or small, is to require a committee of the Senate to investigate it? It is time that we should stop this abuse of ourselves, for it is a degradation to the Senate to take notice in this way of such charges. I will not ask for a vote on this now, but I give notice that when the resolution shall come up on Monday I shall ask the Senate to lay it on the table and let it sleep the eternal sleep. The resolution goes over, of course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution goes over.

Mr. WALLACE. I renew my motion that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at four o'clock and fifty minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, March 12, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

INDIAN TRUST FUNDS.

Mr. SCALES. Mr. Speaker, I ask by unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table a bill, Senate bill No. 1195, and to put it upon its passage. If gentlemen hear what the bill is and what it proposes they will not object. It is important it should pass to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will briefly state the object of the bill.

Mr. SCALES. The object is this: There has come into the hands of the Secretary of the Interior a very large amount of Indian trust funds. He asks permission by this bill, for he cannot do it without authority of law, to deposit them in the Treasury in order that he may draw interest upon those funds. He cannot now invest them because the law requires he should get 5 per cent. He cannot, in bonds, get 5 per cent., and therefore the funds must remain in his hands without drawing interest, a barren fund to the Indians unless this bill is passed. It simply allows him to deposit the funds in the Treasury.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection; but the bill does not seem to be upon the Speaker's table.

HOMESTEAD SETTLERS.

Mr. PAGE. I ask by unanimous consent to refer a bill while the Clerk is looking for the bill of the gentleman from North Carolina.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

On motion of Mr. PAGE, by unanimous consent, a bill (S. No. 316) for the relief of homestead settlers on the public lands was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

MISSION OF SAINT JAMES, WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

On motion of Mr. STEVENSON, by unanimous consent, the Committee of the Whole House was discharged from the further consideration of a bill (H. R. No. 3278) for the relief of the mission of Saint James, in Washington Territory, and the same was recommitted to the Committee on Private Land Claims, not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CONTRACT.

Mr. MANNING. Mr. Speaker, I ask by unanimous consent to present for action at this time a preamble and resolution, to which I think there will be no objection, as a similar resolution was introduced a few days ago in the Senate and referred to the Judiciary Committee there, without objection from anybody.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas it has been announced in the public press that a contract has been entered into by and between the Central Pacific Railroad Company and the Union Pacific Railroad Company on the one part, and the Pacific Mail Steamship Company on the other part, by the terms of which contract the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, in consideration of receiving $1,320,000 annually for five years from the railway companies, binds itself to accept and charge such rates for freight and passengers as may be fixed by the railroad companies, and to collect the same from the commercial public; and

Whereas the effect of such a contract is directly prejudicial to the public interest and contrary to the public policy that controlled Congress in chartering the Union Pacific Railroad Company, and in granting to both railway companies large subsidies in money and lands: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be directed to inquire, specifically, whether such a contract exists, and to do so shall have power to send for persons and papers, and shall report what legislation is necessary to protect the public interests in the premises; and such committee may sit in vacation and report by bill or otherwise.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BREWER. Does that provide for a special committee?

The SPEAKER. No; but refers the investigation to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I have just come in and do not know what it is, and must object.

Mr. MANNING. Several days ago this matter was called up in the Senate and a resolution similar to the one I have offered was adopted unanimously, referring the question to the Judiciary Committee, as it involves the power of Congress to legislate on this subject.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I may be under a misapprehension, and I must ask for the reading of the resolution.

Mr. MANNING. You will have no objection to it, I think, when you have heard it read.

The resolution was again read,
Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I have no objection to the consideration of that.

Mr. NEWBERRY. I object.

INDIAN TRUST FUNDS.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now report the bill which the gentleman from North Carolina, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, asked and obtained permission to take from the Speaker's table. The delay in finding it was caused by a mistake in the number.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. No. 605) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to deposit certain funds in the United States Treasury in lieu of investment.

Be it enacted, etc. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to deposit in the Treasury of the United States any and all sums held by him or which may hereafter be received by him as Secretary of the Interior and trustee of various Indian tribes on account of the redemption of the United States bonds or other stocks and securities belonging to the Indian trust fund, and all sums received on account of the sales of Indian trust lands and the sales of stocks lately purchased for temporary investment, whenever he is of the opinion that the best interests of the Indians will be promoted by such deposits, in lieu of investments; and the United States shall pay interest thereon semi-annually, from the date of deposit of any and all such sums in the United States Treasury at the rate per cent. stipulated by treaties or prescribed by law; and such payments shall be made in the usual manner, as each may become due, without further appropriation by Congress.

Passed the Senate February 9.

Mr. HOOKER. Is that a Senate bill?

Mr. SCALES. It is. If the gentleman from Mississippi will permit me, the Secretary of the Interior at present cannot make any investment in United States bonds because they do not pay 5 per cent. The United States is bound by law to pay 5 per cent. The only remedy is to deposit the fund in the Treasury and allow it to draw interest, which can be obtained.

Mr. HOOKER. Does that provide for the payment of the annual interest on these funds?

Mr. SCALES. Yes. I will state that at present the Secretary cannot make any investment in United States bonds, because they do not pay 5 per cent.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SCALES moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHEROKEE AND ARKANSAS RIVER RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. CLAFLIN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5086) to incorporate the Cherokee and Arkansas River Railroad Company; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals, and ordered to be printed.

SARAH J. HILLS.

Mr. CLAFLIN also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5087) for the relief of Sarah J. Hills; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ELIZABETH D. THOMAS.

Mr. MCGOWAN. Mr. Speaker, a pensioner in the State of Michigan, a widow with a dependent family, was allowed a pension by the Department, and the arrears amounted to about $1,424. The voucher went to the pension agency at Detroit, and was allowed, and a check was drawn on the depository there for the payment, but was lost in transmission through the mails. In order to secure her payment she made the necessary affidavit as to the loss—

Mr. MILLS. Is this in the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. It is by unanimous consent.

Mr. MCGOWAN. When it was ascertained that the Department only paid or made duplicate checks where the loss was $1,000 or less. In order to get her payment she must wait now for three years or else a special act must be passed for her benefit to allow a duplicate check to issue. This matter was laid before the Pension Committee this morning and they are unanimously of the opinion that a bill of that character ought to pass, and in obedience to their instructions I now present a bill and ask unanimous consent that it be passed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc. Whereas the United States pension agent at Detroit, Michigan, on the 29th day of May, 1879, issued a check, numbered 59425, drawn on the Second

National Bank of Detroit, a United States depository, in favor of Elizabeth D. Thomas, a pensioner, residing at Grass Lake, Michigan, for the sum of $1,424.70, in payment of pension then due said Elizabeth D. Thomas; and

Whereas said check was lost while being transmitted by mail from Detroit to said pensioner at Grass Lake and has not since been found or paid: Therefore,

That the pension agent at Detroit, Michigan, be, and he is hereby, instructed to issue duplicate check numbered 59425 for $1,424.70, in favor of Elizabeth D. Thomas, for one lost in the mail May 29, 1879: Provided, That said Elizabeth D. Thomas shall first execute a bond with good and sufficient securities to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury to hold the United States harmless against the double payment of said check.

The bill (H. R. No. 5089) was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

HARLOW S. STREET.

On motion of Mr. SPARKS, by unanimous consent, Senate bill No. 747, for the relief of Harlow L. Street, was taken from the Speaker's table, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. McMAHON. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. There are several gentlemen who desire an opportunity of referring bills, and the Chair hopes the gentleman will now give them a few moments before demanding the regular order.

Mr. McMAHON. I withdraw the demand.

TRADE-MARKS.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred House resolution No. 125, "to amend the Constitution of the United States," and a bill (H. R. No. 2573) "to authorize the registration and protection of trade-marks," and several petitions on the same subject, by unanimous consent, reported, as a substitute, a bill (H. R. No. 5088) to authorize the registration of trade-marks, and to protect the same; which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, recommitted and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. Under the new rule these subjects cannot be brought back under a motion to reconsider.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I ask unanimous consent to have a Senate bill taken from the Speaker's table for reference to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. BARBER. I demand the regular order.

Mr. DAVIDSON. My request is merely for the reference of a bill to a committee.

Mr. BARBER. I have bills also which I desire to refer. I cannot yield.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the morning hour; and this being Friday, the morning hour is devoted to the call of committees for reports of a private nature, under the new rule.

Mr. McMAHON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McMAHON. My object being to have the House proceed with the consideration of an appropriation bill, I wish to know whether dispensing with the morning hour will give the entire day for that purpose or if it will require two motions?

The SPEAKER. It will require two motions, under the new rules: first, to dispense with the morning hour, which under clause 3 of Rule XXIV requires a two-thirds vote; and, secondly, to dispense with the consideration of private business, which under Rule XXVI requires a two-thirds vote. The Clerk will read the rules.

The Clerk read clause 3 of Rule XXIV, as follows:

The morning hour for the call of committees shall not be dispensed with except by a vote of two-thirds of those present and voting thereon.

The Clerk also read Rule XXVI, as follows:

Friday in every week shall be set apart for the consideration of private business unless otherwise determined by a two-thirds vote of the members present and voting.

The SPEAKER. The reading of the rules is itself a sufficient answer to the question of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. McMAHON. For the purpose of enabling the House to proceed to the consideration of an appropriation bill, I now move that the morning hour be dispensed with. After that has been voted upon favorably I will then move to proceed to the consideration of the appropriation bill as against the Private Calendar.

Mr. GARFIELD. I think the gentleman will find the House disposed to agree with him as to taking up the appropriation bill. But I ask him before he insists on his motion to allow me to report a bill from the Committee on Ways and Means that it may be put upon the Calendar and printed. It is a unanimous report from the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BARBER] is the gentleman who demanded the regular order. If any matters are to come in by unanimous consent the Chair must recognize the gentleman from Florida, [Mr. DAVIDSON.]

Mr. McMAHON. I insist on the regular order, and ask a vote on my motion to dispense with the morning hour.

The question being put on Mr. McMAHON's motion, there were—ayes 106; noes 47.

Mr. BRIGHT. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. McMAHON and Mr. BRIGHT were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 118, noes 43. So the morning hour was dispensed with, (two-thirds voting in favor thereof.)

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio now moves that the operation of Rule XXVI, setting apart Friday for the consideration of private business, be dispensed with.

Mr. McMAHON. For the purpose of proceeding to the consideration of an appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. That the gentleman states for the information of the House. The motion can only be agreed to by a two-thirds vote.

Mr. McMAHON. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. McMAHON and Mr. BRIGHT were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 122, noes 29.

So the motion was agreed to, (two-thirds voting in favor thereof.)

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. McMAHON. The Committee on Appropriations, to whom was recommended the bill to provide for certain deficiencies for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, have authorized me to report back the said bill, with an amendment and a short accompanying report, which I ask may be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 4924) making appropriations to supply certain deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes.

Mr. DUNNELL. I wish to ask if this bill has been printed.

Mr. McMAHON. Yes, sir; all except an amendment, which is contained in about three lines.

Mr. FORT. I do not know whether there is anything in this bill subject to points of order; but I reserve all points of order.

Mr. McMAHON. I ask that the report of the committee be now read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The money appropriated by this bill amounts to $1,265,530.50, intended to supply money for what are supposed to be the urgent needs of the Government for the present fiscal year, and no other moneys are appropriated.

The chief items are for the public printing, ($400,000;) $600,000 for the United States marshals and their general deputies, and for the completion of the public building in Chicago, ($100,000.)

For additional service in the Post-Office Department, made necessary by the extension of that service, $42,500 is appropriated.

For transportation of nearly fifty millions of coin to Philadelphia and other places, for change into bullion, and the reshipment of same, the sum of $25,000 is appropriated.

The sum appropriated for the public printing and binding, if added to sums already appropriated, will make the expenditures for the fiscal year 1880 $1,892,162. The expenditure, if continued to end of fiscal year at same rate, would be $2,223,243 per annum. This is nearly five hundred thousand dollars more than have been expended for any year since 1875.

Mr. McMAHON. I now ask that the amendment be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the clause at the end of the bill, stating the total sum to be appropriated, and insert as follows:

Department of Justice: for the payment of the fees and expenses of United States marshals and their general deputies during the fiscal year ending June 30, A. D. 1880, $600,000.

The total sum recommended by this bill is $1,265,530.50.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to reserve all points of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FORT] has done so.

Mr. GARFIELD. Of course the bill must go to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. That is one of the points.

Mr. McMAHON. I desire to inquire of the gentlemen on the other side whether two hours of general debate upon this bill will be satisfactory to them. I will state in making that inquiry that there are provisions in this bill which ought to be made the law at a very early day.

Mr. CONGER. I understand that there are propositions, or will be, by way of amendment to this bill, involving the question of putting political riders on appropriation bills. If that be so, then two hours will not be enough for general debate.

Mr. ATKINS. My colleague on the committee [Mr. McMAHON] means two hours on each side.

Mr. McMAHON. Four hours in all.

Mr. GARFIELD. If this bill is simply and purely an appropriation bill, then we will want but little time for general debate. But if on the contrary there are provisions in the way of riders which will raise other questions, then we cannot tell how long a time will be needed for debate.

Mr. McMAHON. I know of no riders to the bill, except that I understand the Committee on Printing proposes to offer an amendment in regard to the election of Printer.

Mr. GARFIELD. Then let it be understood that if such an amendment be offered debate can be had upon it beyond the debate allowed by the agreement.

Mr. BURROWS. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURROWS. Is it in order to limit debate upon the bill before it has been considered at all in Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. BURROWS. Then I object to limiting debate.

Mr. GARFIELD. Then let us go into Committee of the Whole and commence debate.

Mr. McMAHON. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the deficiency appropriation bill; and in order to test the sense of the House I move, pending that motion, that all general debate upon the bill be limited to four hours.

Mr. BURROWS. I have made the point of order that that cannot be done.

The SPEAKER. The uniform practice of the House has been to commence the consideration of a bill in Committee of the Whole before any limitation is put upon debate.

Mr. McMAHON. Very well; then I move to go into Committee of the Whole.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION, ETC.

Pending the motion to go into Committee of the Whole,

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report, dated the 9th instant, from the Secretary of State, with the accompanying papers, in answer to a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 25th ultimo, requesting the President to transmit to that body, if not deemed incompatible with the public interest, copies of such dispatches as have recently been received by the Secretary of State from the consul-general at Shanghai upon the subject of slavery in China and those portions of the penal code of China which forbid expatriation.

R. B. HAYES.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, March 11, 1880.

Mr. DAVIS, of California. I move that the message just read, with the accompanying papers, be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

MARY A. M'KINNEY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting papers in the case of Mary A. McKinney; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

MILLER'S CARTRIDGE EXTRACTOR.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, recommending an appropriation to pay damages awarded for the use of Miller's patent cartridge extractor; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

DAMAGES BY FIRE AT CAMP SUPPLY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the petition of Captain W. J. Lyster, Nineteenth Infantry, and others, for relief on account of losses sustained by fire at Camp Supply, Indian Territory, July, 1877; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. No. 3258) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior and Secretary of War to employ additional clerks for the balance of this fiscal year to expedite the settlement of pension applications, and for other purposes.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted, as follows:

To Mr. MITCHELL, for a few days, on account of important business; and

To Mr. MCCOOK, indefinitely, on account of important business.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. OVERTON asked and obtained unanimous consent for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of Charles M. Warner; no adverse report.

RIVERS AND HARBORS IN LOUISIANA.

The SPEAKER. On behalf of the Committee on Commerce the Chair asks consent that the surveys and estimates for the improvement of rivers and harbors in Louisiana, lately sent to the House from the War Department, and referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed, be withdrawn from the Public Printing Office and referred in manuscript to the Committee on Commerce, as they are needed by the committee in the consideration of business before it. There is some difficulty in the printing-office in regard to printing these maps and estimates, and they are needed immediately by the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CONGER. To be withdrawn only temporarily, I suppose.

The SPEAKER. Yes, so that the committee may have immediate access to the manuscript.

Mr. CONGER. Let the order be made for the temporary withdrawal only, so that they will be printed hereafter.

Mr. ACKLEN. There is no objection to that.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs upon the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McMAHON] that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering a deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I want to give notice to the House that I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to offer an amendment to the deficiency appropriation bill, proposing a change in the manner of electing the Public Printer.

Mr. WILSON. Let that amendment be read.

The SPEAKER. The bill is now in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the Chair understands that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SINGLETON] gives notice of an amendment which he will offer to that bill.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. If there is no objection, I would like to have the amendment now read.

The SPEAKER. That is not necessary.

Mr. MCMAHON. Let it be read in committee when offered.

The motion of Mr. MCMAHON was then agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. CARLISLE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the deficiency appropriation bill, which, unless the first reading be dispensed with, the Clerk will now read.

The bill (H. R. No. 4924) making appropriations to supply certain deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, was read.

Mr. MCMAHON. Mr. Chairman, Members will have observed from the reading of the bill that the appropriations it contains are for the current fiscal year only—that this bill is not the general bill which usually comes in at the close of a session to clear up all deficiencies for the past and present fiscal years. It is for the purpose of providing the means of carrying on the Government in certain departments to the end of the present fiscal year. This appears to have been made necessary in most cases by the growing business of the country; in others probably by that inattention to the details of expenditure of which public officers are too frequently guilty; and in one instance, in my judgment, there has been a wanton disregard of the spirit of the law, if not its letter. I refer now to the appropriation for the Government Printing Office.

I will not spend any time in discussing the question whether the honorable Secretary of the Treasury ought to have more coal to steam up with during the present winter, or more ice to cool himself and subordinates before the 30th of next June. My impression is that he needs both in his Department. We have given him small appropriations for both purposes. Nor will it be worth while at present to allude to the minor appropriations contained in the bill. I will confine my remarks, in opening, to the two large items—the item of $600,000 for United States marshals and their general deputies, and $400,000 for the Government Printing Office.

The bill for the payment of United States deputy marshals was reported to this House on the 21st of January, 1880, ordered to be printed, and recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations. It has remained in that condition ever since. I say to the House (and I desire that the full extent of my words may be understood) that it has been withheld from report to the House up to this date by the unanimous vote of that committee. Pending the consideration of the new rules of the House, it was not deemed advisable by any member of that committee to report it back for consideration. The general deficiency bill upon which I am now speaking was finished (if it may be said to be finished yet) on the 5th of the present month, and reported to this House upon that day, ordered to be printed, and recommitted.

I will say to the Committee of the Whole that there are other matters which the Committee on Appropriations is now considering and which will probably go upon this bill. I make this statement in order that the House and the country may understand why this bill comes in at so late a day. Some of these items were not sent in to the committee until a very recent period. The new rules went into operation last Monday, I believe, and were only finished yesterday one week ago. I have therefore availed myself of almost the earliest opportunity consistently with the demands of other public measures (and I refer more particularly to the funding bill) to bring this bill before the house in order that it may be passed immediately.

In this bill the appropriation for the marshals is modified in its language, and differs slightly from the bill as originally presented to the House. The clause in the present bill reads as follows:

For the payment of the fees and expenses of United States marshals and their general deputies earned during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, $600,000.

Gentlemen will observe the language—"general deputies." The bill contains nowhere any appropriation for special deputy marshals. I call attention to this fact for the benefit of gentlemen on both sides of the House. The Committee on Appropriations thought it advisable to appropriate money for the general purposes of the courts and the prosecution of crimes only. We do not in this bill appropriate any money for special deputy marshals; and I doubt whether the democratic party ever will appropriate any money for such special deputies so long as the law stands in its present shape. It will be observed that the committee has confined itself to appropriation merely, and has ingrafted no legislation or words of exclusion. It has, however, failed or refused to appropriate any sum for special deputies.

Special deputy marshals are appointed only for congressional elections and only upon the occasion of such elections. They are creatures unknown to the law except when appointed for an election for Representatives about to take place. The last Congress adjourned without making any appropriation for special deputy marshals; indeed, it adjourned without making appropriation for any of the fees of marshals, because of a disagreement between the different departments of the Government. Of course the marshals and their general deputies attended to the business of the country without the appropriation, because the marshals of the United States and their general deputies do not derive their chief compensation out of the $600,000 which we appropriate to them in this bill. They are paid out of fees in admiralty cases and the other civil suits in which the United States Government is not a party. The United States marshals therefore continued to perform their duties, serving writs, warrants for private individuals and for the Government of the United States; looking to Congress to reimburse them for the expenses which they might incur in serving writs, &c., for the United States Government. This was an ordinary, legitimate service, which was never in dispute. And every one is ready to make this amount available for their use at as early a day as possible.

But, Mr. Chairman, while it was proper for the marshals of the United States to attend to the general business of the country, being already in office and having many duties to perform, it was not proper for any officer of this Government to appoint special deputy marshals when no appropriation had been made for that specific purpose, and when, on the contrary, all the appropriations for marshals had failed because Congress was unwilling to vote a dollar for special deputies, the President insisting upon the absence of certain restrictive clauses in the bill containing such appropriations.

I desire to say to gentlemen on both sides of the House that I have now no letter and know of none to offer to Congress from any officer of the Government stating we owe special deputy marshals in California anything. Indeed I do not suppose the Attorney-General would take the responsibility of saying that we did owe United States special deputy marshals any particular sum of money in the absence of appropriations, because the law is very explicit on the statute-book that no department of the Government has the power to incur an obligation in the absence of an appropriation for that purpose. The law was laid down distinctly by Attorney-General Williams in regard to the printing of postal-cards when no appropriation had been made for that purpose. The President of the United States confirmed the doctrine in a message which he sent to this House in the month of June, 1876; and the Secretary of the Treasury, in an executive document which I have before me, says expressly there is no power to incur any obligation on the part of the Government unless money has been appropriated for that special purpose. Therefore, although we know by report, by telegraph, and possibly by official letters in response to inquiry to the Attorney-General, that we had seventy-six hundred dollars' worth of special deputy marshals in the State of California at the late election in that State without knowing how many; yet they are not in a shape to claim any relief at the hands of this Government, and, in my judgment, they have long since been paid by the republican central committee. Any proposition to amend this bill by inserting $7,600 would be simply a proposition for the relief of the republican central committee.

Mr. HAWLEY. Has the gentleman any right to make that statement, or any information upon which he bases it?

Mr. MCMAHON. I base it upon the well-known character of the republican party.

Mr. HAWLEY. For paying its debts.

Mr. MCMAHON. Exactly. It pays its debts early; it never repudiates anything, not even the public debt.

Mr. HAWLEY. Is this a public debt?

Mr. MCMAHON. Oh, no; it is the private debt of the republican party.

Mr. HAWLEY. Is it a private debt in any sense of the word?

Mr. MCMAHON. Yes, sir. Is it the debt of the Government?

Mr. HAWLEY. That is to be argued; it is not a private debt.

Mr. MCMAHON. Is it the debt of the Government? If so, who incurred it?

Mr. HAWLEY. That is to be argued; it is not a private debt. That is what I am arguing.

Mr. MCMAHON. It is a private debt when certain gentlemen are put, as they have been, upon public duty for which no appropriation has been made, and are told if the Government does not pay them the private purse would. I know no public officer who has a right to create that debt on the part of the Government; the proposition is as plain as two and two make four, that if any debt exists it is the debt of the republican central committee, and cannot, in law, be the debt or obligation of the country. No department can incur an obligation in the absence of an appropriation, (except in the Army and Navy;) and no public officer will take the responsibility of saying that we owe (in its proper sense) any one in such a case.

Now, special deputy marshals are entitled, if properly appointed and there is an appropriation for them, to $5 a day. General deputies are entitled to the ordinary fees which are specified in the statute. A general deputy marshal is entitled to be present at elections under the election law, (if it be regarded as constitutional,) but he is entitled to no compensation for being present. The compensation of $5 a day is confined expressly to special deputy marshals. A general deputy marshal has no fees even for arresting a man without process on election day, for there are no such fees allowed. The supposition is that there is always a warrant, an attachment, or process of some kind or other. Of course, if he seizes a man who violates the law in his presence, he may be entitled to the ordinary fifty cents for the commitment of the prisoner. He may be entitled to ordinary fees for attending before a United States commissioner. But these are fees to which he would be entitled if he held a warrant, and are incurred in the ordinary course of judicial proceedings.

But the Committee on Appropriations thought, so far as their duty extended, that all they could do and all they were willing to do, in view especially of the recent decision of the Supreme Court, was this: that the general deputies' ordinary fees should be paid, but the extraordinary fees of the special deputy marshals should not, because no appropriation had ever been made for that purpose, and their employment was not authorized and created no obligation.

There cannot be two sides, Mr. Chairman, to the question of law that, whether a law is constitutional or not, we have the right to determine how much shall be appropriated under it, especially where no amount is fixed. For example, if a public building needs $500,000 to complete it Congress may say that in the present state of the Treasury, or in the present state of other advanced work, we will give nothing; yet the building ought to be completed; or we will give $50,000; yet that may not be enough; or we will give $100,000; and that may not be enough. By committing to the House power to appropriate, the right is absolutely left in the House to determine whether it will appropriate for a certain purpose and how much it will appropriate.

Of course I understand, as a legislator, that upon us rests the burden of refusing to carry out a law or refusing to carry it out properly. That is a responsibility we must take. We always have taken it, and I hope we always will without fear.

And I desire to say that because the Supreme Court of the United States has decided that the election law is constitutional by a sort of eight-by-seven decision—and I mean by that a division apparently according to party lines, (without impugning the good faith of any member of the Supreme Court, but to show how differently a legal question may appear to persons who have been educated in different political schools)—that although that court has decided the constitutionality of the law, that when we come, as legislators, to appropriate money it is our duty to say, is this law constitutional? or, if constitutional, is it a good law, and are we bound to appropriate money for it? Beyond that, we have a right to determine whether the exigency for any appropriation exists, or whether any obligation exists on the part of the Government for past services, or whether in the next fiscal year the country really needs money for this purpose.

Now, I think I have said enough on the question of the appropriations for marshals to make our purpose sufficiently clear.

I will proceed, Mr. Chairman, to the second branch, and that is to the appropriation of $400,000 for the continuance of the Public Printer's office. We have had a sub-committee at work that has been diligent in search of reliable information as to how much will be needed to carry on this Government for the rest of this fiscal year. That committee did not feel that it was authorized or bound to resolve itself into an investigating committee for the purpose of discovering whether there had been any fraud, peculation, or extravagance in this office, but simply how much was absolutely necessary to continue the service for the rest of the present fiscal year. We examined no witnesses; only made inquiries. In pursuit of that information, we have been to the First Auditor's Office, to the Register's Office, and have an official statement from each, which I will ask to have printed with others in an appendix to my remarks. We have also several statements from the Public Printer's office, which I will also ask to have printed, and from all of these I have myself made a table of the expense of the Government, as against each fiscal year from 1875 down to the present time.

Before I call the attention of gentlemen to the table I will mention a remarkable fact as to the Public Printer's official report. I defy any intelligent man to scan these reports and ascertain from them how much has been spent in any one fiscal year out of the appropriation made for that year. The Public Printer considers the law as satisfied when he reports to this House how much he spends in the course of the fiscal year, whether it was on account of obligations which were chargeable to the fund put at his disposal for that year or for one or two years before that time. I submit that is no intelligent report to the House of Representatives. We want to know in his annual report, and we will at the proper time cause the law to be so amended, if it requires amendment, that the amount expended for each fiscal year shall be reported by itself and charged to its proper year; so that when we appropriate $1,500,000 to carry on the printing department for any year, say 1879, he shall report to the House how much has been spent each year out of that fund. Thus the expenditures for the fiscal year ending 1878 are reported at $1,638,701, whereas they were in fact $1,741,152; and the expenditures for the fiscal year ending 1879 are reported at $1,716,012, whereas they were in fact only $1,573,352. And I mean, in the above, that out of the appropriations for those fiscal years the true expenditures (leaving out salaries and contingent expenses) were—1878, $1,741,152, and 1879, $1,573,352. After two years the unexpended balances are transferred to the United States Treasury as a surplus fund.

Without reading the tables from which I constructed my own, I desire to show to the House what have been the expenditures in this office heretofore. The result of a comparison of the Register's tables and of the tables furnished by the Public Printer, will show that for the year ending in 1875 we expended $1,651,530; for the year 1876, we expended during that year and for the two years subsequently, $1,637,712; for the year ending 1877 we spent $1,634,803; for the year 1878 we spent $1,741,152; for the year 1879 we spent $1,573,352, and for the year ending 1880 we have spent $1,482,162, to the 1st day of March last, eight months, and if we give to the Public Printer $400,000, which he asks, he will have received and expended during this year $1,882,000.

If we allow him to carry on his office for the remaining four months at the same rate of expenditure as he has carried it on during the first eight months of the current year, the expenditure of the fiscal year 1880 would be $2,223,243; $500,000 more than the amount that we have ever expended in any one fiscal year in the period I have designated.

What is the matter with the public printing or the Public Printer's office? I desire to make no charges against the gentleman who stands at the head of that department and has control of it. I would not like to undertake to say to this House how much of the business of that department he understands and how much he does not understand. But what is the cause of this enormous increase of the public printing?

A MEMBER. The extra session.

Mr. McMAHON. The statesman who has extra session of Congress on the brain says "extra session." I thank him for that word; for I was coming to that particular point. In the fiscal year 1879 Congress assembled in the month of December and the session ended about the 28th day of June. In the fiscal year of 1878 we came to the city of Washington, if I remember rightly, on the 15th October, 1877, and we staid until the 1st day of July 1878. That was a more protracted sitting of Congress than the regular and extra sessions of 1879 put together. But let me go back further. Let me go to the Forty-fourth Congress. In the first session of that Congress, when the democratic party first came into power in this House, the understanding was that investigations should be had. Every committee of this House, almost without exception, was ordered to investigate. The Committee on the Judiciary had the investigation of a distinguished Representative from Maine at that time, now Senator. I believe the Ways and Means Committee had an investigation; the Post-Office Committee, of which I was a member, had a very lengthy investigation on its hand. The Naval Committee had a very heavy investigation on its hand, and, we know, published during that session a pile of volumes several feet high.

The committees on expenditures in the various Departments had clerks and experts and were investigating and taking testimony. And the country was flooded with the literature of investigations, testimony and reports and all that, such as it has not been flooded with since. And during the following short session, during the fiscal year ending 1877, did we not appoint three large committees, the Louisiana, Florida, and South Carolina committees? The Louisiana committee was divided into three sub-committees. The Florida committee and the South Carolina committee were also divided into sub-committees. Then the Powers and Privileges Committee was at work. We had more investigation, more reports, more testimony during the Forty-fourth Congress than any Congress that has existed for a long time. Indeed it was said that this system of investigation was exceedingly costly and expensive to the Government, and that was one of the arguments used against it.

But without going into details, I have got the facts and figures, as taken from the Public Printer's reports, to show what the extra session cost this country, as compared with others. If you will take all the books, with their estimated cost, as I have the figures here reported by the Public Printer—all the reports, bills, resolutions, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, everything that belonged to the extra session of Congress, whether it helped us to anticipate the business of the regular session or not—you will find the total cost of printing during the extra session (including 15 per cent. additional cost of paper for the recent purchases up to the end of this year) will amount to $252,000 only. That includes all the printing that was ordered by Congress in its extra session; and of course we anticipated in that extra session much that we would have otherwise ordered at the regular session. Let me tell him that a great portion of the money that was spent in the extra session was spent out of the appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879. Nearly one-half of it was spent out of that appropriation. Nearly all the cost of the printing of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which amounted to $59,000, bound and unbound, would have to come out of that, because the bound volumes of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD are made up about one week after the daily RECORD is printed. The same is true of the bills and reports of committees, and everything else we have printed. All this came out of the appropriation for the year ending June 30, 1879, leaving—I have the figures here and will probably present the table as part of my printed remarks—leaving only as the expenditure for printing for this fiscal year, ordered by Congress, to come out of the appropriation for this year, $140,000 or $150,000. The extra session, say the gentlemen on the other side, was costly and expensive. I have gone to the trouble, for the information of the House, of taking the figures from the Public Printer's report, to show amount and cost of printing and binding ordered by various sessions of Congress from 1876.

I find that in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, the number of pages ordered to be printed by authority of the two Houses was 102,000, and the cost for the session ending in 1876 was $530,000. That was the year when the session of Congress ran to the middle of August. For the next year, with the short session of 1876-77, the number of pages printed was 57,921, and the cost was $434,652. For the fiscal year ending June, 1878—that was the year when Congress met on the 15th of October, 1877, and sat until June 28, 1878—the number of pages ordered to be printed was 114,110; the number of copies 17,696,000, and the cost $494,000. For the fiscal year ending 1879, the number of pages was 110,749; the number of copies 5,248,000, and the cost $556,000.

Now I will give separately what was ordered by the extra session, containing bills, reports, books, documents; all amounting to only 35,000 pages, 2,530,000 copies, and the cost, including the increased cost of paper for which we are not responsible, was $252,031. Therefore, when gentlemen say that this increased cost of the Government Printing Office is due to the extra session, they have invented a fraudulent excuse to cover up the extravagance or the want of attention to public business in the Public Printing Office. We have not in the last fiscal year ordered printing to the extravagant extent which gentlemen on the other side ask us to believe.

It has not been owing to that. Even if it was, if we had ordered printing to the same or a greater extent, the improvements in machinery, and the fancy of the present head of the Public Printing Office for machinery, would have enabled us to do all these things to the same extent at a much less cost. Let me read from page 15 of the report of the Public Printer for 1878 in regard to his improved machinery for printing and binding:

IMPROVED MACHINERY FOR PRINTING AND BINDING.

Improvements in machinery for the more rapid and economical manufacture of newspapers and books are constantly being made, and those who do not use them work to great disadvantage.

Seeing no reason why the Government Printing Office should not avail itself of some of these improvements, two large presses, on which to print the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and other work when not needed for that publication, have been put into it. More work can be done on these presses than can be done on twelve Adams presses, and by the employment of one-third of the number of employes required by those presses.

Nine book-sewing machines have also been put in operation, by which books are sewed with wire instead of thread, and at greatly reduced cost.

To ascertain the economy in their use a daily record is kept of the work done on each machine, and contrasted with the cost of hand-sewing.

Thus, in fifty-two weeks, there will be a saving of $21,632 over the old method, should the machines be constantly at work.

The saving is still greater in sewing larger books, such as the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and the Revised Statutes.

The result on the last edition of the Revised Statutes, being 15,000 copies, is as follows:

By hand.....	$2,400
By the machines.....	300
At a saving of.....	2,100

When that report was made the Public Printer had nine wire-sewing machines on hand. I am informed that he has since purchased four more. Yet what do we find? I have his monthly labor report here, what is called the pay-roll of the office. Notwithstanding the expenditures made during the last three years for improved machinery he is compelled to admit, for the figures do not admit of anything else, that whereas the pay-roll used to be some $90,000 a month it is now, or was for December, January, and February, $115,000 to $116,000 a month, or nearly that much.

Mr. FINLEY. Has the gentleman examined in order to ascertain if the number of employes have been increased or decreased?

Mr. McMAHON. I have not examined that subject; but the pay-roll has increased so largely that I have no doubt the number of employes has been increased.

I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, not only in view of this bill, but in view of other deficiencies that may come before the House, that wherever discretion is vested in a public officer in regard to the expenditure of large sums of money, you may depend upon it that that discretion will be abused. I do not say that a republican office-holder is made of different material from a democrat office-holder. All that I might claim would be that long continuance in office rendered him negligent of public matters, indifferent to measures of economy and reform, which new men with new reputations to make might inaugurate.

What check have we now upon the Public Printer? We give him millions of dollars for the public printing, with no checks as to expenditures. When the October election comes on, and the State of Ohio is supposed to be in danger, politicians endeavor to get some persons into positions. There is no limit to the number of employes in that Department. Very nearly every other Department of the Government is limited as to the number of its employes. You can tell exactly how many clerks or laborers can be employed in the State Department, how many in the Interior Department, how many in the Post-Office Department. But you do not know how many employes there are in the Public Printing Office. The great bulk of this money which has been so lavishly spent has been squandered by the unnecessary employment of too large a force, and probably I may add by the extravagant purchases of material and machinery.

Mr. HAWLEY. The gentleman says that probably he may add that statement. Has he any evidence of it at all?

Mr. McMAHON. Of material, yes. The gentleman himself will remember the question we put to the Public Printer himself.

Mr. HAWLEY. No, I do not remember anything; I wish you would state it.

Mr. McMAHON. It is convenient to have a memory of that kind; mine does not serve me so well.

Mr. HAWLEY. Imagination sometimes takes the place of memory.

Mr. McMAHON. You will find in his report an expenditure of $42,000 for type. When the Public Printer was before the committee he was asked at what price he had bought this type—at the catalogue price or at reduced rates. He said to the committee that he bought it at catalogue price. Now, I put it to the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. HAWLEY,] who runs a newspaper himself, whether he buys type at catalogue price or whether he does not get a deduction of from 15 to 35 per cent. when the purchase ranges from $2,000 to $50,000. I give this instance as an answer, in part, to the gentleman.

Then nine machines, costing $1,500 apiece, were bought upon the pretext that they were labor-saving machines; but when these machines are in full blast we find the pay-roll larger than it ever was before; therefore, I say that the Printing Office gets along worse with these labor-saving machines than without them; that $500 apiece for them would have been an extravagant expenditure if they have not saved money to the Government on the pay-rolls.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the gentleman allow me a remark?

Mr. McMAHON. Certainly.

Mr. HAWLEY. The gentleman says that the pay-roll is larger than it was before these stitching-machines were put in operation. Now, I submit it is not quite candid to state the matter in that way. The question should be, is the pay-roll larger for women employed in stitching books?

Mr. McMAHON. I do not see that distinction specified in the Public Printer's report.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not either.

Mr. McMAHON. I call attention, moreover, to the fact that after getting two large presses for the Printing Office, the Public Printer says in his report for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878:

More work can be done on these presses than can be done on twelve Adams presses, and by the employment of one-third of the number of employes required by those presses.

Now, I say to you, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, that this is an awful showing of economy if his report be true as to the capacity of these machines. I have made a rough estimate from the Public Printer's Report, of the cost of machines purchased by him in the last few years. I find that during the fiscal year ending in 1878 there were purchased, cylinder presses, $2,000; four roller presses, $4,000; fixtures, $512; one Acme cutting-machine, $900; one shaving machine, $390; one leading machine, $175; making $7,977. For binding: one Acme cutting-machine, $742; six sewing-machines, $9,000; fixtures, $400, and other machinery, making an aggregate for binding of $11,174, which, with the printing machinery, makes $19,151. I find that during the fiscal year ending 1879 there were purchased two printing-presses, $1,700; one printing-press, $3,800; one, $2,000; three pressing-machines, $3,000, and various other items, making the expenditure for printing machinery for that year, $18,280. Then there was machinery for binding: three presses, three wire-sewing machines, double-numbering machines, &c., amounting to $9,597, making the expenditure for machinery during the year, $27,877. For the present fiscal year the expenditure for this purpose, as reported by the Public Printer, is $61,000, making the expenditure for printing and binding machinery during the last three years, $109,025.

All this machinery has been purchased within the last two or three years; all of it is claimed to be labor-saving machinery. It is claimed that this machinery has been purchased directly by the Government without the intervention of any middlemen; that nobody interested in these purchases is hanging around the printing office to make anything out of them; that the sole object of the purchase was to cut down the number of employes. Yet if this Government Printing Office were run for the next four months at the same rate it has been run for the last eight months, the expenditure would amount to $2,283,000—$500,000 more than it cost before all this machinery was purchased.

Mr. FINLEY. The gentleman will allow me to make a single remark. As a member of the Committee on Printing, I had occasion to examine this matter; and I found that during the six years preceding the years of which the gentleman speaks, the present Government Printer and his predecessor purchased one hundred and thirty-six thousand seven hundred and fifty-seven dollars and ninety-six cents' worth of machinery.

Mr. McMAHON. Now, I do not dispute that this is an enormous establishment, which must constantly be renewing its type and possibly its machinery; but I submit that in the face of these recent purchases, justified in the report of the Public Printer upon the idea that they are to result in economy in the wages of employes, we ought to have some more intelligent explanation than we have had from this officer of his enormous pay-roll.

Mr. McMILLIN. Is it not a fact that the Government is also required to pay more for setting type in the Government Printing Office than is paid in private establishments through the country.

Mr. McMAHON. The Government is not required to pay more. The law as it stands fixes only a maximum rate—not the actual rate. It says the rate shall not exceed a certain amount.

Mr. McMILLIN. I mean to say, does not the Government actually pay more?

Mr. McMAHON. I do not find fault with the amounts paid to the employes or laborers of either sex who are engaged in that establishment.

Mr. McMILLIN. But is there not a general statute requiring that the Government shall pay no more for services rendered by these employes than is paid in private establishments for similar services?

Mr. McMAHON. I think not. I believe the law only names a maximum amount. I do not find fault with the rate of wages, as I have said. It is the large number who are employed, out of all proportion to the appropriation for the fiscal year.

Mr. LOUNSBERY. The Government is printing a large number of publications for public use, and I should like to ask the gentleman whether this increase in the expense of the printing department does not come from an increase of publications for the general public. I should like to know whether the gentleman has any report from the Public Printer as to the amount of money which has been covered into the Treasury from the proceeds of general publications.

Mr. McMAHON. From the proceeds of general publications?

Mr. LOUNSBERY. Yes, sir; from the proceeds of general publications.

Mr. McMAHON. There is no special fund devoted to the publication of any special work. The $1,500,000 we appropriated last year for the office of the Public Printer is used to-day on printing for the Departments or Congress, whether it be in the nature of letters, letter-heads, books, or any printing they have to do, except such as is done in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

Mr. LOUNSBERY. The specific point of my question is scarcely reached by the answer. Is the committee in possession of any report that now can be given to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union as to the amount of money received by the Public Printer from the sale of publications under the statute?

Mr. McMAHON. I can give the gentleman this information only approximately. The Public Printer's account is kept as follows: first, the amount appropriated for a certain year; then moneys paid in to his credit are given, and they rarely exceed fifty, or seventy, or a hundred thousand dollars a year. I do not think that the gentleman fully comprehends the method of printing done there, in view of his question. I will say to him that the Public Printer has given us a schedule of unfinished work that is on hand ordered by all Congresses, whether at the extra session or otherwise, which I have looked into. When he made this report to us he said it would require $340,000, in round numbers, to print all the books, documents, &c., which are now on hand; that it would require about $59,000 to print all the reports of committees of the two Houses, and the bills and resolutions, &c., and that the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD until the close of this session, provided we ran to the 30th day of June, would make about $90,000, which would make his total estimated expenditures for the rest of the fiscal year $490,000.

Mr. LOUNSBERY. If the gentleman will permit me: this point does not seem to be reached. The statute authorizes the Public Printer to print for sale to the general public at the cost of printing and 10 per cent. added. Among others the members of Congress make use of this statute, and therefore he receives from the general public and privately from members of Congress a fund. Is the Committee prepared to state to the Committee of the Whole House the figures of these receipts by the Public Printer for work done by him and the amount of money it reaches?

Mr. McMAHON. I can furnish the figures. I understand the gentleman. In the table which will be printed to-morrow, which I referred to as my own, the gentleman will find, for example, for the year 1875, that the total appropriation for that year was $1,645,507. He will then find a specific appropriation of $30,000 for engraving and lithographing, and he will find $35,545, which includes the sale of waste-paper, gold-leaf, the amount received from documents and speeches, and all the sums received by the Public Printer, carried to his credit in the Treasury Department.

Mr. LOUNSBERY. Please repeat that amount?

Mr. McMAHON. Thirty-five thousand dollars in 1875, $106,000 in 1876, $117,000 in 1877, $81,000 in 1878, $48,000 in 1879, and up to the present probably about $29,000.

Mr. LOUNSBERY. If the gentleman will now bear with me one moment, I wish to state that the purpose of my inquiry was to determine whether the excess of work put upon the Public Printing Office in furnishing this general public would account for the increased expense for the last quarter.

Mr. McMAHON. I think the gentleman will find amount realized from the sale of books has been small, and of course the expense was small. I do not think that has any appreciable bearing upon the increased expense.

Of course, Mr. Chairman, the object of this argument to-day is to enable the House to inquire intelligently how much money will be voted; whether $400,000, $300,000, or $250,000. I have no hesitation in saying that the amount reported by this bill is too large by at least $100,000. Of course, the committee has authorized and required me to report it at $400,000; but on this question the members of the committee are free to speak and act as they see proper.

In the estimate placed before us by the Printer he wants $90,000 to complete the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Anybody has but to look over the figures of the Public Printer's previous reports to find he will not need $90,000 for the rest of this fiscal year for that purpose. I asked him to estimate to me and I have his response here. I wished to know how much paper it will take and how much printing it will take, how much can go properly into the next fiscal year and how much is chargeable to this present fiscal year, supposing we ran to the 30th day of June, 1880. He cannot answer those questions; he does not answer them; and all he gives us is this large, outside figure of $90,000, which he makes large enough to cover every contingency.

He has given an estimate of what it will take to finish a certain work. For example I will take the Agricultural Report for 1878, which most of us supposed to be finished, until a few days ago we received the information it was not finished. We ordered printed last March 300,000 copies. The Public Printer says the estimated cost is $135,000, the estimated cost of engraving being $39,000, making a total of $164,133. He says he has already done all of this work except $16,000, and he asks $16,000 more to complete it. Bear in mind the figures: $164,000 necessary to finish up 300,000 copies of the Agricultural Report.

Indulge me in a few statistics here, taken from the Public Printer's report, and I do not choose to indulge in any criticism, for I am not an expert; but I wish to lay before the public, before members of Congress, and before the intelligent printers of the country all the facts and figures I have collected together, in order to enable them to see whether this Government is being plundered or is being economically administered in its public printing. On the 14th of August, 1876, we ordered printed in one resolution 100,000 copies of the Agricultural Report of 1874 and 200,000 copies of the report of 1875. The 1874 report had four hundred and sixty-four pages and eighteen pages of cuts. The 1875 volume had five hundred and thirty-six pages and one hundred and twenty-eight pages of cuts. The combined cost of these two, as found in the Public Printer's report for 1878, page 57, was $127,599.

On the 3d of March, 1877, we ordered 300,000 copies of the Agricultural Report for 1876. It had four hundred and seventy-seven pages, fifteen of plates, and sixty-three of engravings. We appropriated for it $130,000. The cost is found in the report of 1878, page 57, $87,456. In the year 1877 we appropriated $130,000 specifically to print the Agricultural Report, and in 1878 $130,000, and, as I recollect the figures, and you may look in the Register's report, you will find each year after the lapse of two years a surplus was transferred to the United States Treasury as the unexpended balance within the time limited by law.

June 6, 1878, we ordered 300,000 copies of the report of 1877, and in the report of 1879, page 20, although this volume had five hundred and ninety-two pages, thirty-nine of plates, and seventeen of diagrams, the total cost was $122,887. Yet to-day the Public Printer says that, with all his improved machinery, type, press, less hands and all, it will cost him $164,000 to print that number. That will be the total cost of printing 300,000 copies of a book which has but six hundred and eight pages, fifty-six of plates, and three pages of diagrams.

I did not examine into the Public Printer's office so as to be able to say to this House and to the country there is something wrong in that department. I could not, upon my responsibility as a Representative, say that. But I will say this much, that, in the first place, if you trust an establishment as large as this under the management of one man, and permit him to employ as many people as he pleases, and to run that department without accountability, and to make his reports as he does, that man must be an angel or something approaching it if he runs it economically and properly. That is a fundamental proposition, and I wish to say that my friend who is at the head of that Printing Office may be an angel in disposition and in character, but he does not possess the knowledge of what is going on in his office to even inform the Appropriation Committee of what the situation is. Everybody knows that the head of a department cannot know everything that is going on under him; that it is impossible for him to understand the details. But, I wish to say, so far as my examination went—and I think I can speak for one or two members as well—we all know the committee had to go for all our information to the subordinate officers. And in a case like that—and I say it not for the purpose of injuring the gentleman who is at the head of that department, but as a duty I owe to the House—that he does not look after the affairs of that department as a man should who has such an enormous amount of money at his disposal.

Another reason for this extravagance and excess beyond the appropriation is found, Mr. Chairman, in the fact that the printing office is the place, the elastic place in the Government, into which unserviceable or unnecessary men are crowded. You cannot crowd new men into the Department of State, or of the Interior, or the Treasury, without putting out somebody else. The process is constantly going on under all Administrations of crowding by political influence one man into a place occupied by another, but you have always in every other Department to displace one man to do it.

But when you come to this establishment, under the present system, it is elastic; it is like the street-car or the omnibus—there is always room for one more. And every politician throughout the country who wants to make an appointment—I do not make any distinction as to his politics, whether republican or democratic—every politician who wants a man in place, goes to that department, and gets his nominee pushed in if he can.

Mr. WRIGHT. There never has been anybody pushed in for me.

Mr. McMAHON. We know very well there are of course a great many skilled men in that department, and there are a great many laborers, who work by day and by night and really earn all the money that is paid them, and a great many poor women who get only what they ought to have. Yet we know the place is unnecessarily crowded by politicians with men who are only fit to draw their salaries and nothing more, or who are unnecessary to the usual routine work of the office—

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. McMAHON. I have not finished, Mr. Chairman, but do not desire to proceed. In the course of the debate I will call attention to other facts, especially to the paper account, which will be worthy of attention. And at the proper time I will move to reduce this appropriation to $300,000.

Total expenditures	1,482,162

APPENDIX VI.

Result of above tables.

Actual expenditures for each fiscal year have been as follows, exclusive of appropriations for salaries in Public Printer's office and his contingent fund—1880 estimated to June 30:
For fiscal year ending 1875	$1,651,530
For fiscal year ending 1876	1,636,712
For fiscal year ending 1877	1,634,803
For fiscal year ending 1878	1,741,152
For fiscal year ending 1879	1,573,352
For fiscal year ending 1880, (to March 1)	1,482,162
For fiscal year ending 1880, (to June 30, if amount voted as proposed—$400,000)	1,882,162
For fiscal year ending 1880, (to June 30, if office is run at same rate as for previous nine months)	2,223,243
Total expenditures for years from 1875 to 1879, inclusive	8,237,549

APPENDIX VII.

Reported expenditures for same years from Public Printer's reports.

Expenditures for the same years as reported in the last annual report, (1879,) page 4, less salaries and contingent fund:
1875	$1,652,205
1876	1,597,852
1877	1,172,060
1878	1,622,906
1879	1,700,507
	7,745,530

(It will be observed, however, that in the charge of fiscal year of the Printer's office, only nine months are reported for 1877. But the Register's report seems to take no notice of this.)

In making his table of expenditures the Public Printer includes all payments during the year without reference to the appropriation against which it is chargeable.

Account of appropriation public printing and binding, 1880, March 10, 1880.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, FIRST AUDITOR'S OFFICE,
March 10, 1880.

SIR: Inclosed find a statement of the appropriation for public printing and binding, 1880, as promised in our interview this morning, showing an available balance remaining of $125,675.61. This balance may be reduced by bills in possession of the Public Printer not yet forwarded to the Department. I would also state that a requisition passed this office to-day for $50,634, which will lessen the amount in the Treasury and increase balance in the hands of the Public Printer.

Very respectfully,

R. M. REYNOLDS, Auditor.

Hon. JOHN A. MCMAHON,
House of Representatives.

The following letter was addressed to the Public Printer. His answers will be found below:

The Public Printer will please answer immediately the following questions for the information of the Committee on Appropriations:

1. How much paper was on hand, of last year's purchase, at date of purchases for the present year?
2. How much paper was purchased for the next year—on what terms, &c. How much payable in this fiscal year?
3. How much was paid for prior to March 1, and how much since?
4. What pay-rolls for February, 1880, were unpaid March 1, 1880?
5. In your estimate for CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to June 30, 1880, you say $90,000 will be necessary! How much will be needed to print the daily to that date? Give paper and pay-roll separate. Estimated.
6. How much machinery has been purchased in the present fiscal? How much paid for, how much unpaid?
7. How frequently are your general purchases of paper made in the course of a year, and when?
8. What machinery is now on hand?
9. Give us the various pay-rolls of your office in full to March 1, 1880, including all sums earned to that date. Give date of payment of February pay-roll, whether paid before or after March 1.

ROBERT J. STEVENS, Clerk.

OFFICE OF PUBLIC PRINTER, Washington, March 12, 1880.

SIR: In reply to your fifth interrogatory, would say that the estimate for the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD was made on the basis of the cost of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for the same period during the Forty-fifth Congress. It is impossible to say how much is needed to print the daily RECORD, as we cannot tell how many days Congress will be in session nor the length of each day's proceedings, and again, the bound RECORD is run along at the same time; were it otherwise, that is, if the bound RECORD was not begun until after the daily RECORD was finished it would require the whole matter to be reset as we could not keep the type standing any length of time.

Statement marked "E" shows cost of machinery purchased during the present fiscal year, together with the amount paid, and out of what appropriation.

In reply to your seventh interrogatory, would say that purchases of paper are made from day to day as the requirements of the office demand. Statement marked "D" embraces a list of machinery now on hand. The chairman of the sub-committee, Mr. McMAHON, has already been furnished with the amounts earned for labor for the several months beginning July 1, 1879.

Very respectfully,

ROBERT J. STEVENS,

Clerk Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives.A. F. CHILDS,
Chief Clerk.

OFFICE OF PUBLIC PRINTER,
Washington, March 12, 1880.

SIR: In reply to the first inquiry contained in yours of the 10th instant, I submit herewith a statement marked "A," which shows the amount of paper on hand on the 1st day of February, 1880, that date being the 1st of the new contract year. In reply to the second inquiry I submit statement marked "B," showing orders given on and since February 1. In connection with this statement I also send a schedule of paper showing the requirements of the office for the year ending February 28, 1881, together with a paper showing the awards made by the Joint Committee on Public Printing, giving the amounts per pound and per sheet for each lot.

None of the paper ordered since February 1 has yet been paid for, and all orders for paper made prior to July 1, 1880, are to be paid for out of the appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880.

The answer to the third inquiry is embodied in the above.

The fourth inquiry you will find answered in statement marked "C."

Very respectfully,

A. F. CHILDS,

Chief Clerk.

ROBERT J. STEVENS,

Clerk Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives.

OFFICE OF PUBLIC PRINTER,

APPENDIX XXIV.

(The foregoing tables condensed and examined.)

Paper on hand February 2, 1880.

Reams of paper on hand, as per Statement A of Public Printer	30,047
Sheets, &c., on hand, as per same statement	109,525
Amount of reams and sheets contracted for for the year ending January 31, 1880, beginning February 1, 1879. (Public Printer's Report, 1879, page 7.)
Reams of paper, (total)	101,400
10,000 pounds of paper, (45 pounds to ream, estimated)	222
Sheets	300,000
Amount ordered since February 1, 1880, under new contracts.
Reams of paper	47,985
Sheets	70,000
Amount on hand February 1, 1880, reams	20,047
Ordered since then, reams	47,985
Reams	68,032
Amount on hand February 1, 1880, sheets	109,525
Ordered since then, sheets	70,000
Sheets	179,525
Total available from February 1, 1880, reams	68,032
Total available from February 1, 1880, sheets	179,525

NOTE.—The Public Printer says in letter above, (marked XVII.) dated March 12, 1880, that "none of the paper ordered since February 1, 1880, has yet been paid for, and all orders for paper made prior to July 1, 1880, are to be paid for out of appropriation for year ending June 30, 1880."

The Printer must be mistaken in his statement that none of the paper ordered since February 1, 1880, has been paid for.

By the First Auditor's statement (above, marked XII) it will be seen that up to March 10, 1880, warrants had been drawn, for paper exclusively, against the appropriation for 1880, to the amount of $323,751. Should the Printer's statement be true, his paper bill for 1880 would be enormous. We annex a statement as to the consumption of paper and purchases in the years 1878 and 1879:

Paper statement, as from Public Printer's report as to consumption of paper. (Report 1879, page 37.)

Year 1878—consumption, $350,969; purchase, $352,080.

Year 1879—consumption, $344,761; purchase, $328,992.

Year 1880—balance on hand July 1, 1879, $34,009; purchased during this fiscal year (1880) out of appropriation for this year, as per First Auditor's statement, (marked XII,) $323,751; total on hand or purchased to February 1, 1880, $357,760.

These figures show either an extraordinary consumption of paper or a very large balance on hand; and if the cost of the 47,000 reams and 179,000 sheets purchased since February 1, 1880, is to be added, the figures will be enormous. I add below figures as to cost of paper for all purposes but CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which is rarely $35,000 in a long session, for the whole year:

Cost of paper for years 1875 to 1879, inclusive. (Report 1879, page 5.)

Fiscal year ending 1875	$387,471
Fiscal year ending 1876	249,285
Fiscal year ending 1877	227,170
Fiscal year ending 1878	279,215
Fiscal year ending 1879	301,603

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

Here the committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McMAHON] has excused the non-presentation of this bill to the House; and if I understand him correctly, he has said it has been by common consent or unanimous consent on the part of the Committee on Appropriations. I will state as the reason for the delay the fact that until this morning the bill was not prepared for presentation to the House. Take the item in this bill appropriating for the Public Printer. I believe it was at a session which we have had this week that the question of amount was finally disposed of, and the sum of $400,000 put into this bill to be appropriated for that purpose.

This morning we have had a session considering items which should go into this appropriation bill. It is not my purpose to charge that sub-committees of the Appropriations Committee have been derelict in the discharge of their duties, and have not made their reports as soon as it was in their power to do it, but I do say that it is quite as likely that the fault rests with the sub-committees of the Appropriations Committee as that it rests with any department of the Government in getting its estimates before the committee. A word more on this subject of public printing, to which my friend from Ohio [Mr. McMAHON] has devoted so large a proportion of his time. Early in January the report of the Public Printer was before Congress, and the question of this deficiency was before the Appropriations Committee, and it was charged with the investigation of this subject; and we have had from then to the present time to investigate; while my friend from Ohio has in his place indirectly and by insinuation charged the Public Printer with malfeasance in office, he has had all that period of time to investigate the subject, and yet he has been unable to put his finger on a single item in the accounts, to point to a single fact which tends to prove that officer has been guilty of malfeasance, has squandered the public money, has not administered his department in the most economical manner possible.

The gentleman from Ohio says that we have been to the Public Printer to investigate his accounts. We have, and on more than one occasion. Remember it was the 1st of January that this matter was submitted to us. One member of the sub-committee charged with this investigation is a member of and the chairman of the House Committee on Printing. There has been no restriction placed upon the examination. We exercised the power to examine all the accounts; and yet the gentleman from Ohio by insinuation charges that the officer who is at the head of that bureau in some way has been guilty of squandering the public funds, but points to no proof of the fact. He has said that he finds no fault with the prices paid to the men, the workmen. I thank him for that. The pay-rolls have been subject to investigation. The men could have been called and examined upon the question whether duplicate pay-rolls had been presented. After my friend has had all the time he needed for investigation he is compelled to say that he finds no fault with the sum of money that has been paid to the men.

How, then, has any money been squandered? To whom has it gone? And who is charged with squandering it? I appeal to my friend the chairman of the Committee on Printing. Every dollar of the appropriation for public printing has been spent under his supervision; every single contract for paper has been made under his supervision; and if there has been any squandering of funds in the printing department the Joint Committee on Public Printing is responsible for it.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I hope the gentleman will allow me a moment. He makes a great mistake.

Mr. HISCOCK. If the gentleman will hear me through he will discover I have made no mistake.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I want to explain before the gentleman leaves this point that when he says the money has been expended under my supervision he is entirely mistaken. I am chairman of the Committee on Printing, but have no more to do with that Printing Office than any other gentleman upon this floor. I am a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and to that extent take my share of responsibility for the appropriations that have been made. So far as the purchase of paper is concerned that is done under the direction of the joint committee of the two Houses. We meet together; we receive bids for a particular kind of paper that is to be furnished, and we let the contract to the lowest responsible bidder. But, so far as the purchase of type, printing-presses, machines, and other property necessary for carrying on that Printing Office is concerned, we have nothing more to do with it than any other committee of this House. Although chairman of the Committee on Printing my duties relate simply to examining the resolutions that are referred to us for report, and the Government Printing Office is not at all under our control, more than any other Department of the Government. The gentleman from New York, therefore, is mistaken when he says we are responsible.

Mr. HISCOCK. "The gentleman from New York" is mistaken in nothing he has said, and, after the statement of my colleague on the Committee on Appropriations I reiterate my statement, and will before I close supplement it, as I intended to if I had not been interrupted, and make the only exception to the gentleman's supervision of the purchases for the printing department. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McMAHON] says he has no fault to find with the pay-roll; that is his statement, in effect.

Mr. McMAHON. Allow me one moment.

Mr. HISCOCK. He says he has no fault to find with the money paid to the employes. I took down his language at the time.

Mr. McMAHON. What I said was that I had no fault to find with the rate of wages.

Mr. HISCOCK. Very well. The gentleman has no fault to find with the amount of wages.

Mr. McMAHON. I said the rate of wages. Has the gentleman no ears?

Mr. HISCOCK. He says the "rate" of wages. I hope I may be excused if my ears are not as long as his. The gentleman shall have all the opportunity for explanation that he wants before I get through. Now we will start out again, Mr. Chairman, in the discussion of this point. My friend from Ohio says he has no fault to find with the rate of wages, the rate of pay, which has been given to the men. I will accept that as his expression; and I ask the gentleman, after all the investigation he has made, if he believes any man in the office of the Public Printer has been paid twice? And I turn to my friend, the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. SINGLETON,] who is chairman of the Committee on Printing, and ask him if he believes the pay-rolls have ever been duplicated?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I have no evidence that that is the fact.

Mr. HISCOCK. Do you believe it?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I do not think it can be so.

Mr. HISCOCK. Then I have a right now to say the pay-rolls have not been duplicated. My friends upon the other side find no fault with the pay-rolls. If then there has been stealing in that department, wherein has it been? In the purchase of materials, and nowhere else. I now come to the only purchases that are not made under the democratic supervision of the Joint Committee on Printing of the two Houses of Congress. And during the current fiscal year of 1880 what amount of the material has thus been purchased by the Public Printer on his own responsibility, and in which he could have done this vast amount of stealing and squandering of the public funds, and thus create this great deficiency? My friend from Ohio has stated the amount, but I will state it again in this connection. The amount disbursed for material, type, and machinery purchased outside of the contracts—and I say in this connection that it is the contracts that my friend from Mississippi has charge of, as chairman of the Committee on Printing, to which I refer—outside of the said contracts from July 1, 1879, to February 21, 1880, is $81,460.15. Of this amount sixteen thousand three hundred and twenty-two dollars and some cents was paid for machinery out of the appropriation of 1879, and $35,970.43 only out of the appropriation for 1880, and there has been paid for type out of the appropriation for 1880 $9,844.20.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Does the gentleman insist upon it that the Committee on Printing has anything to do with the purchase of type and material?

Mr. HISCOCK. If my friend had followed my argument he would not have thought I insisted on anything of that kind.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I merely wanted to have that point understood.

Mr. HISCOCK. But what I am demonstrating, Mr. Chairman, is that there has not been stealing in the purchase of type and that if there has been any stealing in the printing department it could not have been in the supplies which were purchased by the Public Printer; those supplies were type, machinery, and material, and $64,000 is the full amount of money which has gone through his hands therefor out of the appropriation for 1880, and the gentleman from Ohio in discussing this question has alluded to the fact that type has been purchased according to the price-list. Take off from the $9,844.24 the whole amount expended for type in 1880, if you please 30 per cent., no one will claim that is not enough, deduct 50 per cent. even and say the Public Printer has paid 50 per cent. more for type than was necessary, that he has paid 50 per cent. more than was necessary, which no one charges or believes, for the type and other materials which he purchased, the whole amount expended by him out of the appropriation of 1880 was $64,000, you will remember, and you have but $32,000 of the deficiency to charge to him.

Take that amount from this deficiency, and you will then have $450,000 at least that you cannot account for by or attribute to the fault of the Public Printer, if the pay-rolls have not been duplicated and if larger prices have not been paid than was proper and right to the men employed there.

Will the gentleman from Ohio attempt, then, to account for this large deficiency in this department by these picayune purchases of machinery and type? Have he and his colleague on the committee from Indiana [Mr. COBB] and myself been associated together on this matter for two weeks, and has it escaped our attention that there has been stealing in the purchase of these materials? Will my friend take the floor and charge against the Public Printer that he has put one dollar of their purchase-money in his pocket? Does he believe any such thing? I say again, and I repeat it in this connection, that he may have stolen the half of it, and then there will be a deficiency at the present time—

Mr. HAWLEY. He wants $450,000.

Mr. McMAHON. His figures are $490,000.

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes, $490,000.

Mr. HISCOCK. There is a deficiency of $490,000. Will the gentleman attempt to explain that deficiency by saying that the money has been wasted in these petty purchases of material? He has given an account of these purchases and I have given it also, and we agree I think; and the amount is entirely insufficient to account for this deficiency. He says that he finds no fault (I may be pardoned if I repeat myself somewhat) with the prices paid to the men. My friend from Mississippi has given honest evidence on this question that he does not believe it possible that the pay-rolls could be duplicated.

What then is the reason and what the occasion of this deficiency in the Public Printing Office? There is a deficiency there; there is no question about that. The gentleman who is in charge of that office has explained the deficiency upon this theory, a theory which I say is abundantly justified by the evidence furnished your committee; that if you take together the work ordered by the Forty-fourth, the Forty-fifth, and the first session of the Forty-sixth Congresses, it will be found that it has gone on increasing step by step until it now amounts to nearly $2,000,000 a year.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. HISCOCK. Certainly; I would rather enjoy it.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then I will contribute to your enjoyment. I desire to ask the gentleman if it is not true that there is now being executed, and was last year and during preceding years, printing ordered in the Forty-second and Forty-third Congresses?

Mr. HISCOCK. I have seen no tables showing the division of the printing; I have no knowledge that such is the case, but I have no doubt it is true to a limited extent.

Mr. BLOUNT. It is.

Mr. HISCOCK. And it occurs in this way, as I will explain: A certain work is ordered to be printed and bound. The printing is done, and then there are certain plates to be engraved, and the binding cannot be completed until all the printing and plate work is done. Therefore the work may extend through a series of years, and it is therefore likely that a work which was ordered as far back as the Forty-second or Forty-third Congress, for the expenditure of some minor amount, may still be in the hands of the printer, and the cost of the work will be paid for out of the appropriation for the year when it is done, but that cannot be a large amount. It is simply for completing work. The engravings for the illustrations may have been delayed for two, three, or more years, for the want of an appropriation, perhaps. And so in each succeeding year, after work is ordered by Congress, some part of it may be paid for, until it is finally completed. The expenditures upon some publications may be taken from the appropriations for a half a dozen current years.

Now, I do not undertake to say, and my friend from Mississippi [Mr. SINGLETON] must not understand me as charging, that he has been a party to any fraud in this department. I believe that the affairs of this Printing Office have been managed economically and honestly, but the purport of my argument has been to establish that if it has been otherwise it must have been in carrying out the contracts which the Joint Committee on Printing of this House and of the Senate have in charge. I depend for proof of this upon the evidence which has been given by my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. SINGLETON,] that there have been no duplicate payments made in that office for work, and also upon the evidence of my friend from Ohio [Mr. MCMAHON] that the prices paid are not higher than they should be.

Mr. LOUNSBERY. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. HISCOCK. Certainly I will yield.

Mr. LOUNSBERY. There seems to be an agreement that the rates of wages are proper, and that there has been no duplication of the pay-roll.

Mr. HISCOCK. Yes.

Mr. LOUNSBERY. Then there still stands the charge, made by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. MCMAHON,] that there is a large number of useless persons employed who have nothing to do except to draw their pay.

Mr. HISCOCK. Do I understand the gentleman from Ohio to have made that charge?

Mr. MCMAHON. Yes, sir.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask the gentleman to give me the name of a single employé—

Mr. MCMAHON. I will give you the testimony taken before a committee of the last House.

Mr. HISCOCK. I know nothing about testimony taken before a committee of the last House.

Mr. MCMAHON. One moment. If you want my answer, I will refer you to testimony taken by a committee of the last House, the testimony of a man who is now employed in the office of the Republican newspaper in this city. I can read it to you if you want.

Mr. HISCOCK. I say again that I am speaking in reference to the expenditures of this year. And when the gentleman makes a deliberate charge of that kind, I ask him to give to this House and to the country the name of one such person employed in that printing office.

Mr. HAWLEY. For this fiscal year.

Mr. HISCOCK. Give me the name of a single useless employé in that office. And while I am waiting for my friend to reply—

Mr. MCMAHON. Do I understand the gentleman to be waiting for a reply from me?

Mr. HISCOCK. I will say that while I am waiting for my friend to get ready to reply—

Mr. MCMAHON. I am ready now if you want an answer.

Mr. HISCOCK. Give me the name of a single individual upon the pay-roll who is holding a sinecure position.

[At this point the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union rose informally; and a message from the Senate, as reported in a subsequent part of the proceedings, was received.]

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, while I am waiting for a reply from my colleague on the committee, [Mr. MCMAHON,] I will propound the same question to the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. SINGLETON.] Does he know of any man in that office holding a sinecure position who is being paid money which he does not honestly earn?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. If the gentleman wants an answer from me, I will give it to him in this way—

Mr. HISCOCK. I would like a direct answer to a direct question.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I do not allow the gentleman to answer for me. I do not want him to put a question to me and give an answer himself. I will say this: that I do not know of any person there who is not performing labor in accordance with law. But I do believe that there are a great many persons there who possibly might be dispensed with; that perhaps there are more employed in the Government Printing Office than ought to be.

Mr. MCMAHON. I am ready to answer my colleague on the committee, [Mr. HISCOCK.]

Mr. HISCOCK. The trouble about this is that I am, perhaps, yielding too much of my time.

Mr. MCMAHON. We will extend it. I am ready to answer.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will yield to the gentleman if it does not come out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Unless there be unanimous consent, it must come out of the gentleman's time.

Mr. MCMAHON. I think the gentleman ought not to ask me a question without letting me answer.

Mr. HISCOCK. I stand here recognizing the fact that in regard to the administration of this Printing Office the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SINGLETON] knows volumes where the gentleman from Ohio knows lines or words.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. That is altogether a mistake. I have probably no more familiarity with the affairs of the Printing Office than the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HISCOCK. While the gentleman from Mississippi says that he knows of no man in that establishment who is not employed in accordance with law; that "possibly"—I believe I use his exact language—"there are some men there who might be dispensed with." I am satisfied with that answer.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to know whether the gentleman is waiting for an answer from the gentleman from Ohio?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York declines to be interrupted.

Mr. MCMAHON. Does he withdraw his question to me? I want him to withdraw it, unless he allows me to answer it. I am ready to answer it now.

Mr. HISCOCK. If the gentleman knows of any employé in that office now holding a sinecure position—who is not rendering the service he is being paid for—he may give me the name.

Mr. MCMAHON. But I will not answer in just that way. [Laughter.]

Mr. HISCOCK. That is precisely the question I asked the gentleman.

Mr. MCMAHON. Does my colleague on the committee yield to me?

Mr. HISCOCK. I have put to the gentleman no other question. I decline to yield to him to answer any supposititious question which has not been asked by me.

Mr. MCMAHON. All right; there will be plenty of time in the course of the debate to answer it. I do not want anything more now.

Mr. HISCOCK. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have spent about all the time I can afford to on the item for the Public Printer. I believe that a full investigation into the administration of the Printing Office will demonstrate that the affairs of that department have been managed with economy; that no money has been put into the hands of the Public Printer to be used at his discretion and squandered; that the Joint Committee on Public Printing under the law have discharged their duties honestly and fairly; that under their supervision this office has been administered as economically and as well as it could well be. In further justification of this belief I have this to say, that in view of the capacity of my friend from Ohio [Mr. MCMAHON] for investigation and the time which he has given to this subject, he would have been able to put his hand upon the evidence, if there is any such evidence, that the Public Printer has been squandering the public funds. The fact is that this question has been held in abeyance from the 1st of January until the present time that my friend from Ohio might investigate it to his heart's content. I have a right to allude to one other fact, because he has alluded to it. He said that certain questions which he has asked of the Public Printer have not been answered.

Mr. MCMAHON. I did not say they had not all been answered; I said they had not been satisfactorily answered.

Mr. HISCOCK. The gentleman says that they have not been satisfactorily answered. I think it was yesterday, or the day before, that he propounded to the Public Printer some nine questions, to which the Public Printer replied that he has not the clerical force to devote to the answering of those questions in a less period than a week or ten days.

And I know of no other questions that are unanswered. I know of no information that has been withheld from us by the Public Printer on this subject. More than that, the chairman of the Committee on Public Printing is conversant with the machinery of this office, conversant with the way in which it has been administered. He is here, and I appeal to him whether, so far as the answers of this department are concerned, they have not been full, frank, and explicit as to every question which has been asked.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I want to say that I do not know what interrogatory has been put to the Public Printer by the gentleman who has this bill in charge, and therefore I cannot say whether they are or not.

Mr. HISCOCK. The gentleman from Mississippi has been one of this sub-committee and I have appealed to him, Mr. Chairman, because I believe that in the investigation which has transpired he has been animated in an eminent degree by a spirit of fairness; that he has felt the only purpose and object of our investigation should be to do justice to that department and the men managing it. I appealed to him because I have congratulated myself throughout this investigation that he and myself were in accord. I appealed to him believing he was willing to stand forth here and answer, and repel unfounded charges when they are made against a public officer when he knows well of their falsity.

Now, Mr. Chairman, a little further on this question, and if allowed I shall pass from it to the other item of this appropriation bill which has been discussed by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LOUNSBERY. Do I understand the gentleman declines to answer a question? It would be a great satisfaction to me if the gentleman would say in his belief there is no person employed by the Public Printer needlessly and simply for the purpose of drawing his salary.

Mr. HISCOCK. I do say it.

Mr. LOUNSBERY. After investigating the subject?

Mr. HISCOCK. Yes, sir; after investigating it I do say so. I do believe there is not a man in his private business who has devoted more time or care—knowing perhaps he would be investigated by a democratic Congress and by political adversaries—who has devoted more time and care to administering the affairs of his office economically than the present Public Printer. There may be some matters in which that gentleman may have erred in that large establishment. To err is human. I know of no case in which he has erred, however.

The gentleman from Mississippi has said there might "possibly" be some service which could be dispensed with; that gentleman has been unwilling to say he knows of any service which might be dispensed with. In the examination which I have made I have discovered no man whose service could properly be dispensed with in the administration of the affairs of that office. I say again on this subject, I believe that the office has been administered with honesty, with fidelity, with economy.

And it would have been well for the gentleman from Ohio when he was investigating this question, or rather speaking, on this point, to have told us when this stealing commenced, when this maladministration began. Why, sir, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, the Public Printer had to his credit $1,755,692. It was this same Public Printer, it was this same man who, by insinuation, he seeks to blacken. And he expended of that money $1,621,167, and turned back into the Treasury $134,524. Here was a surplus passed by this man over into the Treasury. That was for the year ending June 30, 1878.

Now, let us go to the next year. The whole amount to the credit of the Public Printer for printing and binding for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, was $1,612,525.27; the whole amount expended, $1,592,007.47—and, mark you, gentlemen of the committee and Mr. Chairman, this was the last fiscal year, ending June 30, 1879—the whole amount expended was $1,592,207.40; and the Public Printer covered back into the Treasury $20,517.80.

Why does not my friend tell me when this stealing commenced, when this maladministration commenced, when these peculations commenced, when these fraudulent contracts were first entered into? When was it that this old, gray-headed man at the head of this department first became dishonest or began to trust his affairs to younger men, seeming to know nothing about the administration of the office himself?

Mr. Chairman, we have had time enough for the investigation of this subject, as I believe if we had devoted ourselves to it with that particularity and with that industry which might have characterized us, to have found out precisely the amount of work done during the eight months of the current year 1880 more than in the corresponding eight months of the preceding year. Has my friend made that investigation? Has he attempted that investigation? By no manner of means. He has taken from the reports certain statements with a view to proving there has been no increase in the volume of printing to justify this deficiency.

He has alluded to the number of reports which have been printed; he has alluded to the number of bills and other matter printed, and has attempted to deduce the fact that no such deficiency as this is justified by the increase in the work which has been done in that office, but he makes an incomplete case.

In all the Departments of this Government the printing has been largely increased. He has taken the volumes ordered which he found referred to in the report of the Public Printer, and it appears there has been a large increase in the number ordered; for the first session of the Forty-fourth Congress, excluding the regular number provided for by law, 389,525 volumes were ordered. During the second session of the Forty-fourth Congress there were ordered 435,425 volumes, making in the aggregate for the Forty-fourth Congress 824,950 volumes.

Now, as to the character of these works. Have we investigated to find out what they were? Have we made or instituted a comparison between these volumes and those ordered at previous Congresses? They might have been of a different character of work and doubly as expensive. The gentleman from Ohio has not investigated this question with a view to ascertaining that fact.

The Forty-fifth Congress ordered 981,272 volumes, an increase of 156,322 volumes on the preceding Congress. Has there been any evidence to prove, has there been any investigation even with a view to determining how these volumes as to cost of production correspond with those ordered by the preceding Congress?

Here is a vast increase in the number of the volumes, and for aught we know a corresponding increase in the costs of the volumes. In the first session of the Forty-sixth Congress there were ordered 329,660 volumes. The gentleman from Ohio has taken the length of the sessions, and the number of investigating committees, of some former Congress, and has interjected into his speech the assertion that its printing for its current years would require as large appropriations respectively as is required for this fiscal year on account of the amount of work done for and ordered by the first session, the extra session, for the Forty-sixth Congress.

But, sir, the Forty-fifth Congress went out of existence March 4 and the extra session of the Forty-sixth Congress immediately convened, and its work and orders come in advance of the first year's work of the Congress the gentleman refers to. If no extra session had been rendered necessary, its expense would have been avoided and its orders for work deferred until now and their cost gone largely into the fiscal year of 1881. I do not know how we can determine from the reports and evidence before us that for the amount of work done there has been any more money expended during eight months of the present fiscal year than during the same period for any other fiscal year. But I do say, in view of the facts to which I have called the attention of the committee, and especially in view of the fact that there has been no evidences showing corruption or overpayments, while we have shown a decided increase in the volume of printing ordered, that we are justified in believing that the money has been honestly expended and the deficiency honestly created. It has been said in reference to this matter by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McMAHON] that at a proper time he shall move to reduce the amount in the pending bill for deficiency. And I will say upon that point a word, and then conclude my remarks upon this feature of the bill.

It appears, Mr. Chairman, that there was appropriated by the last Congress for the present fiscal year the sum of $743,000, which it was intended should be devoted to departmental work. All the appropriation for congressional printing has been exhausted. Out of this $743,000, $475,000 only has been expended for the Departments, leaving a balance to be expended for departmental work of $268,000. The Public Printer has now unexpended of the entire appropriation the sum of $74,411.61, which sum, if he apply it to the amount due to the Departments on account of appropriations made them, leaves still due them the sum of $193,588.39.

No gentleman upon the Appropriations Committee has for a moment suggested that it would not be necessary that this amount of work should be done for the Departments. It is believed that during this year the volume of work in the Departments has rather increased than diminished.

The Government Printer's estimate for the printing of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is $90,000. To do the printing of this session, of bills, reports of committees, testimony taken and proceedings had before committees and in Congress, he estimates the sum of $59,272.68 should be appropriated, making in the aggregate $342,861.71.

I have made a list of the documents which it is indispensable should be printed. Any gentleman upon this floor can examine the schedules which are in the hands of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McMAHON] and determine the question for himself. I have gone through those schedules, and have selected from them such documents as I believe of necessity should be printed, and their cost aggregates $155,067.30 to be added to the other items I have mentioned. The aggregate is $497,928.47, which I say is absolutely necessary to be appropriated to the Government Printing Office, and this necessity is the result of democratic extravagance in ordering printing and democratic folly in rendering necessary the extra session and entailing its cost upon the people, and not of republican mismanagement of the printing office.

Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has thirteen minutes.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will dismiss this feature of the bill, to which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McMAHON] addressed himself at such length, and in the brief time I have left will offer to the committee some remarks upon the proposed appropriation of $600,000 for the pay of United States marshals.

I confess my surprise that the gentleman from Ohio, in his place on this floor, should announce to the committee and to the country that the democratic party do not propose to obey the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. That party has arrogated to itself the merit of being the great constitutional party; yet one of its representatives on the Appropriation Committee, a member of this House, standing in his place, declares that party does not propose to bow its head to the decree of the highest court in the land.

And I am the more astonished in the light of the past. We have had an extra session of this Congress. The Forty-fifth Congress went out of existence with this same democratic party declaring that the nation should be starved before one single dollar should be appropriated for the execution of the Federal election laws; that the nation should be destroyed if those election laws were not repealed.

We convened here in the first, the extra, session of the Forty-sixth Congress, and that was the issue tendered us by our democratic friends. It was substantially yielded by them in their finally making appropriations to support the Government; but we went to the country upon the issue, and the country was heard from in last fall's elections. I especially am surprised that a gentleman from Ohio, the State my friend, Mr. McMAHON, in part represents, should have been chosen to declare this policy of the democratic party. Ohio, sir, has been very emphatic on this question. A citizen of that State in the Forty-fifth Congress was a leader on this side of the House. He and a colleague of his in that Congress, and a member of this Congress, a member of the democratic party, went before the people of that State for the highest office in their gift upon the issue, and Mr. Foster was elevated to the gubernatorial chair, and Mr. EWING suffered to serve out his term in Congress. The gentleman makes his announcement in the face of the fact there are other distinguished statesmen of his State who are monumental evidence of the folly of the democratic party upon this question. A member of this House from Ohio was the leading champion on our side of the question, the one who led our column in the contest, whose burning words for all time will inspire the young and receive the commendation of the old. Another Ohio statesman at the other end of the Capitol was the leading champion of the starvation policy. Mr. GARFIELD has been approved and elevated to a higher position by Ohio, and Mr. THURMAN will soon cease to be a leader of the democracy in Congress.

I am surprised that, with all these sad experiences before him, with all these recollections, near and painful recollections of the past, the gentleman from Ohio could be prevailed upon to announce that the democratic party will not obey the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. McMAHON. The gentleman has twice said that I have said the democracy would not obey the decision of the Supreme Court. I ask him first where the Supreme Court has decided that we must appropriate any money for special deputy marshals; and secondly, I ask him when I said that I would not obey the decision of the Supreme Court?

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, when we find a law upon the statute-book which requires for its enforcement the payment of money, there is only one justification that a political party can make for refusing to appropriate money for the execution of that law; that is, that it is unconstitutional. When a liability on the part of the Government has been incurred, there is no other justification for a refusal to appropriate money to pay it than that the law is unconstitutional. This liability has been created against the Government.

Mr. McMAHON. Under what authority? How? By whom?

Mr. HISCOCK. I will read the law. I have it here. This liability has been incurred, not by the head of a Department, but by marshals—inferior officers—acting under a statute in the performance of a duty which, if they had declined it, they could have been compelled by mandamus to perform. What is the provision of the law? I read from section 2021 of the Revised Statutes:

Whenever an election at which Representatives or Delegates in Congress are to be chosen is held in any city or town of twenty thousand inhabitants or upward, the marshal for the district in which the city or town is situated shall—

"Shall" is the language—not "may"—

Shall, on the application, in writing, of at least two citizens residing in such city or town, appoint special deputy marshals, whose duty it shall be, &c.

Mr. McMAHON. Now, will the gentleman permit a question? The law says that no Department of the Government shall expend in any one year any sum in excess of appropriations previously made.

Mr. HISCOCK. Is a marshal a department of the Government?

Mr. McMAHON. Let me put a question. Can a quartermaster under the War Department enter into a contract without money having been appropriated for the purpose? He is not the head of a Department.

Mr. HISCOCK. There is no analogy in the cases. This is no contract. Here is an official duty laid upon an officer. When a certain condition precedent has been performed there is nothing for him to do but to go on and act. He is not a department of the Government; he is not making a contract for the Government. He stands precisely like a marshal who receives into his hands a warrant to arrest a prisoner. It is his duty to execute it; and from that fact arises an obligation on the part of the Government to pay him his fees upon the execution. Does the gentleman say it is a contract? It is the execution of an official duty from which beyond doubt arises an implied obligation on the part of the Government to pay the officer his fees. Will my friend from Ohio say that he believes the provision of the statute to which he has referred has been violated?

Mr. McMAHON. yes, sir; I do.

Mr. HISCOCK. Well, sir, it is sad to believe that so good a lawyer will so hazard his reputation in so public a manner. [Laughter.] The gentleman puts a question with reference to a quartermaster. In that case a contract is made, and the quartermaster is acting under the direction of the head of a Department. The case I present is entirely unlike that. Here is a purely executive duty to be performed by a minor officer; and he must go on and do it. No contract is made. It is the duty of the Government to pay him; and I say there is no justification for refusal to pay except that the law is unconstitutional.

We understand, Mr. Chairman, that $150,000 of these fees for special deputy or election marshals remain unpaid. Perhaps all these services were not performed during the last fiscal year; but this is a test question in reference to that amount. Here is a liability which has been created, which the Supreme Court of the United States, the highest tribunal in the land having jurisdiction of the question, has approved. My friend from Ohio, for the democratic party, announces that it will not yield to the judgment of the Supreme Court; that notwithstanding the liability, the democratic majority in this House will refuse to make the appropriation necessary to pay these officers. Upon this point a gentleman hands me an extract from the New York Herald, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The democratic party has contended for ten years that these laws are a flagrant violation of the Constitution, and as soon as it gained control of both Houses of Congress it refused to pass appropriations for their enforcement. The question of their constitutionality has at length been adjudicated by the only authority competent to decide it. * * * We suppose, therefore, that Congress, as the easiest way of getting out of its scrape, will pass a bill for compensating the supervisors and deputy marshals, and drop for the present the extremely foolish controversy which was carried to the verge of revolution in the extra session last year. The necessity which they must now recognize of making appropriations for the enforcement of the Federal election law does not, indeed, preclude them from attempts to accomplish its repeal at some future time. So long as it stands in the statute-book as a constitutional law—a law declared to be constitutional by the only authority competent to decide and foreclose questions of this class—Congress will be bound to make the requisite appropriations for carrying it into effect.

The democrats in Congress will not dare to withhold the pay of the supervisors and Federal marshals after the important decision rendered yesterday by the Supreme Court.

Mr. McMAHON. Is there not an article in that paper on the third term which might be read in the same connection? [Laughter.]

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I say to my friend from Ohio, I say to the House, and I say to the country, there was no violation of law in the appointment of these special deputy marshals. It was the duty of the marshals to appoint them; and I believe the democratic party will in the end yield to the inevitable, and vote them the pay which they have earned.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ATKINS obtained the floor, and yielded to Mr. FINLEY.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, before proceeding with my remarks, I desire to give the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] an answer to the question that he seemed to be spoiling to hear. He asked my colleague—

Mr. HISCOCK. I say to the gentleman on the other side, that nothing need be done for our preservation over here. There is not the least sign of anybody's "spoiling;" the scent of decay does not come from this side of the House. [Laughter.]

Mr. FINLEY. Well, I judge by the frantic manner in which the gentleman put that question so repeatedly that he was in pain at all events to have an answer to his question; and I will give it. He asked the question whether a single person could be pointed out on the pay-rolls of the Public Printer who was not needed. When my colleague undertook to answer him he was shut out because the gentleman said he wanted an answer whether there was any on the roll now who was not needed. In the Forty-fifth Congress an investigation of the management of the Government Printing Office was had, in which the testimony of Mr. Henry T. Brian, the former foreman of the Public Printing Office under Mr. Clapp, was examined, and his attention called to the number of employees in the establishment, which he said was in excess of the number employed during Clapp's administration. It was shown to him by the report of the Public Printer that there were one hundred and twenty-six laborers there, of whom twenty were in the document room. He said six or seven were all that was found necessary when he was there. Again, in the folding-room there were twenty-three, and he said five could do the work in that room unless the wagons were included. He was shown that twenty-eight were employed in the press-room. He said twenty-eight was too many; that Mr. Clapp had about twenty. Seven employees were used in the job and specification rooms; he thought three sufficient. Ten men were employed in the RECORD room; he thought three only were required there. Mr. Defrees, it was shown him, employed five carpenters and six laborers in the yard; he thought two carpenters and two laborers sufficient.

Mr. GARFIELD. Is this Wendell's report?

Mr. FINLEY. It is not; it is the testimony of Mr. Brian, a good republican, who was foreman of the Printing Office under Mr. Clapp. His attention was called to the fact that in the press-room there were ninety lady feeders; he thought seventy-five a large number. Paper-writers, &c., forty-three; he said, I should think thirty ought to be enough. A witness before him testified there was an excess of employees in that establishment of 33½ per cent.

Well, Mr. Chairman, that was more than a year ago. At that time it was shown by the report of the Public Printer that the number of employees in his establishment averaged, I think, about seventeen hundred. I can only make comparison with the present year. I have his report here; and I have footed up the number of employees during the last fiscal year at twenty-two hundred and sixty-six. If there were 33½ per cent. too many when seventeen hundred was the average, gentlemen may figure for themselves whether there are too many now, when there are twenty-two hundred and sixty-six. There has been in the past seventeen years appropriated for and spent at the Government Printing Office about $27,000,000. If we make this appropriation it will make nearly $1,900,000 this year, including proceeds of sales from waste-paper, &c., nearly $2,000,000 in round numbers, which is an expense of $5,200 a day, and $156,000 a month.

I will not consent to vote for this appropriation without entering my protest against the declaration that has gone forth in the newspapers, emanating I have no doubt from the Government Printing Office, that this large increase of expenditure is due to the extra session of Congress. The gentleman from Ohio made the pertinent inquiry, "what is wrong at the Government Printing Office" that so large a sum of money should be expended? I will say to the gentleman that, after full and fair investigation by a committee of the Forty-fifth Congress of which I was a member, extending over a period of eight months, after hearing evidence on all sides, I have come to the conclusion that there is more money expended for the Government printing, with less safeguards thrown around its expenditure, than in any other department of the Federal Government. I will say, furthermore, and I believe I can demonstrate it with almost conclusive certainty, that there are from $300,000 to $500,000 more expended for the Government printing than is actually necessary.

The gentleman from New York said my friend from Mississippi knows volumes about the public Printing Office where my colleague knew lines. In the investigation which the gentleman made in the Forty-fourth Congress he and his committee reported, as I remember it, that there was expended annually not less than $500,000 more than was necessary. I will add to that that in an investigation which was made by the committee of which I was a member, following upon his investigation, we found no change in the way of reform, but that whatever change was made was rather for the worse, which I will proceed to demonstrate before I get through.

This matter of cost can be ciphered down to a mathematical certainty. I have here in writing the proposition of a gentleman who published the Globe for many years, Mr. Franklin Rives, a gentleman of large experience as a printer, who has had experience as a public printer, for he published the Globe; a man of wealth—able to perform all he contracts to do. In a letter which I received from him a few days ago, and which I will print as part of my remarks, he makes the following propositions, (and I want my friend from New York to listen to them,) and will give bond for the faithful performance of the contract to the satisfaction of Congress. He offers to furnish all the material except paper, to do all the printing of the Government for 90 per cent. of the present cost, and publish the RECORD for nothing, on which the Public Printer reports for the year 1879 he disbursed the sum of $140,205.71.

He will do all the other printing for 90 per cent. of the present cost, printing the RECORD for nothing, and give bond for its faithful execution. He told me that he would then expect to make $125,000 profit. He makes another proposition to take the Government Printing Office as it is now and restore it after a term, and do all the Government printing for 90 per cent. of the present cost and pay the Government $100,000 rent for the use of the office and fixtures, and he then expects to make $125,000 profit. Now, then, this man is not speaking in the dark. He knows exactly what he is talking about; he understands his business; he has made his computations with care, and he knows what he can do. His letter is as follows:

THE GLOBE PRINTING OFFICE,
Nos. 339 AND 341 PENNSYLVANIA AVENUE,
Washington, D. C., March 6, 1880.

SIR: While I have long been of the opinion that correct policy as well as economy would require that the printing and binding for the public service should be done in or near those places where it is to be consumed, yet I will enter into a contract with the Government to do this work upon the following terms:

Congress to give me possession of the Public Printing Office and all the machinery, type, furniture, fixtures, &c., now there, and to furnish to me, free of cost, all the paper for the public printing and binding. I will then furnish all the labor required, and all the materials except the paper, and will execute the printing and binding ordered by Congress and the Executive Departments in the same style as that in which the respective classes of work are now done and with equal promptness. I will guarantee the faithful performance of this work, both as to style of execution and quality of materials other than paper. That, being furnished by the Government, will be of such qualities as the Printing Committees may determine, and of course I should have no responsibility in that matter.

All work to be turned over, in its completed state, to an inspector, who must be a practical printer and binder, and the same to be paid for only upon his certificate of its conformity to the contract.

For the service thus rendered, and the materials used in connection therewith, the Government to pay me 90 per cent. of the present cost of like work, exclusive of the paper, except in the case of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. In reference to that publication I will furnish the necessary labor, and the materials except paper, and print and bind the two editions in the same manner and to the same extent as now, in consideration of the other work as aforesaid, and will make no charge against the Government therefor—this may be considered as being in lieu of rent for the public property.

Or, I will execute all the work, including the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, in the manner and after the conditions set forth above, for 90 per cent. of its present cost and will pay $100,000 per annum as rent for the Government Printing Office as it now stands. In either case I will give satisfactory security that the work shall be promptly and faithfully done.

By the present cost of the work I mean the money appropriated by Congress therefor and actually consumed in its execution.

The Public Printer's published annual reports do not exhibit the entire cost of the public printing and binding. Under either of my propositions the cost of the work would be about $230,000 less than it is now costing the Government.

In regard to cost of work ordered at the extra session, (first session Forty-sixth Congress,) I can only say that I have no means of arriving at the amount accurately. The amount of work finished, as reported in the Public Printer's last annual report, is about $50,000. There may be on hand in an unfinished state a very considerable amount of work not yet reported, the cost of which it is impossible to estimate.

Very respectfully,

FRANKLIN RIVES.

P. S.—Any damage to type, presses, or other material, other than the usual wear and tear incident to the execution of such work will be made good by replacing of new.

Hon. EBENEZER B. FINLEY,
Chairman Committee on Public Expenditures,
House of Representatives.

Now, if it be true that a private individual can carry on the Government printing at from $250,000 to $300,000 less than it now costs and yet make a clear profit of $125,000 for himself, is it not well for Congress before appropriating money in gross to stop a moment and inquire why this is costing so much?

Mr. Chairman, the Vance or Singleton committee in 1875-'76 made a report after a full investigation, in which the gentleman from Mississippi, whom my friend from New York takes so much stock in, joined, wherein they said that the Government Printer, Mr. Clapp, first lacked the proper qualifications and was totally incapacitated to fill the office of Congressional Printer; second, that there was gross and unpardonable malfeasance in the office, resulting in heavy loss to the Government; and third, that embezzlement of money was developed, and in a speech made by him May 16, 1876, he showed that the institution was absolutely rotten to the core. He showed that the Government Printer then had surrounded himself with subordinates who, as I construe his remarks, were cheating and defrauding the Government by wholesale, colluding with persons who furnished supplies to the Government and putting the proceeds into their own pockets; and yet we found upon investigation that when Mr. De-freese came into office he retained in his employment the very men of whom the gentleman then complained so loudly, and he turned off two men, trustworthy and honest, well qualified for the position, and who were men of probity and capacity. He gave these two men their walking-papers, serving notice upon them one month before he went into office that he would not want their services any more.

This was the action of the man in whom the gentleman from New York takes so much stock. Not only that, but he imported into his employ a man who had been indicted for fraud in the Government Printing Office under him (Defrees) in his former administration. We found him in his employment, and he is there yet for all I know. It will be remembered that Defrees was Government Printer before Mr. Clapp came in, and during his administration as Government Printer there was a combination among paper dealers and persons furnishing him with supplies in which his chief clerk colluded, by which the Government was defrauded out of about $250,000, as was testified to by the Government detective who investigated the transaction. (See page 208, Report No. 119, Forty-fifth Congress.) We investigated it. We found that A B C, who had made contracts for the supply of paper, twine, &c., had colluded with Mr. Defrees's chief clerk, and had defrauded the Government out of this sum of $250,000. One of these men—they were all indicted, Mr. Defrees with them—(see page 198 of Report No. 119, Forty-fifth Congress)—one of these men gave back to the Government $90,000, another $10,000, another $8,000. Defrees's chief clerk gave back $7,500, including costs, out of $14,000 which he admitted he got. (See page 225, Report No. 119, third session Forty-fifth Congress.) All the others compounded their crime, or rather settled the judgments rendered against them, paying about one-half, and their indictments were nolle, and the chief conspirator, Mr. Thomas, in a letter which I will read, and which appears in this testimony on page 227, stated that this short-weight paper was understood between him and the Superintendent of Printing at the time the contract was made. These deficiencies were caused in part by short-weight paper. For instance, an order would be given for so many reams of paper, and reams of half sheets would be delivered instead, and the chief clerk passed them as full reams, and the contractor drew the pay for the whole amount as if the contract had been literally complied with. In the letter to which I have referred, and from which I will give an extract, he says:

This half-sheet story makes up the bulk of the deficiencies, aside from the matter of short-weight paper. This short-weight paper was understood at the time of making the contract. I say "understood;" I mean by the parties who made the contract—myself and the Superintendent of Printing.

Mr. Carlisle, the Government detective who ferreted out the transaction, testified as follows:

These frauds could not have been successfully carried on had Mr. Defrees supervised the inspection and adjustment of the accounts, as was required by the law.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. What page is that?

Mr. FINLEY. Page 237.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. What is the gentleman reading from?

Mr. FINLEY. From the report of the House Committee on Public Expenditures in relation to the public printing and binding. It is report No. 119 of the Forty-fifth Congress, third session.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. A report made to this House?

Mr. FINLEY. Yes; a report made to this House. Now, when I was interrupted, I was saying that this chief spoliator, who gave back this large sum of money, left that letter behind him.

Mr. ATKINS. What compelled him to give it back?

Mr. FINLEY. He was indicted; also a judgment for $125,000 was rendered against him, and they settled it.

Mr. ATKINS. In this District?

Mr. FINLEY. He was indicted in Detroit.

Now, Mr. Chairman, Mr. Defrees had not been in his office but a short time until he reinstated in his employment this chief clerk, who admitted he took as a bribe $14,000 from this man Thomas, for passing this short-weight paper, I have no doubt, although he claimed that it was for allowing Thomas a large allowance of waste, and he is in the Public Printing Office now for anything I know to the contrary.

One of the men of whom the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SINGLETON] complained, one of Mr. Clapp's subordinates, was Mr. Roberts. Mr. Roberts, it was shown in the testimony, went down to Philp & Solomons, in this city, and bought a large number of bound blank-books. He had Messrs. Philp & Solomons make false bills, and bill them to the Public Printer as so much paper. The account was passed into the Treasury Department and paid. The committee of the last Congress interrogated Mr. Roberts in regard to that. He admitted that it was wrong; that they made a false bill. I put the question to Mr. Roberts, "Why did you do that?" and the excuse he gave to me was a most remarkable one. He said it was cheaper to buy these books already bound than it was for him to bind them. "What did you do with those books?" "I turned them over to the Treasury Department." "Did you charge the Treasury Department for binding them?" "I did." "Did you add anything to the actual cost for binding?" "I added 15 per cent." (See report and testimony, Forty-fifth Congress, pages 469, 470.) He charged the Treasury Department for binding books that he bought, and added 15 per cent. to the actual cost for binding. That man the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SINGLETON] complained of; and I hope the gentleman from Mississippi will pardon me for bringing in his name so often, but I am compelled to do it because the gentleman from New York placed the gentleman from Mississippi in the attitude of indorsing all he has said about the Government Printer, and I know he does not. My friend from Mississippi gave an account of various transactions of this man Roberts, of whom I have been speaking, which I will not now take time to state. Roberts is still there in charge of the bindery.

The gentleman from Mississippi spoke also about a man named Larcombe, to whom he gives in that speech this certificate of good character.

As pertinent to a description of this transaction I will quote from the remarks of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SINGLETON] made on that occasion.

He says:

Interesting as it may be to follow up the devious ways and malpractices of the Congressional Printer and his confederates in the sales and purchases of materials for the Government Printing Office, I must close up this point. I think enough has been disclosed to carry conviction to every unbiased mind that there has been collusion between these parties to defraud the Government and enrich themselves at the expense of virtuous manhood and every principle of honest and fair dealing. What wonder that the house of John Campbell & Co. has waxed fat, after feeding so luxuriously from the "public crib," buying $879.75 worth of imitation gold-leaf, and selling it at a profit of $570.25, not advancing one cent, but paying with the money drawn from the Treasury upon a voucher furnished by them to A. M. Clapp. What wonder that this house should be able to double its capital in a few years, when on a sale of $4,452 of calf-skin to the Government it should be able to realize a profit of $1,364, and never wake a sleeping penny that was resting in their pockets. What wonder that A. M. Clapp should be the possessor of houses and lots in Washington, the owner of bank stock and bank deposits, aggregating many tens of thousands of dollars, when it is understood that he came to this city a bankrupt.

I ask for a short time the attention of the House while I lay before it a gross violation of the criminal law of the land by imposing upon the Secretary of the Treasury a false voucher in the settlement of his accounts.

A. M. Clapp's testimony:

"Question. Referring to the stubs of your check-book, under the date of March 1, 1872, do you find that a check was drawn in favor of Philp & Solomons for $234?"

"Answer. I do.

"Q. Can you explain for what that check was drawn?"

"A. I cannot here say.

"Q. Do the data you have show that fifty reams of white cap paper were purchased from Philp & Solomons on February 20, 1872?"

"A. Yes; and receipted for by my foreman of binding.

"Q. It shows that you purchased paper from Philp & Solomons?"

"A. Yes, sir."

A. S. Solomons testifies to the fact that not one sheet of such paper was purchased from him by the Congressional Printer, but that a false voucher was made out for the benefit of Mr. Clapp, and used in his settlement with the Treasury.

"Question. Did you make an examination in regard to the transaction of March 13, 1872, when the Congressional Printer drew a check in favor of Philp & Solomons for $234?"

"Answer. I did.

"Q. Please state the result of that examination.

"A. We had a large number of blank-books which we desired to sell to the Treasury Department. They needed the books but had no fund out of which they could pay for them, and suggested that we should see some one connected with the Public Printer. I met Mr. Roberts, whom I believed to be the foreman of the bindery, and related to him the circumstances. He said he would see about it. Shortly thereafter he made inquiry as to the number of books in our possession, and subsequently saw and made a selection from them, footing up the amount we asked for such books. He then informed me that under the law they could not buy blank-books, but had to buy paper, and he asked me to make out the bill for the gross amount of the books, that was $234. The bill read, 'Fifty reams white cap paper, 18 pounds, at 26 cents per pound, $4.68 per ream,' making, in the aggregate, $234. Subsequently that amount was paid to us by a check from the Government Printer, and the account was closed.

"Q. How many books did you sell them?"

"A. Somewhere between one hundred and twenty-five and two hundred demy and crown cloth-covered books, ruled faint only, and paged.

"Q. Did you include in this charge paper, books, binding, and all else connected?"

"A. Yes.

"Q. In this bill of $234 did you furnish any white cap paper?"

"A. None whatever."

I next read from the testimony of the financial clerk, John Larcombe, sharp, oily-tongued, and unscrupulous. He needed but a few hours to improvise a cash-book which would balance all accounts of money received and money disbursed, and yet leave his employer, A. M. Clapp, according to his own testimony, the neat little sum of $53,000 as his perquisite.

This man, Larcombe, continues to be chief bookkeeper and financial manager under Mr. Defrees. The gentleman from Mississippi spoke also of Mr. Collins and gave him a little certificate of character:

The next witness I will introduce shall be W. H. Collins, clerk in charge of CONGRESSIONAL RECORD accounts. He is a novelty in book-keeping, and exhibits rare talents in forcing balances when his cash received and disbursements do not agree.

This man, Collins, is still under Mr. Defrees. And so I might go on, if my time was not so limited, to the end of the string. Mr. Defrees has under him all the objectionable characters to whom the gentleman from Mississippi referred, and has added more to them, and the only ones he turned off, as far as I am advised, were those whom I have named, gentlemen that were well qualified as I believe for the position they held. I refer especially to Mr. Brian and to Mr. Helm. I want now to call attention to them for one moment.

Mr. Brian was foreman of printing under Mr. Defrees's predecessor. He says he received a letter from Mr. Defrees a month before he took the office saying he did not want him.

The letter and part of his testimony relative to it is as follows:

By Mr. FINLEY:

Question. Do you know of his dismissing anybody else at the same time?

Answer. Yes, sir; he dismissed the chief clerk and two of my assistants, to the best of my recollection. I should like to file Mr. Defrees's letter, and I herewith make it an exhibit in connection with the answers to this question.

A.—June 10, 1878.

"BERKELEY SPRINGS, WEST VA.,

"May 5, 1877.

"DEAR SIR: I deem it proper to say to you that I wish to make a change in the foremanship of the Government Printing Office on the 1st of June next.

"In determining to make this change, I do not wish it understood as questioning your fitness for the position, but it is for other considerations satisfactory to me.

"Yours, &c.,

"JNO. D. DEFREES.

"Captain HENRY T. BRIAN,

"Washington, D. C.

"P. S.—Major Davis, of Maine, will be your successor.

"J. D. D."

Q. What was the chief clerk's name?

A. H. H. Clapp.

Q. Who were your assistants that he dismissed?

A. Mr. Robinson and A. J. Donaldson. After that, he discharged another of my assistants, M. D. Helm.

Q. Mr. Robinson was one of your assistant foremen?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was he a competent man?

A. I considered him such, or I would not have had him in that position.

Q. Do you know that he was?

A. He was, to the best of my judgment.

Q. How did he compare with the man who was put in his place?

A. I considered him a superior hand in every respect.

Q. How did he compare with his successor?

A. I considered him a superior man.

Q. How was Mr. Donaldson; was he competent to fill the place?

A. He was competent.

Q. How was his competency in that regard as compared with his successor?

A. I don't know; I didn't know his successor.

Q. What reason did Mr. Defrees give for discharging you gentlemen?

A. Mr. Defrees wanted my place; I have no doubt that he considered me competent, but he wanted my place for some one else.

Mr. Helm, who was also notified by letter one month before Defrees came in that he would not be wanted, and who was discharged by Mr. Defrees, says that Defrees assured him that he had filled the place satisfactorily in every way, but he wanted his place for another man. Speaking of Captain Brian, Helm says, "He was better fitted for the place than any one else in the United States," and that the man Defrees put into his place, to the best of his judgment, knew nothing about the business, having been promoted by Defrees from the position of copy-holder to that of foreman, the most responsible in the office.

I quote from the testimony of Mr. Helm, pages 421-422:

By Mr. FINLEY:

Q. Did you leave voluntarily, or were you discharged?

A. I was discharged.

Q. When did you receive your notification of discharge?

A. About one month before Mr. Defrees was Public Printer.

Q. Was it done by letter?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. From whom was the letter?

A. From Mr. Defrees.

Q. What reason did he give?

A. He said he had somebody else whom he wanted to put in the place.

Q. No objection made to your competency and ability?

A. On the contrary, he assured me that he believed I had filled the place satisfactorily in every way.

Q. But he had some other man whom he wanted to put in there?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, what knowledge, if any, do you have as to how that spirit of reform was carried on by Mr. Defrees with regard to other persons in that establishment on his in-coming to office?

A. To the best of my knowledge, he discharged the best men he had there. I would like to instance Captain Brian, a man whom I think one of the best possible for the place.

Q. The man we had on the witness-stand yesterday?

A. Yes, sir; I think he was better fitted for the place than anybody else in the United States.

Q. How does the man he put in his place compare with Captain Brian for ability, according to your judgment?

A. To the best of my judgment he knows nothing about the business.

Q. Do you mean Mr. Davis?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Captain Brian was foreman of the Printing Office, was he not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What knowledge of the business did he have, and with what ability did he conduct that department while he had charge of it? Give the committee what you know on that subject.

A. I know he was thoroughly acquainted with the printing business. I think he has the best executive ability of any man I ever saw in such a position, and he devoted his whole time and energy to it, night and day, for about seven years, and run the office as it was never run before or since.

Q. Tell us what you know about what executive ability and skilled knowledge in the art of printing his successor, Mr. Davis, has?

A. I know very little about his executive ability, sir; I was there, I think, one month under him. I had known him previously, and I never thought much of his ability as a printer.

Q. What knowledge and experience did he have?

A. I think he published a country newspaper for two or three years, up in Maine, some place.

Q. Do you know through whose influence he got that place?

A. I have always understood that it was through Senator Blaine; I have no positive knowledge.

Q. The position of foreman of printing is a very responsible one, is it not?

A. The most so of any there; in fact, I consider it more so than that of the Public Printer, himself.

Q. What position did Mr. Davis hold, if any, in the Government Printing Office, and what experience had he in the Government Printing Office before he was appointed to that position?

A. He was a copy-holder.

Q. What does a copy-holder have to do?

A. He reads the copy for the proof reader.

Q. In other words he holds and compares the manuscript for the proof-reader?

A. He reads it, and the proof-reader compares it.

Q. He does not attain, then, to the dignity of comparing?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do I understand you that Mr. Davis was promoted from the position of copyholder, at one time, to the position of foreman, the most responsible in the office?

A. He was, sir.

Mr. BRIAN testified that Mr. Defrees intimated to him he was in every sense of the word well qualified for the position. Yet those men he discharged, retaining the others.

Mr. GARFIELD. Will my colleague allow me a question?

Mr. FINLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. GARFIELD. Am I right in understanding that these extracts which the gentleman is reading are from the report of Mr. Vance?

Mr. FINLEY. No, sir; a part of them are.

Mr. GARFIELD. A part of them are from Mr. Vance's report and a part of them are from your own?

Mr. FINLEY. I will explain to my colleague. Part of the extracts I have read here are from the speech of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SINGLETON] made on the floor of this House. A portion are from the report of Mr. Vance's committee, of which Mr. SINGLETON was a member; the remainder are from the report of the committee of which I was a member—not my report but the committee's.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman knows the House did not take any favorable action on the reports of those committees.

Mr. FINLEY. I am glad the gentleman has made that remark. I will answer it now. The committee which made that report in the Forty-fifth Congress was delayed in the presentation of the report inasmuch as in the closing weeks of the Forty-fifth Congress, as every gentleman will remember, committees were not called. That committee was not called for a month preceding the close of Congress. They were ready and willing to make their report. But when it was offered on several occasions to make that report gentlemen on that side of the House objected. It could not be done without unanimous consent; and it was only in the closing hours of the session that permission even to print was given because of gentlemen on that side of the House objecting to the report being made.

The committee was never called after the report was prepared, and never had an opportunity to present it. Yet it is signed by a majority of the committee, and by every democratic member of the committee.

In this connection I propose to call especial attention to some of the abuses in that department, as developed by the evidence before that committee. I say "abuses," and I use that word with a full knowledge of all that it imports. Those abuses grow out of a laxity in the law in some respects. I say the law is lame in many particulars. I will mention one.

We put into the hands of the Public Printer a very large sum of money; yet we permit him to go into the open market and make purchases of type and machinery amounting in the aggregate to many thousands of dollars, and we nowhere require him to report in detail respecting such purchases, nor does he report such purchases, except in a general way in his annual report, which, as my colleague [Mr. MCMAHON] says, furnishes no index of the actual expenditures.

Again, he has the right, and he exercises that right, to sell public property, to sell type, presses, and machinery, to sell any of the public property without its being condemned, without any number of persons, either the Committee on Public Printing or others, deciding that it is necessary to sell it. And in many instances, one that I now think of which was proved by testimony, the former Public Printer, Mr. Clapp, bought of one firm seven presses for $19,000, and on the very same day, the Public Printer sold to the same firm eight presses for $3,000. (See report, page 16, and testimony, page 278.)

Mr. ATKINS. To the same firm?

Mr. FINLEY. To the very same firm. And yet that amount of $3,000 for those eight presses did not appear on the Public Printer's books for nearly seven months afterward, the book-keeper admitting that he kept the transaction in his head during that time. Now, if we allow the Public Printer to sell Government property as he pleases, whenever he may say that it is necessary, and if he keeps no account on his books—there is no property account kept in that institution—he may buy and sell thousands of dollars' worth of property and you may go there and not be able to tell by his books whether it has been delivered or not, or whether all the proceeds have been accounted for or not.

Mr. ATKINS. How long has that been going on?

Mr. FINLEY. Ever since the establishment of the Government Printing Office. I asked a person in charge of a part of the establishment who ought to know how many pounds of type there were there, and he said that no man could tell; that there might be a million pounds for aught he knew. Mr. Davis, the foreman of printing, testified that no one knew unless by conjecture. Now, if no account of the public property is kept there, if you cannot trace any individual piece of property, and the Public Printer is allowed to sell whatever he pleases and to account for it or not as he pleases, a wide door for fraud is opened.

In the matter of the purchases, let me call attention to one thing. Last year, as shown by the report of the Public Printer, he bought forty-two thousand dollars' worth of type. Now, that is a great quantity of type; and let me say to you that prior to that time there had been purchased one hundred and five thousand seven hundred and thirty-one dollars' worth of type. Now, how did the printer make that purchase of forty-two thousand dollars' worth of type? Did he make it by open competition among type manufacturers? No. Did he advertise for proposals? No. What did he do? He ordered forty-one thousand dollars' worth of that type from one firm. We investigated what that type was worth. Let me call your attention to the fact that he bought that type and made his other purchases in violation of a law to which I will call your attention in a moment.

We called witnesses before our committee to ascertain what that type was worth, and those witnesses brought with them the price-lists of four or five of the leading type manufacturers in the United States. They testified with one accord that it is customary among manufacturers of type and other machinery, when any purchase is made of three hundred dollars' worth and upward, to make a deduction of from 10 to 30 per cent. from their catalogue prices. What were they? The catalogue prices of McKellar, Smiths & Jordan for nonpareil type was fifty-eight cents a pound, of G. B. Ricketts & Co. the same, and of R. S. Menamin the same. Yet the Public Printer paid sixty-six cents a pound and no discount, or eight cents a pound more than the catalogue price of these firms. Their catalogue price for brevier was forty-eight cents a pound, yet the Public Printer paid fifty-five cents a pound, and no deduction. Their catalogue price for long primer was forty-two cents a pound, yet the Public Printer paid fifty cents a pound, and no reduction. Their catalogue price of small pica was thirty-eight cents a pound, yet this "old man," that the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] alludes to, paid forty-six cents a pound, and no deduction. He paid for these different kinds of type eight cents a pound more than the catalogue prices—more than he could have bought the same type from all these firms. He did that notwithstanding the fact that where there is competition allowed there is always a reduction made of from 10 to 30 per cent. on the catalogue of prices.

Mr. Brady, in the Post-Office Department, testified that he owned a newspaper in Indiana; that his establishment had been burned down, and that he had bought only two thousand dollars' worth of material, and upon that he said he had obtained a deduction of from 35 to 43 per cent.

Now, Mr. Chairman, can there be any reason for this extraordinary purchase. Is it not fair to surmise there must have been some reason at the bottom of this, when the Public Printer buys forty-one thousand dollars' worth of type of one firm at eight cents a pound more than catalogue prices and no deduction made? I can tell you how it could be done; I do not say it was done. The Public Printer admitted before our committee that he could collude with dealers under the present system and defraud the Government if he was disposed to be dishonest. He might have an understanding with a dealer that he was to purchase material for a given price and have it billed at a larger price, then draw the money and divide the difference. Now, whether or not he may have done that in this case I am not here to say. I confine myself to the facts. Let me call attention to another purchase.

The Public Printer bought of a well-known lobbyist twelve sewing-machines for $1,500 apiece, making $18,000 for the twelve, and put them into that establishment, the object being, as he claimed, to save money to the Government by the use of improved machinery which displaced the labor of a large number of women who were sewing by hand. I will say that these sewing-machines, as was testified, are somewhat larger than an ordinary sewing-machine, but very similar, sewing with wire instead of thread. When the committee began to investigate the purchase of these sewing-machines at this enormous price, the gentleman who had negotiated their sale to Mr. Defrees was daily in the committee room, prompting gentlemen who were asking questions, as I thought, for the protection of Mr. Defrees; and when the trial began to get hot one witness was brought upon the stand with an elaborate array of figures to show what these sewing-machines would save.

This was what prompted the statement in the Public Printer's annual report as to the saving effected by these sewing-machines. I have no doubt this witness came before the committee to say how much the saving would be in a year—how much on one machine, how much on two, how much on ten, and he went through a list to show the enormous saving. He had to admit before he got through that he knew but little about the figures himself, but that they had been made for him. (Testimony, page 513.) I think he made the saving of these machines $463,973.34, all told, during the life-time of the machines. Following a question of mine, he admitted that according to his statement, supposing one machine saved $2,000, ten would save $20,000, fifteen would save $30,000, one hundred would save $200,000; and so he went on answering until all that was necessary, according to his theory, to have the public printing done for nothing was to have enough sewing-machines, so that the whole establishment could be operated for nothing, except the cost of the grease necessary to run the machine. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAWLEY. Would the gentleman like me to give the words of that witness and also the fact?

Mr. FINLEY. I do not hear the gentleman.

Mr. HAWLEY. Would the gentleman like to have the truth put right into the middle of his speech?

Mr. FINLEY. The what?

Mr. HAWLEY. The truth.

Mr. FINLEY. Not from the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is not from me, but from the Printing Office, and from sworn testimony. Here is the testimony, [exhibiting a document.]

Mr. FINLEY. I have the testimony here also.

Mr. Chairman, the attention of the Public Printer was called to the fact that although the law plainly provides that he shall not purchase material in open market in excess of $50 in any term of six months, except by advertisement and proposal, he had been buying in open market every year thousands of dollars' worth of material in utter defiance of that law. The Public Printer, in 1876, bought twenty-five thousand dollars' worth of material in open market; in 1877, thirty-four thousand dollars' worth; and in 1878, fifty-nine thousand dollars' worth. Gentlemen may inquire why he did that, and how he could do it in violation of a law which says that no material in excess of $50 at any one term of six months shall be purchased, except by advertisements and proposals. The Public Printer said in answer to this, that the word "material," as he construed it, covered only that which went into the work, which would be substantially paper and ink; that under his construction of the law he could buy machinery, printing-presses, wire-sewing machines, tools, type, chases—in short, all kinds of tools and machinery and supplies not entering into the work; and that these would not be covered by the word material, as used in the statute, and so there would be no violation of the law. When we asked him whether it was not true that he could buy his supplies (by whatever name he might call them) cheaper and more to the advantage of the Government by advertisement and proposals, he did, in illustrating that he had reformed an abuse in that department, call our attention to the fact that he had complied with the law so far as ink was concerned, and then proceeded to show the committee wherein he had made a great saving to the Government in that regard, which I admit. He showed that by advertising for proposals he was enabled to buy Bullock press ink for nine and one-half cents a pound which before had cost thirty-five cents under his predecessor; cylinder-press ink for twelve cents a pound which before had cost sixty cents; Adams press ink at twelve cents a pound which before had cost thirty-five cents; and cut ink for thirty cents a pound which had cost from $1 to $5 a pound.

We inquired as to how the ink had been bought before. We learned Mr. Defrees's predecessor had done in regard to ink just as Mr. Defrees is doing in regard to other supplies; that is, had bought them in open market instead of advertising for proposals, as the law provided. We found further, on examination, that his predecessor had bought his ink mainly from one firm—Johnson & Co., of Philadelphia. Mr. Defrees called attention to the fact when he advertised for proposals for supplying the Printing Office with ink, he got this difference, which I have already mentioned, in favor of the Government. This firm of Johnson & Co., it appears, had the contract for supplying pretty much the whole of the ink to the Printing Office. When the law was enacted providing that ink for the Government Printing Office should only be purchased after advertising for proposals, Mr. Defrees's predecessor evaded the letter of the law by advertising for so many barrels of Johnson's ink, and the result was that, nobody else making Johnson's ink, Johnson & Co. got the contract to supply the ink at from thirty-five cents to $5 a pound, as theretofore.

And right here, as I happen to think of it, we found on investigation in reference to the sale of presses, among the sales made by him were to Johnson & Co., nine presses and one engine for the sum of $7,150, and although those sales were made between the years 1870 and 1873, yet no record of them was found on the Public Printer's books until 1875.

Mr. WARD. Will the gentleman from Ohio permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. FINLEY. Yes; if you do not make a speech.

Mr. WARD. I do not wish to make a speech, but merely rise for the purpose of making a correction of the gentleman's statement in reference to the purchase by the Government Printing Office of a certain number of wire-sewing machines. These machines were sold only at one place, and the Public Printer paid not a single cent more for them than private individuals who purchased them for their own use.

Mr. FINLEY. I will answer the gentleman with pleasure. First, from private conversation I had with a gentleman who purported to know, I was informed that up to the time the Public Printer bought those machines that firm never sold a single one of these wire-sewing machines; but that, on the contrary, these sold to the Government Printing Office were the first they ever sold. Secondly, I was informed that wire-sewing machines of a like character and quality are sold by other firms at from $400 to $700 apiece, although these were sold to the Public Printer for $1,500 apiece. I was further informed that one of these same machines had since been offered to a gentleman of this city for $400—

Mr. WARD. I wish to say to the gentleman from Ohio and to the House, that these wire-sewing machines are manufactured by parties who reside, if not in my district right close to it, in the city of Philadelphia, and that I am informed the Government of the United States by the use of these wire-sewing machines has already saved more than the price paid for them.

Mr. FINLEY. I do not yield to the gentleman any further.

Mr. WARD. I notice that the gentleman is anxious to drop the subject of wire-sewing machines.

Mr. FINLEY. Let the gentleman's statement go for all it is worth.

Mr. WARD. These wire-sewing machines speak for themselves.

Mr. FINLEY. I am informed they do speak for themselves at the rate of $1,500 each, but they do not sew as well for themselves as they speak.

Mr. McMAHON. I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania has advertised these machines enough on the floor. [Laughter.]

Mr. WARD. I have, with the assistance of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. FINLEY.]

Mr. FINLEY. I was talking on the subject of inks when interrupted. I hold in my hand a book which was printed, according to the testimony, with sixty-cent ink, but which Mr. Defrees under his advertisement for proposals got at twelve cents per pound, which he is now paying twelve cents a pound for, but which his predecessor bought at sixty cents a pound. Gentlemen will observe, if I draw my finger across the page the ink comes off as though it were printed with apple-butter. [Laughter.] That is the character of ink which the Public Printer, the predecessor of Mr. Defrees, purchased at sixty cents a pound. You can have ocular demonstration of what kind of printing-ink it is by looking at this book.

Mr. WHITE. Wash your hands and then it will not come off. [Laughter.]

Mr. FINLEY. Let me say to the gentleman, I wash my hands of the frauds and corruption of the Government Printing Office. [Applause on the democratic side of the House.]

The Public Printer himself showed to the committee that he had saved to the Government by advertising for proposals the difference between sixty cents and twelve cents a pound in the purchase of this class of ink. He was compelled to admit, nevertheless, that while he made that great saving in the matter of ink because he advertised for proposals, yet in all other instances he himself does the very thing for which he condemned his predecessor—purchasing other materials in the open market. The law provides that paper and ink shall be purchased after advertisement for proposals; and the law further provides that he shall buy other materials exceeding the value of $50 in the same way. The Public Printer construes the law to refer only to paper and ink, and for all other materials used in that office he goes into the open market paying sixty-six cents for nonpareil type when, if it were thrown open to competition, he could buy it at forty and forty-five cents per pound. He purchases nearly all his supplies, except paper and ink, in the open market.

I wish now to call attention to another matter which my colleague alluded to, and that is the amount accruing from the sale of waste-paper and other waste material. It is very difficult to arrive at the exact figures, for the reason that on investigation it appears that the account of sales of waste is loosely kept, in the first place, and the accounts, such as they are, do not agree with the amount as reported by the Public Printer to Congress. For example: when there was an old cutting-machine or a press or fixtures, or waste scraps, or any other article in his department which he thought advisable to dispose of, Mr. Roberts, foreman of the bindery, would sell it and pass the proceeds over to Mr. Larcombe, the financial agent and bookkeeper.

Mr. Collins sells the RECORD and passes the proceeds over to Mr. Larcombe. A number of subordinates make sales of property and pass the proceeds over to Mr. Larcombe, the financial manager and bookkeeper, and yet Mr. Larcombe says he has no system of book-keeping by which he can tell you how much property is sold or bought. He says all he does is, when a man sells property and tells him this is for something sold, he puts it on his book and takes his word for it that it is all right. That is all he has to do with it, and then he turns it into the Treasury from time to time. At one time he had in his hands for nearly a year as much as $50,000 which should have been turned into the Treasury, of which he had no account in the world except upon loose slips of paper which lay around on his desk and in his safe.

We asked him the question, where do you put these memorandum slips when you make a statement of moneys coming into your possession from such sources? Well, he says, I keep the various sums of money paid to me from time to time on loose slips of paper and in my head, and after a while I put them in a book. We said to him, bring your book, and upon the book being brought before the committee we found right in the center of it that eighteen or twenty pages had been cut out. The question was asked him, what was contained on those pages that were cut out? The answer was, they had the account of the money on them. Why were they cut out? "I presume that the amounts were put into another book and I thought they were not necessary here and I cut them out."

Now, the time that that was done was just before the Vance investigation. We went a little further; we turned to a page of his book and we found this to be a fact. For instance, money had been paid to him, ten, twenty, or thirty thousand dollars, and he had been holding it in his possession, as he said, using it.

Then he would deposit, say, $10,000 in the Treasury. He said he would go then to the slips and select from them an amount equal to $10,000 and put it down on the debit side of the book, and then charge it up on the other side, "deposited to-day $10,000," draw parallel lines, and square the account. That was his system of keeping accounts, and yet he said at that very time (although the books would show that the account was squared, and all money in his hands turned into the Treasury) he had $50,000 in his possession which had not been turned over to the Treasurer, and which would appear nowhere on any account, and might have been in his possession for a year before.

On the subject of the sale of Government property by the Public Printer and his subordinates and the system by which accounts are kept I will give the following extracts from the report of the committee and testimony taken by it. The committee say:

We give, as the result of our investigation on that subject, that the books and records of the establishment have been, and are, so kept as to preclude the possibility of ascertaining its exact current or past condition, or of really obtaining any satisfactory results as to the amount of material consumed, or to decide the cost of any particular class of work. It is probably impossible for any person in or out of the Public Printing Office to tell the actual cost of any piece of work executed therein, for a want of system; disconnectedness and lack of sequence so distinguishes the records and accounts of the office as to defy elucidation. The testimony of John Larcombe, the bookkeeper, is that sales of property and other important transactions are often committed to the memory alone. The only real data from which the committee could derive information on any of these points being the occasional and desultory memoranda kept by Mr. Larcombe, who testified that when money was acquired by the sale of printing-presses, a quantity of type, or other disposable property, and the amount handed to him, he simply noted on his book the amount so received, which he admits is the only record of such transactions to be found on the books of the Public Printer, and that sometimes these entries were made without respect to the date on which the sale took place. And your committee found no charge whatever against the persons to whom such property was transferred.

For example, under date of December 17, 1875, Mr. Larcombe entered on his memorandum "R. Hoe & Co., four Adams and four Gordon presses, $3,000." Turning to the personal account of R. Hoe & Co., the committee find no record of this transfer of property, but, on the contrary, find, under date of May 14, 1875, R. Hoe & Co. credited with a sale to the Public Printer of seven presses at a cost of $19,000, and charged on the same day with cash in full of $19,000. The stub of the check-book from which the check was taken to pay R. Hoe & Co. shows that it was made in their favor for the full amount of $19,000, and the item of eight presses sold to them by the Public Printer does not appear until the following December, and then only on the cash-book in the words above cited.

Some time in May previous the $3,000 were received from R. Hoe & Co., but just how or where the books do not show, and Mr. Larcombe was unable to tell; but he is certain that he carried the facts of the transaction in his head from May 14 until December, 1875, the only security to the Government in case of accident to the said Larcombe in the mean time being the fact that in Mr. Larcombe's estimation "the firm of R. Hoe & Co. is an honorable one."

We quote from the testimony of Mr. Larcombe on this subject, pages 261 and 262, as follows:

"By Mr. FINLEY:

"Question. [Referring to cash-book.] The entries which appear on pages 13 and 14, after the point at which a balance is struck, and running to pages 17 and 18, to the point at which a balance is struck, where there is an entry of a deposit of $71,754.18, were all made, I understand, on the 11th and 15th days of April, 1876?"

"Answer. Yes, sir.

"Q. That included this entry of $3,000 cash, which should have been received from R. Hoe & Co.?"

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Where did you keep an account of these entries before you entered them on this book?"

"A. I kept them on sheets of paper in my safe.

"Q. I find by reference to your book of printing accounts that, in the settlement of R. Hoe & Co.'s account, you have credited them with the amounts purchased from them, footing up a sum exceeding $19,000; that you have then on the 17th of December, 1875, charged them with cash as though the amount had all been paid in cash; is that correct?"

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Had this sale been made at that time?"

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. When was this sale to R. Hoe & Co. made?"

"A. I could not give the date. It was an agreement made between R. Hoe & Co. and the Congressional Printer at the time of the purchase of those new presses, I think.

"Q. Look for and state the date.

"A. [After reference to book.] The purchase must have been before the delivery of the presses was made. The presses were received on the 14th of May, 1875.

"Q. The transaction in regard to presses took place on the 14th of May?"

"A. Yes, sir; Mr. Clapp was to purchase from Hoe & Co. certain presses, and they were to purchase from him certain presses.

"Q. How did you keep a record of this transaction, if any, until the 17th of December, 1875?"

"A. I did not keep it at all.

"Q. You did not keep it anywhere except in your head?"

"A. These presses were to be paid for when these other presses were to be paid for.

"Q. You simply kept it in your head?"

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. So that from May 14, 1875, to December 17, 1875, R. Hoe & Co. owed the Government Printing Office $3,000 for eight presses which they had bought, and for that time there was no record of the indebtedness upon anything in this office?"

"A. Unless there was a correspondence with them.

"Q. Why do you not answer with more directness? Why do you try to dodge the question?"

"A. I am not trying to dodge. If you find me saying anything but the truth hold me accountable.

"Q. On May 14, 1875, Mr. Clapp bought seven presses from R. Hoe & Co., and on the same date sold to them eight presses of the office for a sum amounting to $3,000. From that day until December 17, 1875, when a record of the transaction appears on your books, no account was kept of that transaction?"

"A. That is true.

"Q. Had Mr. Clapp or had you died, there would have been no account of it?"

"A. I do not say that.

"Q. Is that not the fact?"

"A. Hoe & Co. are an honorable firm.

"Q. You would have depended upon Hoe & Co. coming forward and confessing that they owed the money?"

"A. Well, that is the only way.

"Q. On the 17th of December you made an entry of the transaction?"

"A. Then for the first time.

"Q. And then, instead of crediting Hoe & Co. with the $3,000 paid to them, so far as the books show, you charged them with the full amount of their account paid in cash; is that the fact?"

"A. That is the fact.

"Q. You also charge yourself on your book, as of that date, with $3,000, as being received from Hoe & Co. Is that true?"

"A. That is true.

"Q. And you return that in the data furnished by you in the Public Printer's report as under the head of "etc." deposited in the Treasury?"

"A. That is so, sir."

Again, referring to the manner in which accounts of sales are kept, I quote from the testimony of Mr. Larcombe, bookkeeper and financial manager:

By Mr. BURDICK:

Question. Does Mr. Collins return to you any statement or account of the money received of such sales?

Answer. None at all, sir.

By Mr. FINLEY:

Q. Your books do not show in any manner what money he receives?

A. No, sir; only what money he pays me.

Q. You simply put down in your book from time to time such sums of money as he hands you?

A. Precisely so, sir.

Q. And which money he informs you he receives from the sales of documents.

A. Precisely so, sir.

Q. Whether that money is one-third or one-half or less than the whole of the moneys received by him you do not know and your books do not show?

A. That is it.

Referring to Mr. Collins, whom Mr. SINGLETON said had a rare talent for forcing balances, the committee say:

Mr. Collins, another clerk, keeps an account of the sales of the RECORD. The amount handed over by him in 1876 to the financial clerk, Mr. Larcombe, exceeded $21,000, and we doubt not that the amount coming into his hands will equal that amount annually; yet he likewise gives no bond and renders no account of the amount of his sales, as shown by the testimony of Mr. Larcombe. (See page 275.)

In respect to sales made by him and the account kept of them, Mr. Larcombe testifies as follows:

By Mr. FINLEY:

Question. Mr. Collins also makes some sales?

Answer. Yes, sir. It is his business, for instance, to receive your order, print your speech, and collect the money for the same from you.

Q. Does he receive money from any other source?

A. He receives subscriptions from all parts of the country, as well as from the city of Washington, for the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Q. Is there anything else on account of which he receives and handles money?

A. I have no idea of anything else.

Q. About what amount of money does he pay over to you per annum?

A. For the year 1876 he paid me $21,587.06.

Q. Is there any book kept by you which shows how much money he receives?

A. No, sir.

Q. You have no means of knowing whether the amount reported by him was the whole or the one-third or the one-half of the amount received by him other than his word for it?

A. None, sir.

Q. You take whatever he hands you, put it down on your cash-book, and turn it into the Treasury?

A. I do.

Q. He may hand you the whole or a part, and, for anything you know, you cannot detect any error or misstatement in it?

A. I do not attempt to do so.

Q. Is there any other officer, a head of a department, or of any number of employees, who receives money and hands it over to you?

A. Occasionally the foreman of the bindery would bring me a small sum of money in consequence of the sales of leather scraps on the spot. He is the only person I can think of now.

Q. He exercises the right to sell leather scraps, gold-leaf, and other matters of that kind?

A. He does.

Q. You have to take his word as your only assurance that the amounts of sales returned by him are correct?

A. I have, sir.

Q. You put down the moneys he hands you, but have no means of knowing from your books whether the amounts are right or wrong?

A. None, sir.

Q. Does anybody else in the establishment, so far as you know, exercise the right to sell things in it?

A. None, certainly, that I can think of.

Q. If the superintendents of any of the other departments or branches of the establishment should sell any of the property and not account to you, you would have no means of detecting from your books any withholding of money?

A. I would know nothing about it.

I will make one more quotation from the testimony of Mr. Larcombe, respecting his mutilation of his cash-book after this alleged transfer to it of the cash an account of which he says he kept on loose slips of paper. When it is borne in mind that Mr. Larcombe testifies that all money passes through his hands; that he makes no report to his employer; that Mr. Defrees never examines into his accounts, but is compelled to trust implicitly to his honesty; that his sense of honesty is the only check there is upon him, (see pages of testimony 265-267,) any one reading his testimony respecting this transaction will certainly be impressed with the conviction that this man, whom Mr. SINGLETON charged with improvising a cash-book so as to make accounts balance and leave a perquisite to his employer of $58,000, is not the safest man in the world to trust the public funds with. His testimony is as follows:

By Mr. FINLEY:

Question. Where is the book? Has it been destroyed?

Answer. I have the book but I have not the material.

[NOTE.—The witness, by direction of Mr. FINLEY, after retiring and returning, hands to that gentleman a book, the condition of which is described as follows:—]

Q. You now produce a book containing copies of invoices and other matter which you say is the book from which you copied into the cash-book here the entries appearing in the latter. Is that true?

A. Yes, sir. I copied from there down to the spring of 1875.

Q. I notice by the book you produce that about one hundred and eighty pages of it, at the back part of the book, are blank pages, having nothing written on them; that about two-thirds of the way through the book there are the traces which indicate that some twelve or thirteen leaves have been cut out of the book with a knife or other sharp instrument. Do you say that the leaves thus cut out and away with are the ones that contained the information which is found in your cash-book on the page before us?

A. I do, sir.

- Q. When did you transfer to the cash-book the contents of those twelve or thirteen missing leaves?
- A. In the spring of 1875.
- Q. Was it before or after the Vance committee investigation?
- A. It was before.
- Q. Why did you cut out those leaves?
- A. Because I thought that that book was too insecure; that in the place which it had occupied for years it was too insecure; for the safety of information of that sort.
- Q. Where are the leaves which you cut out of this book?
- A. I have destroyed them, after comparing word, line, and figure, and the certificates of deposit that I deposited.
- Q. Then do you claim that it made them more secure to cut them out and destroy them?
- A. No, sir; it made it more secure to have it in the book itself.
- Q. Then tell me why you cut those leaves out?
- A. Because I deemed them of no more value, having them here, [indicating cash-book.]
- Q. Did you transfer the items which remain in this mutilated book to your cash-book?
- A. Not at all. Because that [indicating mutilated book] was filled up to where you see the last entry made.
- Q. Now, what was the necessity for cutting those leaves out; they did no harm where they were?
- A. None in the world.
- Q. Why did you take a knife and cut the book in that manner?
- A. Because I did not want to have two copies containing the same information.
- Q. Have you used this mutilated book for any purpose since?
- A. I use it every day and every hour in the day. That was why it was copied for myself; I determined to have a new book made.
- Q. I have asked you why you cut those leaves out.
- A. Because they were no longer of any use, and were therefore valueless.
- Q. Therefore you cut them out?
- A. Yes, sir. It would only have made a confusion to let them be.
- Q. What confusion would have been made by letting those leaves stay there?
- A. I deemed them of no value and destroyed them.
- Q. Now, you testified heretofore that many of these items were not put down in any book, but were kept on a slip or on slips of paper?
- A. And I say so again.
- Q. What did you do with those slips of paper?
- A. I have not preserved them.
- Q. Did you destroy them?
- A. Yes, sir.
- Q. How can you or any one know that the item of $250, contained in the entry under date of April 18, 1870, in your cash-book, had been contained in this mutilated book, or in any other book, before you put it here in the cash-book?
- A. No human being can know that, sir.
- Q. Having cut out from this mutilated book the leaves containing the entries and destroyed them, and having destroyed all the slips of paper on which you kept your accounts prior to the time at which you commenced this cash-book, you say now that no one except your Maker and yourself can tell whether you have the items right or not or have accounted for these moneys or not?
- A. No one, sir.
- By Mr. MANNING:
- Q. About what date was it that you mutilated the book produced here?
- A. It must have been between the middle of February and the middle of May, 1875.
- Q. You cannot come nearer to the time than ninety days?
- A. No, sir; I cannot.

It appears from the evidence that in 1861 and 1862 this chief clerk of Mr. Defrees of whom I have spoken had a brother in business in this city, who enjoyed a monopoly of gathering in the waste-paper of the office without payment therefor. I quote from the report of the committee on this point. The committee says:

It appears in evidence that all the shavings, waste-paper, and documents accumulating in 1861 were handed over to one Edward Towers, brother of Will Towers, late chief clerk under Mr. Defrees, who paid nothing whatever for them. For the first few months of that year Mr. Larcombe made a memorandum of the quantity but not the value of the documents and paper thus delivered, which your committee observed consisted of several thousand pounds of white paper and several thousand pounds of documents, and which latter Mr. Larcombe testified were documents printed in excess of the number ordered by Congress. For at least six months of the year no memorandum even was kept of the quantity delivered, and it appears Mr. Defrees has not collected anything from the said Edward Towers. In the year 1862 only $150 was collected on account of shavings and waste-paper and documents. As the books furnish no clue to the amount that should have been realized in 1861 and 1862, we can only estimate by comparison with what it was in other years. In 1863 the amount realized from this source was $15,758.18; in 1865, $32,751.82; in 1866, $21,822.17; and in 1867, $23,169.75, (pages 318, 319, 328.) In 1863 the sum expended in the purchase and use of paper was $87,029.87, and the sum realized from the sale of wastage was $15,758.18. In 1861 the sum expended for paper used was more than double that amount, being $206,313.37, yet nothing whatever was realized from the sale of wastage.

You go to the Public Printer's report and compare the amount of money reported as having been received by him from the sale of documents and other property, and then compare that with his books, and you will find that they in no instance agree. We had experts to examine his books who spent weeks upon weeks, making a close and careful investigation, comparing them with his reports to Congress. Now, this the House will observe was the result arrived at. In 1875 the Public Printer, in his annual report to Congress, reported that he had realized from the sale of documents and turned over to the Treasury the sum of $34,580.35.

Mr. CLAFLIN. Was that amount in the administration of Mr. Defrees or Mr. Clapp?

Mr. FINLEY. The $50,000 to which I have alluded was under Mr. Clapp's administration, but I will say to the gentleman that Mr. Larcombe, who was then and still is the financial manager or book-keeper, assumes and is pursuing the same line of policy, so that it is substantially under the administration of either or both.

Now, I want gentlemen to hear this. In 1875 the Public Printer under his certificate which he is required by law to make reported that he had received $34,580.35 from the sale of documents, which he said he had turned into the Treasury. We found from his books that instead of $34,580.35 he had received $50,702.82, a difference of $16,122.47. In 1876 he reports having received $52,566.60, while we found from his books that he had received but $46,649.09, a difference of about $5,919.63. In 1877 he reported having received $38,539.87, while his books showed that he had received $46,456.50; and so on clear through to the present time. These reports made by the Public Printer, as I have stated, of the amount received do not agree with his books, nor with the reports made to Congress. The discrepancy is made up sometimes in these two reports. For instance, he states at one time he received $34,000 when he received about $50,000. In the next he reports that he received more than he did in fact receive, and the two amounts possibly come near making the account balance; but that is not all.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to go into this matter more fully and more clearly to show the true state of the facts as developed by that investigation. But I am admonished that I have but five minutes' time remaining. I have said that is not all. From the examination of the Public Printer's books and a comparison with the Treasurer's books and his reports to Congress it is a further fact that not one of these agrees with the others. The Public Printer's report does not agree into thousands of dollars with his books as to the amount of money actually expended. The Public Printer's reports do not agree into thousands of dollars with the Treasurer's account. His reports and his books and the Treasurer's account all disagree.

For instance, the Public Printer's report for 1875 shows that his total disbursements were $1,709,402.81, while his books show his disbursements to be $1,719,126.55—a difference of nearly $10,000. The difference between his books and his reports for the year 1876 is nearly $53,000; the difference between his books and his reports for 1877 is nearly $129,000. Go clear through the books of the Public Printer. The experts who examined them say there is no system of bookkeeping, no system of accounts, no cash account kept, no system of balances by which any expert or any person can either trace property that goes into his hands, property that he has sold, or the amount of money received for various purposes and disbursed by the Public Printer. The expert who examined the books of the Public Printer testified that, charging the Public Printer with money received from all sources for the years from September 30, 1870, to September 30, 1877, and giving him credit with all disbursements as reported by him to Congress during the same period, his receipts will exceed his disbursements $119,746.65, which result he foots up in a table as follows:

[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. HAWLEY rose.
Mr. MCMAHON. Do gentlemen on the other side prefer to speak this evening?
Mr. HAWLEY. I would prefer letting the debate go over till Monday.

Mr. McMAHON. Monday is a day for the suspension of the rules. I think we should proceed with this to-morrow. If the gentleman from Connecticut has been recognized as having the floor, I move that the committee do now rise. Will the Chair state who has been recognized?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. HAWLEY.]

Mr. McMAHON. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a motion for the committee to rise.

Mr. HAWLEY. I will after the gentleman from Mississippi has been permitted to make a request for the printing of his amendment.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I ask that my amendment be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The amendment is as follows:

Add to the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That so much of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes," as is in the words following: "That so much of all laws or parts of laws as provide for the election or appointment of Public Printer be, and the same are hereby, repealed, to take effect from and after the passage of this act; and the President of the United States shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a suitable person, who must be a practical printer and versed in the art of bookbinding, to take charge of and manage the Government Printing Office from and after the date aforesaid; he shall be called the Public Printer, and shall be vested with all the powers and subject to all the restrictions pertaining to the officer now known as the Public Printer; he shall give bond in the sum of $100,000 for the faithful performance of the duties of his office, said bond to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior," be, and the same is hereby, repealed: Provided further, That the House of Representatives shall elect some competent person, who shall be a practical printer, to take charge of and manage the Government Printing Office. The person so elected shall be deemed an officer of the House of Representatives, and shall be denominated Congressional Printer, and shall hold his office for two years and until his successor shall be elected; he shall give bond in the sum of $100,000 for the faithful performance of the duties of his office, said bond to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior; he shall superintend the printing and binding of the Journals and such other documents as shall be ordered by each House of Congress, and shall superintend the execution of all the printing and binding for the respective Departments of the Government now required by law to be executed at the Government Printing Office, and shall, in all respects, be governed by the laws in force in relation to the Public Printer and the execution of the printing and binding; and the salary of said officer shall be $3,400 per annum: Provided further, That as soon as practicable after the election of said Congressional Printer, he shall cause to be prepared a complete invoice of all the material, type, presses, leather, paper, utensils, fixtures, furniture, stock, horses, wagons, carriages, harnesses, and personal property of every description whatever under his charge and belonging to the Government; said invoice shall be verified by the oath or affirmation of the Congressional Printer, reported to Congress, and printed. And thereafter, at the beginning of each fiscal year, or as soon thereafter as practicable, he shall cause a new inventory of all of the said personal property then in his possession to be taken. Said inventory shall be verified by the oath or affirmation of the Congressional Printer, and published as a part of his annual report to Congress. This proviso to take effect from and after the date of its passage."

Mr. McMAHON. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CARLISLE reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 4924) making appropriations to supply certain deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. PAGE. I move that when the House adjourns it be to meet on Monday next.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 88, noes 41.

Mr. ATKINS. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. McMAHON. I wish to say to the House that it is desirable this bill should go to the Senate as speedily as possible, as it is important it should be passed immediately. Let us have the yeas and nays. Let us see who want to go on with the appropriations over there.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Do gentlemen not want to go on with the appropriation bills?

Mr. HAWLEY. We will go on with them on Monday.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 83, nays 74, not voting 135; as follows:

 Mr. BLACKBURN with Mr. WHITE.
 Mr. HUBBELL with Mr. SPRINGER.
 Mr. CABELL with Mr. FISHER.
 Mr. SAMFORD with Mr. LINDSEY.

Mr. WILBUR. I am paired on political questions, but have voted, thinking this was not a political question.

The SPEAKER. That is for the gentleman himself to decide.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I have been announced as paired with Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. I am paired with him on political questions, and as this is not a political question I have voted "ay."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. PAGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (S. No. 1267) for the relief of P. L. Ward, widow and executrix of William Ward, deceased;

An act (S. No. 1268) for the relief of James Vance and his legal representatives, and the legal representatives of William Vance, deceased; and

An act (S. No. 768) for the reclamation of arid and waste lands.

COMMERCIAL REPORTS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

In answer to a resolution of the House of Representatives of March 2, 1880, requesting the Secretary of State to communicate to the House certain information in relation to the publication and circulation of commercial reports, I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State, with its accompanying papers.

R. B. HAYES.

WASHINGTON, March 12, 1880.

Mr. COX. I move that the message, with the accompanying papers, be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and printed. The motion was agreed to.

DUTY ON HOOP-IRON.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, relative to the duty on hoop-iron; which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania, for a few days, on account of important business.

CHARLES M. FAIRMAN.

Mr. BAYNE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5090) for the relief of Charles M. Fairman, of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

PREVENTION OF PLEURO-PNEUMONIA.

Mr. COVERT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5091) for the suppression and prevention of pleuro-pneumonia in neat cattle; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and ordered to be printed.

AGREEMENT WITH UTE INDIANS.

Mr. SCALES, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5092) to accept and ratify the agreement submitted by the confederated bands of Ute Indians in Colorado for the sale of their reservation in said State, and for other purposes, and to make the necessary appropriation for carrying out the same; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

RIVER AND HARBOR IMPROVEMENT IN LOUISIANA.

Mr. ACKLEN, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, requested and directed to furnish this House with a list and amounts of all moneys appropriated by Congress for rivers and harbors in Louisiana, the time when made, together with the surveys, estimates, and recommendations upon which said appropriations were made, and the surveys upon which no appropriations have been made.

INDIGENT SOLDIERS AND SAILORS' HOME.

Mr. OSMER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5093) to authorize the Government of the United States to accept a title to certain lands in the city of Erie, Pennsylvania, and to establish a home for indigent soldiers and sailors; which was read a first and second time.

The SPEAKER. To what committee does the gentleman desire to have that bill referred?

Mr. OSMER. I can hardly tell which would be the appropriate committee. It relates to a marine hospital which was established in Erie under the laws of Pennsylvania. The State now desires to cede it to the United States for the purpose of establishing a home for indigent soldiers and sailors.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. OSMER. Very well.

The bill was accordingly referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MARY M. CLARK.

Mr. MCKENZIE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5094) granting a pension to Mary M. Clark, widow of P. Clark, late first lieutenant Company K, First Kentucky Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON HON. ALFRED M. LAY.

Mr. SAWYER, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring therein,) That 2,000 copies, in book form, suitably bound, of the memorial addresses on the life and character of Hon. Alfred M. Lay, late a member of the House of Representatives, be printed; 1,500 for the House of Representatives, and 500 for the Senate.

VAN B. BOWERS.

Mr. ROTHWELL. I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill No. 298, for the relief of Van B. Bowers, be taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Claims.

There was no objection; and the bill was accordingly taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HOOKER. I move that the House now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at five o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday next.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows, viz:

By Mr. AINSLIE: The petition of E. P. Johnson and 150 others, citizens of Lemhi County, Idaho Territory, for an appropriation for the construction of a military road up Salmon River, from Salmon City to Challis, Idaho Territory—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, March 15, 1880.

Prayer by Rev. DOUGLAS F. FORREST, D. D., of Washington, D. C. The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers covering copies of reports from Captain C. B. Phillips, Corps of Engineers, upon examination and surveys made in compliance with the requirements of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1879, of Pamunkey and Archer's Hope Rivers, Virginia; of Lockwood's Folly and Waccamaw Rivers, North Carolina; and of the Pee Dee River, South Carolina; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers and an accompanying copy of a report of Captain A. N. Damrell, Corps of Engineers, upon a survey of Mobile Harbor, Alabama, made in compliance with the provisions of the river and harbor act of June 18, 1878; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter of the Chief of Engineers covering copies of reports of Captain A. N. Damrell, Corps of Engineers, upon examinations made in compliance with the requirements of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1879, of Noxubee River, Mississippi, of Choctawhatchee River, Alabama, from Geneva to Newton and Pea River, Alabama, from Geneva to Elba, and of Withlacoochee River, Florida; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the 3rd ultimo, copy of a report of the Acting Commissioner of the General Land Office on the subject of changes in the original line of the Northern Pacific Railroad; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT ON FISH AND FISHERIES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the annual report of Spencer F. Baird, United States Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, 1879; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

Mr. ANTHONY submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring.) That there be printed 10,000 extra copies of the report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries for the year 1879, of which 2,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 4,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,500 copies for the use of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, the illustrations to be made by the Public Printer under the direction of the Joint Committee on Public Printing, and 2,500 for sale by the Public Printer, under such regulations as the Joint Committee on Printing may prescribe, at a price equal to the additional cost of publication and 10 per cent. thereon added.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 5089) directing the issue of a duplicate check to Elizabeth D. Thomas, a pensioner of the United States; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 605) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to deposit certain funds in the United States Treasury in lieu of investment.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. No. 3258) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior and Secretary of War to employ additional clerks for the balance of this fiscal year to expedite the settlement of pension applications, and for other purposes; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a petition of Colonel W. Merritt and other officers of the Fifth United States Cavalry, relative to the restoration to the Army of First-Lieutenants Harlow L. Street and John W. Chickering, and Captain Edward Byrne, late of the First, Sixth, and Tenth United States Cavalry, respectively; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a memorial of the Legislature of Wisconsin, in favor of an adequate appropriation for the improvement of the harbor at Green Bay, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Mr. President, I am charged with the duty of presenting a memorial from the publishers of the principal newspapers of Chicago, respectfully asking that the present duty of 20 per cent. on the valuation of foreign unsized paper be repealed. This tax produces little revenue, and serves only to enlarge the profits of manufacturers, who, enjoying a monopoly, are able to dictate their own terms to the consumers.

These memorialists also ask that the duty on soda-ash, principally made abroad, and the duty on wood, straw, and all other pulp be abolished so that the American manufacturer of paper will stand on an equal footing with his foreign competitor at the start, with the advantage of freight, insurance, ready market, and charges attending importation on his side, as against the paper-maker abroad. And lastly, they ask that the duty on type, which is virtually prohibitory, be wiped out, because, like that on paper, it exclusively benefits a combination and serves as a pretext for unreasonable prices.

These propositions seem to be so plain and so just as to require no argument in their behalf. What is true of Chicago, applies with equal force to the press of the whole United States, and especially to that portion of it familiarly known as the "country papers." The great metropolitan journals can take care of themselves under almost any condition of things, but that fact furnishes no good reason why they should be subjected to imposition or to wrong. The main burden of these taxes falls heaviest on the papers of the interior, dependent on local circulation, and unable to compete with those of the large cities. After all, it is struggling labor that has to carry the load of taxation, in whatever form it may be imposed. The press is one of the wonders attending the growth of our institutions. In the history of the human race, there is nothing comparable to this development. It is not only the bulwark of liberty, but it is the mighty popular instructor, more beneficent and wide-reaching than any other agency but the Christian religion, of which it is one of the main props.

Complaint is made that this power is sometimes abused and that we in public life are too often censoriously criticised. It will be a sad day for the Republic when criticism upon the acts and the speech of Senators and Representatives shall be curbed, and a still sadder day when those acts and that speech cannot invite the sternest criticism. What food is to the body the press is to the mind. It has become a daily necessity and nourishment from the home of the rich to the cabin of the pioneer on the plains, whose brain and muscle are integral parts of the empire in the West. To make the press wholly independent and to widen its influence every restriction of unjust or unwise laws ought to be removed.

The time has come, Mr. President, when the mass of incongruities and of huge monopolies, commonly called the tariff, should be revised and adapted to the spirit of a progressive age. A young people like ours becomes restive under the shackles of old legislation passed in the confusion of civil strife or under the persuasion of selfish politics. It may not be practicable at this session to reform the revenue system. Indeed, reputed action elsewhere forbids any hope of that kind. But there should be no difficulty in an exceptional case like that presented in this memorial. Only a few months ago Congress very properly swept away the obnoxious duty on quinine that had long been maintained for the profit of a few manufacturers in a single city. That remedy had at best only a local application. In this instance the newspapers of the entire country are oppressed by taxes which are a delusion and a snare. They bring nothing of importance into the Treasury, and they only stand as the duty on quinine did, as an excuse for increasing the dividends of what may be described as a close corporation of special interests.

I beg leave to present the petition, being the petition of the following-named papers in the city of Chicago: The Chicago Times, Chicago Evening Journal, the Chicago Tribune, Illinois Staats-Zeitung, Chicago Freie Presse, Chicago Volks-Freund, Chicago Daily Telegraph, Deutsche Warte, praying that the present duty of 20 per cent. on the valuation of foreign unsized paper be repealed; also, that the duty on soda-ash, wood, straw, and other pulp be abolished, and that the duty on type be also abolished. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS presented the petition of the Kentucky Press Association, praying that the duty be removed from all articles entering into the manufacture of printing-paper; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BECK. I was about to ask that the memorial presented by my colleague be read, but will present one perhaps of the same general character. I present the memorial of the Kentucky Press Association, officially signed by J. Stoddard Johnston, president, and by a committee thereof, praying that all duties be removed from such articles as enter into the manufacture of printing-paper, for the reasons stated in the petition. I move its reference to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BECK. I present a petition of residents of the District of Columbia, praying the passage of an act for enforcing the satisfaction of judgments rendered in the courts of the District. I move its reference to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. THURMAN. Let the title of the petition be read at the desk. The CHIEF CLERK. "Memorial of residents of the District of Columbia, requesting the passage of an act for enforcing the satisfaction of judgments rendered in the courts of said District."

Mr. BECK. I was advised that this is a subject which has always been considered by the Committee on the District of Columbia. I inquired of the lawyers who requested me to present the petition whether it ought to go to the Committee on the Judiciary or the Committee on the District of Columbia, and their judgment was that it ought to go to the Committee on the District of Columbia. I consulted several members of the Committee on the District of Columbia, and they were also of the opinion that the petition should be referred to their committee.

Mr. THURMAN. I shall not say a word against the reference.

Mr. BECK. That is all I know about it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The petition will be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. JOHNSTON presented the memorial of J. Richard Lewellen & Co., publishers of the Public Ledger, of Norfolk, Virginia, praying for the abolition of the tariff upon printing-type; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. KERNAN presented the petition of George Dunn, of Utica, New York, praying that he be granted a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. THURMAN presented a memorial of citizens of Michigan, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. No. 496) for the examination and adjudication of pension claims; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Lake County, Ohio, praying for such an amendment of the patent laws as will protect innocent users of patented articles from prosecution as infringers; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

He also presented a petition of citizens of New Lisbon, Ohio, praying for an amendment to the Constitution of the United States which shall grant to women the right of suffrage; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Lake County, Ohio, praying Congress to relieve them from the oppression of railway companies; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CONKLING presented a petition signed by a large number of licensed officers of steam-vessels, praying for a modification of the law and of the fees paid to pilots; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a memorial signed by merchants and ship-owners of San Francisco, California, praying the passage of an amendment to chapter 5, title 53, of the Revised Statutes, touching the payment of three months' extra wages to seamen discharged in foreign ports; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CONKLING. I present the memorial of George C. Wooley, formerly a member of one of the New York cavalry regiments, asking that certain pay be allowed to him, and giving the reasons why he is entitled to it. I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. McDONALD presented the memorial of W. R. McKeen, president of the Terre Haute and Indianapolis Railroad Company and leased lines, representing three hundred and fifty-four miles of railroad, remonstrating against a reduction of the duty on steel rails from $28 to $10 a ton; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of W. H. Ingram and others, of Winamac, Indiana, praying for the passage of a bill placing wood and straw pulp, soda-ash, and other chemicals used in the manufacture of paper on the free list; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of L. W. Hasselman and others, citizens of Indianapolis, remonstrating against the passage of the proposed bill amending the practice of the United States courts as regards the bringing of suits for the infringement of patents; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, presented a petition of citizens of Crawford and a petition of citizens of Mercer County, Pennsylvania, praying for such legislation as will prevent fluctuations in freights and unjust discriminations in charges for transportation; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of David Mapes and 53 others, citizens of Beech Creek Township, Clinton County, Pennsylvania; a petition of citizens of Randolph Township, Crawford County, Pennsylvania; and a petition of citizens of Mercer County, Pennsylvania, praying for the establishment of a Department of Agriculture; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Mercer County, and two petitions of citizens of Crawford County, Pennsylvania, praying for such an amendment of the patent laws as will protect innocent users of patented articles from prosecution as infringers; which were referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. GARLAND presented the memorial of F. M. Clouse and others, citizens of Ash Flat, Arkansas, protesting against the passage of the bill (S. No. 496) for the examination and adjudication of pension claims; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. COKE presented a petition of citizens of Belton, Texas, praying for such legislation as will prevent fluctuations in freights and unjust discriminations in charges for transportation; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. RANDOLPH presented a petition of officers of the Army, praying for the repeal of the law concerning payment by officers for fuel; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WALLACE presented a petition of citizens of Indiana County, Pennsylvania, praying for such legislation as will prevent fluctuations in freights and unjust discriminations in charges for transportation; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Indiana County, Pennsylvania, praying for the establishment of a department of agriculture; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Indiana County, Pennsylvania, praying for such an amendment of the patent laws as will protect innocent users of patented articles from prosecution as infringers; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. HOAR. I present the memorial of J. E. Crisp and others, citizens of Massachusetts and skilled mechanics, who have made a specialty of working upon and designing shoe-machinery, remonstrating against the extension of the McKay sewing-machine patent. I move the reference of the memorial to the Committee on Patents.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FARLEY. I present a resolution of the Legislature of California, relative to the establishment of a dead-letter office at San Francisco. I ask that it may be read and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The memorial will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

CHAPTER 16.

Assembly concurrent resolution No. 11, relative to the establishment of a dead-letter office in San Francisco.

Whereas a large amount of mail matter is constantly being transmitted from the post-offices of the Pacific slope to the Dead Letter Office at Washington, which matter is increased in consequence of the recent order of the Postmaster-General relative to the mode of addressing letters; and

Whereas the delay incident to such transmission is the cause of serious inconvenience and even pecuniary loss to the people of the Pacific coast: Therefore,

Resolved by the assembly, (the senate concurring,) That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be, and they are hereby, requested to use their best endeavors to obtain the establishment at San Francisco of a dead-letter office. And further, That the governor be requested to furnish a copy of this resolution to each of our Senators and Representatives.

J. F. COWDERY,
Speaker of the Assembly.
JOHN MANSFIELD,
President of Senate.

A true copy. Attest:

D. M. BURNS, Secretary of State.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The memorial will be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. CONKLING. Before that resolution passes away, I wish to ask a question of the Chair for my own government. I do not understand that a resolution of a Legislature addressed to the Senators of a State instructing them, is a proper resolution to present here for reference. The resolution speaks to the Senators from the State, and certainly no committee of this body can report upon it. The only report that could be made upon the resolution would be the opinion of a committee whether the Senator from California and his colleague ought to obey the instruction or not. That is a question which those Senators must settle for themselves.

I bring this to the notice of the Chair for the reason that it sometimes happens, inadvertently, as I suppose, that one of these resolutions finds its way before a committee, which committee does not know what to do with it. The Legislature of the State of New York passes a resolution instructing me to vote for a particular bill; I observe that particular instruction; but it is a thing that does not concern the other members of the Senate, and certainly not a committee of the Senate at all.

Mr. FARLEY. I will state to the Senator that I intend to introduce a bill to carry out the suggestion of the resolution, and I propose to advise the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads in regard to the matter. Therefore I have asked the reference of the resolution to that committee.

Mr. CONKLING. The honorable Senator will understand that I do not wish to incommode him or interfere with his bill; but I ask the question rather for my own understanding than for any other purpose. I do not suppose if the Legislature of my State passes a resolution instructing me to vote for a particular measure, that that is a resolution for me to present here and have referred to a committee. If the understanding of the Senate be different, I shall be very glad to know it, because I have proceeded, as other Senators have done, upon the idea I state.

Mr. FARLEY. The Senator from New York will permit me to say that he is much more familiar with the rules than I am, but I was of opinion that the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads is the proper committee to consider this subject.

Mr. CONKLING. There is no doubt of it.

Mr. FARLEY. For that reason simply I asked the reference of the resolution to that committee. I propose to introduce a bill if the committee should consider that it is a proper subject on which a bill ought to be introduced.

Mr. CONKLING. I am sure the Senator mistakes my point about this resolution. The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads is no doubt the proper committee and the bill is no doubt a proper bill to be considered, and if the Senator wishes the resolution to go to that committee as persuasive evidence or information to have this action, that he has a right to do; but my question, addressed to the Chair, is this: Is it proper for a Senator to introduce into the Senate for reference to a committee and for action the resolutions of a State Legislature, not addressed to Congress nor to the Senate but addressed simply to the Senators from that State, giving them instructions?

Mr. FARLEY. My impression is that it is proper. If the subject to which it relates is one entirely under the control of Congress, and if it is one that Congress must take action upon, it seems to me it ought to have the consideration of the proper committee. I may be entirely wrong; the Senator from New York has much more extensive knowledge of the proper course to be taken than I have, and I will yield to any suggestion he may make in regard to a disposition of the resolution which I have presented.

Mr. CONKLING. Claiming no superiority of recollection or information, my recollection is that it never has been customary, (and has only happened occasionally by accident,) to refer a resolution of a Legislature, speaking to the Senators from that State alone, to a committee of the Senate to act upon it. It really gives rise to no question except whether the Senator ought to obey his instruction or not. How can a committee pass upon that? But I merely make the question to the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If the Senator from New York makes a point of order, the Chair will rule upon it.

Mr. CONKLING. Then I will do so, for the sake of having the opinion of the Chair upon this subject.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair rules that the communication not being addressed to the Senate is not in order.

Mr. THURMAN. I want to say a word before this matter passes from the attention of the Senate. I think we ought to have a uniform rule on this subject. The usage of the Senate perhaps has not been uniform. It is but a few days since that the Judiciary Committee reported back the resolutions of a State Legislature of a similar character to those now presented, that is, mere resolutions of instruction to the Senators and request to the Representatives of a State. The resolutions had been sent to the Judiciary Committee, and that committee reported them back to the Senate with a statement in effect such as the ruling of the Chair now, and advised that while it was very proper to receive them, yet the appropriate course was to lay them on the table, and that they were not properly subject to reference to a committee. I think we ought to have a uniform usage upon the subject. That was the opinion we gave, and the report was acquiesced in by the Senate, although I think it did not attract much attention in the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order has not hitherto been made. The Chair sustains the point of order that a communication addressed to a Senator is not a memorial within the meaning of the rules of the Senate.

Mr. WHYTE. I do not know whether I shall be liable to the criticism made by the Senator from New York or not in presenting the resolution which I hold in my hand, but it has been usual certainly where resolutions were passed by a municipal corporation or by a State Legislature in the nature of a memorial, either to have them referred to a committee or to lie upon the table. I hold in my hand a resolution of the mayor and city council of Baltimore, urging the Senators and the Representatives in the other House from Maryland to press upon Congress the passage of an appropriation for the completion of the work at Fort Carroll, at the entrance of the harbor of Baltimore. It struck me that these resolutions were in the nature of a memorial, and although addressed to the Senators that they are proper to be presented to the Senate, and laid on the table and printed. I make that motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the resolutions will lie upon the table, and be printed.

Mr. McMILLAN presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of Duluth, Minnesota, in favor of an appropriation by Congress of $50,000 for the improvement and enlargement of the harbor of Duluth; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I present a memorial adopted by the Legislature of Wisconsin, praying for a modification of the existing laws respecting the payment of pensions to disabled ex-soldiers and sailors. It is recited in the memorial that "according to the present law the soldier or sailor who suffered the amputation of his arm above the elbow, or of his leg above the knee, receives a pension of $24 a month, while his equally unfortunate brother-in-arms, whose arm was amputated close to but below the elbow, or his leg close to but below the knee, receives but $18 a month pension, the disability being quite as great in the latter case as in the former, and the victim being quite as effectually incapacitated from the performance of the duties of active life." The memorial prays that the pension laws may be so amended as to remedy this, which they regard as a defect. I move the reference of the memorial to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VOORHEES presented the petition of John G. Campbell, late postmaster at Clinton, Indiana, praying for relief from a loss occasioned by the burglary of the post-office at that place; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented the petition of Rose M. Wood, widow of William Maxwell Wood, late Surgeon-General of the United States Navy, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PADDOCK presented the petition of M. Willson, publisher of Our Prairie Home, of Cloverton, Nebraska, praying for the passage of a bill placing wood and straw pulp, soda-ash, and other chemicals used in the manufacture of paper on the free list, and reducing the duty on printing-paper, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GORDON presented the petition of Alfred H. Colquitt and others, members of the late confederate army, praying that the Secretary of War be requested to compile and publish, in text form, the knowledge by which the positions and movements of troops were laid down on the engineer maps of the battle of Gettysburgh, together with a new edition of the maps; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, presented additional papers in the case of the claim of Henry Head, of Quincy, Illinois, for cavalry and other equipments furnished by him during the late war, to accompany the bill (S. No. 961) for the relief of Henry Head, of Quincy; which were referred to the Committee on Claims.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BAYARD, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1253) prohibiting the arrest of election officers on election day, reported it without amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to state that this is not the unanimous report of the Committee on the Judiciary, but is agreed to by a majority. Some other members of the committee, as well as myself, dissent from the conclusion of the report.

Mr. McPHERSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Thomas McGeehan, a disabled soldier, praying for an increase of pension, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Moses Coffy, of Casey County, Kentucky, praying for an increase of pension, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1597) granting a pension to Patsy Davenport, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1070) granting a pension to Jacob H. Eppler, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. THURMAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1421) to make the crime of rape in the District of Columbia punishable with death, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to say that I am not able to concur with the committee, and I believe some other Senators are not, in the conclusion to which they have come. I ask leave to submit in the course of a day or two the views of the minority in writing.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. To this request the Chair hears no objection.

Mr. THURMAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them, severally, without amendment:

A bill (H. R. No. 3109) to remove disabilities of I. Wilkinson;

A bill (H. R. No. 3328) to remove the political disabilities of John Owins, of Portsmouth, Virginia;

A bill (H. R. No. 3998) to remove the political disabilities of Charles Carroll Simms, of Virginia; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3832) to remove the political disabilities of Joseph A. Seawell, of Virginia.

Mr. THURMAN. I am instructed by the same committee, to which were referred the bill (H. R. No. 3064) to remove the political disabilities of W. S. Maxwell, of Tennessee, and also the bill (S. No. 892) to remove the political disabilities of William S. Maxwell, of Tennessee, to make a written report showing that by a general law Mr. Maxwell's disabilities have been removed and that there is no necessity for these bills. Therefore we recommend the indefinite postponement of the bills, and ask, as it is a matter of some general interest and concerns perhaps a number of other cases, that the report be printed.

The bills were postponed indefinitely, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. FARLEY, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 873) granting a pension to George W. Wickwire, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. CALL, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 339) granting a pension to A. W. Richards, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 975) granting a pension to James O. McKenna, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 898) granting a pension to Mary A. Davis, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report; which was ordered to be printed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. VOORHEES asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1471) granting a pension to Mrs. Rose M. Wood; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1472) authorizing the President to appoint Charles Ogden Wood a captain in the United States Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I ask leave to introduce two bills. By way of explanation I wish to say that a bill similar to one of them was introduced in the House and is pending there before the Committee on Agriculture. The other is a bill prepared by a gentleman engaged largely in agriculture and in the cattle trade. They relate to the subject of pleuro-pneumonia which is being considered by the Committee on Agriculture, and we desire to procure all the information we can get upon the subject.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 1473) for the suppression of infectious and contagious diseases of domestic animals; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 1474) for the suppression and prevention of the pleuro-pneumonia in neat cattle; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. KERNAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1475) to change the name of the steamer J. H. Kelly to John Thorn; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WITHERS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1476) for the relief of the heirs of William Selden, late United States marshal for the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. WITHERS. I am a little at a loss to know what is the proper committee to which the bill ought to be referred. The subject of the bill was passed on by the Committee on Appropriations and placed in the sundry civil bill last year, but went off on the committee of conference. However, as it is somewhat in the nature of a claim, I move the reference of the bill to the Committee on Claims, together with the accompanying papers, and ask that the committee make a speedy report, it having already passed the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ROLLINS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1477) for the punishment of tramps in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. KELLOGG asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1478) for the relief of Lizzie D. Clarke, administratrix of the estate of Thomas L. Clarke, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FERRY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1479) to authorize the President to appoint Ordnance-Sergeant William Marshall, of the United States Army, a second lieutenant and place him upon the retired list; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PLUMB asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1480) for the relief of Edward Fenlon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1481) to amend section 3689 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. KIRKWOOD (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1482) for the relief of Morse K. Taylor, captain and assistant surgeon United States Army; which was read twice by its title, together with the accompanying papers, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. McPHERSON (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1483) to amend the patent laws; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 5089) directing the issue of a duplicate check to Elizabeth D. Thomas, a pensioner of the United States, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

ALBERT V. CONWAY.

On motion of Mr. ALLISON, it was Ordered, That the bill (H. R. No. 768) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue bonds to Albert V. Conway, substituted trustee for certain registered United States bonds, redeemed or assigned by the Government upon forged assignments, be recommitted to the Committee on Finance.

INTEREST ON WAR CLAIMS.

Mr. McDONALD. A few days since a bill (S. No. 10) to reimburse the several States for interest paid on war loans, and for other purposes, was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary adversely. I was not in the Senate at the time the report was made. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. DAVIS] and myself dissent from that report, and we desire to file our views in dissent from it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is in the nature of a minority report, the Chair understands?

Mr. McDONALD. Yes, sir; I ask that it be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The views of the minority will be printed.

RIVER IMPROVEMENTS.

Mr. MORGAN. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be directed to return to the Senate House bill No. 4213, referred to said committee on the 3d of February, 1880, entitled "An act to appropriate money for the continuance of improvement of certain navigable waters."

I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the object of the resolution?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The object is, the Chair supposes, to discharge the committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I inquire what is the purpose of this resolution?

Mr. MORGAN. I will state in answer to the Senator from Vermont that the bill (H. R. No. 4213) to appropriate money for the continuance of improvement of certain navigable waters includes three propositions: the appropriation of $25,000 "to deepen the channel of the Susquehanna River above and below the port of Havre de Grace, and to complete the work commenced in June, 1879, at the Fishing Battery light-station, in the vicinity of Spesutic Island;" secondly, "for continuing the work on Muscle Shoals, on the Tennessee River, $110,000;" thirdly, "for continuing the work on Davis's Island Dam, on the Ohio River, $75,000; and that said appropriations shall be available from the passage of this act."

That bill was referred to the Committee on Commerce. The Committee on Commerce reported back a bill of their own origination containing but one item of appropriation, to wit, "to deepen the channel of the Susquehanna River above and below the port of Havre de Grace," embodying the language of the House bill in regard to that proposition, but taking no action whatever upon the other two propositions contained in the bill, neither reporting adversely nor favorably upon those two propositions, and indeed not reporting the House bill at all.

I addressed a note to the Committee on Commerce, asking them to return the bill to the Senate either with or without recommendation. That note, I understand, was laid before the Committee on Commerce, and it has not been responded to, certainly not in any official way; but I understand that the committee declined to take any action upon the bill at all.

I desire to get the Senate in the possession and control of the bill again so that I may offer it as a substitute for the bill reported by the Committee on Commerce, in order that we may have the benefit of the action of the Senate upon the whole subject-matter as passed upon by the House.

I have no doubt that the three works which are provided for in the House bill are necessary to be conducted, and that the appropriation made by the House is altogether indispensable for the present prosecution of all of these works, which I understand have been a long time established and are under the direction of the Engineer Department of the Government.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then, if I understand the Senator, his object is to discharge the committee so as to bring the bill before the Senate for its consideration?

Mr. MORGAN. That will be the effect of the resolution, certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should doubt, strictly considered, whether an order to return the bill to the Senate without discharging the committee from its consideration would bring the bill before the Senate for action. I see that the Senator's resolution merely is an order to return that particular paper.

Mr. MORGAN. My reason for taking that course was because I thought the Senate might prefer to recommit the bill which has been reported, in connection with the House bill, for the further consideration of that committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. A motion to discharge the committee would be a perfectly proper one, with the views the Senator has, but my present criticism is on the form of his resolution, which commands the committee to return the bill. That does not, by any correct interpretation, discharge the committee from its consideration. It might be that the Senate for half a dozen purposes wanted to see that particular paper. Of course the usual motion is a motion to discharge the committee, and that the rules provide for.

Therefore, I suggest to the Senator to modify his resolution so as to make it the ordinary one to discharge the committee from the consideration of the bill, which if agreed to will relieve the matter of all technical questions hereafter.

Mr. MORGAN. I am willing to make a modification of the resolution so as to correspond with the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont, though I thought in the very peculiar attitude of this case the proper motion was that the bill be returned to the Senate for the action of the Senate in connection with the bill reported from the committee. The case is a very singular one, one not at all usual in the Senate, so far as I am advised. Let the resolution be modified according to the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be so modified.

Mr. CONKLING. What is the resolution now as modified?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be reported.

Mr. MORGAN. That the Committee on Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. CONKLING. I rose to say, having been out a moment, that I supposed the resolution ought to be modified in that respect.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the resolution as modified?

Mr. McMILLAN. Does the Senator from Alabama ask for immediate action?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He did. The Chair hears no objection—

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not want to be committed as assenting to this discharge, for one. I hope the Chair will put the question.

Mr. MORGAN. I have no objection to the resolution going over until to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over on the point made.

Mr. MORGAN. The result will be, however, that if the bill reported from the Committee on Commerce is reached on the Calendar, I shall be compelled to object to its consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie on the table.

DISTRICT CRIMINAL PRACTICE.

Mr. THURMAN. I wish to give notice that in the morning hour to-morrow, which I believe is in order, before the Calendar is called, I shall ask the Senate to take up and consider the bill (S. No. 1408) to further amend the act entitled "An act to reorganize the courts of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1863, and to repeal section 861 of chapter 24 of the Revised Statutes of the District of Columbia, and re-enact the same as amended, reported by the Committee on the Judiciary. It is a matter that is very pressing, and I am urged by the judges of the courts for the action of the Senate upon that bill at the earliest day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. For what time does the Senator give the notice?

Mr. THURMAN. In the morning hour to-morrow I shall ask the Senate to take up the bill. There will be no time consumed in its consideration, I am quite sure.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT DENVER.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will proceed with the call of the Calendar, commencing at the point reached on Friday last.

The bill (S. No. 1269) for the erection of a public building at Denver, Colorado, was announced as being first in order upon the Calendar, and its consideration was resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. HILL, of Colorado, to strike out all of the bill after the word "States," in line 18, in the following words:

Nor until the State of Colorado shall duly release and relinquish to the United States the right to tax or in any way assess said site or the property of the United States that may be thereon, and shall cede jurisdiction over the same during the time that the United States shall remain the owner thereof.

Mr. THURMAN. I wish to say one word upon the question of the cession of jurisdiction by the State. I have nothing to say upon the proposition that the State shall cede the right to tax the land. Some years ago I was taken pretty severely to task by some of my brethren in the Senate for asserting that the United States could acquire title to real estate in a State without first obtaining the consent of the State. I was of the opinion that it could, and I thought that it had done so in thousands of instances where it had purchased land upon execution or other process in its favor, and I think so yet. In fact it does it wherever it makes a lease of a piece of property for a public building, for a leasehold of an estate may be as much real estate as a title in fee, and if the United States cannot acquire a title in fee without the consent of the State, it cannot acquire a leasehold interest.

I have no doubt that it is perfectly competent for the United States to purchase a piece of property and erect on it a court-house, a custom-house, or any other public building that it is within the competenency of Congress to erect. Then it is a question of policy whether or not the State ought to be required to cede jurisdiction. I have always opposed that cession, with very few exceptions, where the exceptional nature of the case seemed to make it proper that the State should cede jurisdiction. Certainly the State ought to cede jurisdiction over property obtained for an arsenal, for a fort, for a navy-yard; there can be no question about that; but why, in the name of common sense, there should be exclusive jurisdiction on the part of the United States over a particular lot of land, one hundred or two hundred feet square on which the United States builds a custom-house, or a court-house, or a post-office, is past my comprehension.

One thing is certain, that although the State may reserve, as has been done frequently, and as Massachusetts did in the case of a fort there, a right to serve the process of the State within the limits of the reservation or the land granted to the United States, yet as was decided in regard to the people living at that fort, they were not citizens of Massachusetts, they had no right to vote, and for a crime committed within that reservation they could not be indicted in the courts of the State, for it is no violation of the State law, not being committed in a place under the jurisdiction of the State.

The consequence is, that whenever you say that a lot of land, perhaps only one hundred and fifty or two hundred feet square, upon which you have erected a post-office, shall be within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, then no crime committed in that is a crime against the law of the State; no such crime can be punished in a State court, and you have so many Alsatis, so to speak, in the United States, dotted all over the surface of the country, in which men can commit crime almost with impunity.

There are other reasons that I do not want to take up the time of the Senate to notice, for I believe we are under the five-minute rule in discussing a bill on the Calendar.

Mr. CONKLING and others. No.

Mr. THURMAN. I thought that being under the Anthony rule we were limited to five minutes.

Mr. RANSOM and others. No.

Mr. THURMAN. Then without any five-minute rule I will take my seat, for I believe that I have said all that I want to say.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Constitution provides that Congress shall have power to "exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever," I pass over the District of Columbia, &c., "and to exercise like authority over all places purchased, by the consent of the Legislature of the State in which the same shall be, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dock-yards, and other needful buildings."

The language of this bill does not follow the language of the Constitution, for it speaks about a cession of jurisdiction. Perhaps that might be taken to be satisfied by a consent of the State Legislature to the purchase of the particular property; certainly the Constitution would be satisfied and no congressional legislation would be necessary; but striking this clause out of this bill will make the case of providing for the purchase of a piece of property in the principal city of one of the States for the erection of a court-house of the United States, a post-office, and I believe a custom-house; certainly a court-house, a post-office, and a land office. That is one judicial building and the same or another building for sundry executive purposes. If any offense is committed within that building by violence in respect of any person engaged in the service of the United States without this provision of the Constitution being complied with, it would be only punishable under the law of the State. Of course, an offense against the records of the United States, the property of the United States, would be reached just as it would be anywhere else, or if it was in transit over a road. And if a mob in Colorado—which, of course, is scarcely a supposable thing—were to surround the court-house there, and some of its members should proceed to maltreat or slay some officer of the United States or some party who had a cause or who was a witness then and there attending, it would not, so far as I know, be an offense against the laws of the United States, and therefore the State laws would have to be appealed to to protect persons engaged in the transaction of the public business of the United States in the exertion of their rights. It is possible that the present statutes of the United States against obstructing the course of justice might reach the case of the mob I have named, as applied to breaking up and disturbing the court; but the private shooting of a party then and there attending, certainly would clearly not fall within that criminal statute, and so in respect of the disturbance of any persons engaged in the executive duties of the United States within this building.

Now, in my belief, the men who made the Constitution acted upon the sound theory that whatever needful places and buildings, needful for carrying on the operations of the Government of the United States, were obtained in the States, with the consent of their Legislatures, Congress and its authority should have dominion over so as to be able to punish all infractions against its laws or wrongs committed against persons connected with the administration of its laws, and to protect the persons engaged in that administration. That was the theory undoubtedly; and the question is whether we have got so far advanced in civilization and State rights as to object to carrying out that theory and to be willing to proceed in all cases hereafter upon the notion that, whatever is to be done, the dominion of the State over the public property of the United States, and over all acts and things done therein except the official acts and things of the officers of the United States, is to be yielded. That is the question. I think I have stated it fairly. There are inconveniences undoubtedly, such as the Senator from Ohio has referred to, and as the Senator from Massachusetts did on Friday,—inconveniences in respect of excluding State jurisdiction, but they turn out to be usually more theoretical than practical, because now for a hundred years in almost all instances of this character, and I do not know but in every one, the consent of the State Legislature, in some form and to some extent, has been obtained, and yet I do not remember any instance of any serious or indeed any practical instance of inconvenience arising from it. In cases of local excitement and disturbance that can be readily foreseen, there would be great practical inconvenience in subjecting the public buildings of the United States to the executive and judicial dominion in the ways that I have described of the State in which they happen to be.

I do not mean to deny what the Senator from Ohio has said about the legal capacity of the United States to obtain title to a piece of ground in a State without the consent of that State. I am rather inclined to agree with him, certainly when it obtains it in the course of judicial process, because that might be said to arise by a necessary implication as a consequence of the other powers that the Constitution has given to Congress to make and enforce laws.

But going a step further and saying that it may buy a piece of land—which I am rather inclined to think it may; I am not quite so clear of it as the Senator from Ohio is, but grant that—the question is whether it is right for the Congress of the United States, in view of this theory of the Constitution which I believe to be sound, to proceed to erect permanent and expensive structures for the administration of justice and carrying on the executive operations of the Government, without obtaining from the State that consent which the Constitution provides for, which the State in some form or other and for all practical purposes has always been willing to give. I say the question is whether it is wise for us to proceed, discarding this provision of the Constitution, and leave the thing at odds and ends, as it will be if no dominion is obtained by the United States over these important permanent public buildings, except the mere dominion of property and the dominion over its records and papers that it would have anywhere. That is the question. I only wanted to state it.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to ask the Senator from Vermont a question if he is willing to answer it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will if I can, with pleasure.

Mr. HOAR. I merely want to ask the Senator's opinion as to whether "the right to tax or in any way assess said site or the property of the United States that may be thereon" could possibly exist, whether it were reserved in this bill, or by the consent of the State or not. If the Senator be right in his agreement with the Senator from Ohio that the United States may acquire this property without the consent of the State, I ask whether it does not follow that its ownership and devotion to the purposes of the Government by the United States exempts it from State taxation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should say yes. I believe that whatever property the United States owns lawfully, assuming that it gets the title as I do for this purpose, no State can tax, just as I believe whatever property a State possesses the United States cannot tax. That is what I think the law is certainly.

Mr. THURMAN. I think that is a more questionable proposition than the other. The Senator from Vermont has said that experience proves that there is no danger from the acquisition to the United States of exclusive jurisdiction over the land on which public buildings are erected and in which the public business is done. My impression is that the teachings of experience are precisely the other way. For instance, there are now over forty thousand post-offices in the United States. How many of them are owned by the United States? I do not suppose one in a hundred, is may be not one in a thousand is owned by the United States; and yet has there been any difficulty growing out of the fact that the United States did not own the post-offices except by a mere leasehold title, and that the property was subject to the jurisdiction of the State? Has that worked any grievance? Has that in any way curtailed the right or power or proper jurisdiction of the United States? Certainly not.

Again, Mr. President, the Senator speaks of the protection of the records of the Government. Can we not make a law to protect the records of the Government of the United States, and to protect the officers of the United States in the discharge of their official duties wherever they may be in the United States? Are we limited in our power to protect records and in our power to protect our officers in the discharge of their official duties, to the places in the United States which are within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States? I am sure my friend will not say that.

There is then no necessity, in order to protect our records or our officers, that there should be this exclusive jurisdiction. I have pointed out some of the troubles that result from exclusive jurisdiction over a little patch of ground, half an acre perhaps, taking it totally and absolutely out of the jurisdiction, civil and criminal, of the State; and, although the State might reserve the right to serve process in it, yet no crime could be committed upon that patch of ground against the State, and without some such reservation of the right to serve process, no process could be served in it.

But take another case; take a case where there is no reservation of the right to serve process, where a man commits a crime, not on this patch of ground belonging to the United States and over which it has exclusive jurisdiction, but commits it in the open streets of Columbus or New York City, and flees for refuge into this ground over which the United States has exclusive jurisdiction, do you not see the trouble there is immediately in getting possession of that man? He may have committed a murder in the street, and he flees for refuge to this new White-Friars, gets into it; no process reaches him unless the right to serve process has been reserved by the State in its cession of jurisdiction or in its consent by which it gives the United States exclusive jurisdiction. That ought not to be. There is no necessity in the world, especially as we are going on erecting so many of these buildings, that there should be so many little blotches on the face of this Republic in which the State laws are utterly silent with no necessity whatsoever for their being silent.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. It is not often that a discussion of this kind grows out of a bill coming from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds; and inasmuch as this subject has been considered there, I deem it proper to say a few words in addition to what I have already said on this subject.

There can be no doubt in my opinion as to the authority in the Constitution given to Congress to legislate exclusively over a place ceded for the seat of Government, as this District. The language, however, with respect to places purchased for dock-yards, arsenals, and other needful buildings, is a little different, although the result is the same. It provides for a cession in the one case, and a purchase with the consent of the State in the other. With respect to forts, arsenals, and dock-yards that are usually required for purposes involving the employment of large bodies of men exclusively under the control of Government, it is very proper that all State authority over such persons should be withdrawn. Navy-yards, forts, and arsenals, where the employees are within such jurisdiction, should not be interrupted by State laws requiring jury service and interfering with the conduct of the public business of the United States. But when you come to a post-office, to a custom-house situated like that in New York, and intended for the accommodation of the citizens of the State, the great public in a great city, no such necessity exists for jurisdiction in that case as in the other.

Every day thousands of people assemble at the post-office in New York for their mails, and so it is in a less degree at every post-office in the United States. If a maliciously disposed person should imagine that he could get an advantage over his victim by committing an offense within such a ceded territory or jurisdiction he might select that spot for the commission of a crime, and the State power could not reach him. If a person, for instance, imagined that in New York City he could secure some advantage by committing a murder at the post-office, which is visited every day by thousands of people of that city to get their mails, he might select that locality for the purpose of carrying out his desire in order that jurisdiction might be taken of the offense by the Federal courts.

I say, Mr. President, with such consequences as that likely to follow from this jurisdiction, I am opposed to it because I see no practical benefit that can possibly result from it. In cases where you have got a large navy-yard, a large fort, with military servants and naval servants and a corps of mechanics whom the interests of the Government require to be constantly at their places, it may be proper, and I doubt not it is, that they should not be interfered with by State law or State power; but in the other cases it is quite different.

Mr. HOAR. I think, Mr. President, it is very clear that the framers of the Constitution had in mind, in the provision which has been referred to, principally places acquired by the United States for military or naval purposes, and in that case they did not provide in terms for exclusive jurisdiction; perhaps they provided for what is nearly the same thing, the exercise of exclusive legislation; but all the instances which the Constitution gives are forts, magazines, arsenals, dock-yards, and other needful buildings. The acquisition by the United States of the title to real estate for the purpose of post-offices, custom-houses, court-houses, land offices, and offices for the assessment and collection of the internal revenue was not in the mind of the framers of the Constitution, and I quite agree with the Senator from Ohio that it is extremely inexpedient to cut out from every State in this Union, as we are multiplying these Government buildings, little strips of Territory over which no State law extends.

The Senator from Vermont said the other day, in answer to the suggestion that no State process would run into a post-office or court-house or other Government building, that the State officers went there by the acquiescence of the United States. But certainly in every one of these public buildings to-day a citizen pursued by a State officer has the right to defend himself. There are hundreds of buildings erected for a purpose which requires the constant access of the public in populous cities in this country, within whose limits it is lawful for a citizen to defend himself by force and to the death against any State officer, within whose limits a fraudulent marriage may be contracted without any exposure to legal penalties, within whose limits a larceny, an assault, a murder committed upon a citizen is entirely without liability to punishment under any State law, and I am afraid that in many instances entirely without liability to punishment under any law of the United States.

It seems to me that we ought at once to put a stop to and reverse the policy upon which we have proceeded in exacting from the States a complete cession of jurisdiction to the United States. Everything that the United States desires to accomplish is accomplished by the character and nature of the property itself. The United States is sovereign for all purposes of its government within its constitutional limits throughout the entire territory of the country. A United States court-house, a United States record, a United States officer, as far as his salary or employment is concerned, are exempted from State assessment for taxes and from all State legislation, and from invasions by State authority or by lawless act of a private citizen, by reason of their public character as an instrumentality of government, or is devoted by government to its instrumentality. Everything, therefore, which this bill undertakes to accomplish is already accomplished. I understand that in the particular case the act creating the State of Colorado exempts this property from taxation.

Mr. TELLER. All United States property.

Mr. HOAR. But without that act the character of the property itself accomplishes and secures all that the express legislation of this proposed statute seeks to accomplish, and I should like to know why a murder committed on one post-office clerk by another, or an assault committed upon a citizen resorting to the post-office should not be punishable by the State legislation as much as one committed ten rods outside of the limits of the post-office. I hope the amendment proposed to the bill will be adopted.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to say a word or two in relation to this point, if there is no objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. MORRILL. I shall not occupy more than five minutes. I merely desire to say that ever since I have been a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds we have followed the form and usage established there years and years ago when such members as Douglas of Illinois, Fessenden of Maine, Bayard of Delaware, and Bright of Indiana were part and parcel of the committee. In relation to this matter we have a general law which requires that we shall first obtain the consent of the Legislature where we undertake to erect a public building in a State.

I desire to put the question to my friend from Massachusetts as to whether we shall not have exactly the same amount of jurisdiction or power of legislation, provided this State assents to the erection of this public building, that we should have under any form of law, for the reason that the Constitution provides that we shall have the right of exclusive legislation over all places purchased for the use of the United States, for forts, magazines, arsenals, dock-yards, or other needful buildings. Now, if the Constitution is operative at all, it seems to me it must be operative so far as to give us the exclusive control of these buildings in every case where the assent of the Legislature of the State has been obtained for the purpose of the purchase. Of course, it is entirely immaterial to me how this matter is decided, but I think it safer to follow the usage of Congress for many years rather than to adopt a new principle.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to say in reply to the question of the Senator from Vermont that undoubtedly we have the right under the Constitution to exercise exclusive legislation in the case of the territory ceded by the State, but the question is whether it is expedient or not. That is all. I think it inexpedient.

Mr. GARLAND. I believe that Judge Story, as far back as 1819, in a case reported in the second volume of Mason's Circuit Court Reports, settled this question in accordance with the view expressed by the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL;] but as I do not wish to delay the star postal appropriation bill, I yield for that, but will say a few words hereafter on this bill.

Mr. WALLACE. I call for the regular order.

MAIL TRANSPORTATION DEFICIENCY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 4736) to provide for a deficiency in the appropriations for the transportation of the mails on star routes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, after the word "year," in line 8, to strike out the following words:

At or within contract prices as they existed on February 1, 1880: Provided, That upon any route where there has been an increase of the original contract price during the last or the current fiscal year for expediting the delivery of mails on any such route, at the rate of more than $2,500 per annum, the compensation for expedited service on such route shall be reduced to the terms of the original contract, on and after the 1st day of March, 1880; and nothing herein contained shall be construed to require the reduction of the number of trips per week over any such route below the present number.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. President, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations I move to strike out "nine hundred and seventy" in the original bill, and insert "eleven hundred" in line 3.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I suggest to my friend from Pennsylvania that the question now is on striking out the words just read.

Mr. WALLACE. I desire to have this amendment come first.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Very well.

Mr. WALLACE. I desire to propose on behalf of the Committee on Appropriations an amendment in line 3 of the original bill; to strike out "nine hundred and seventy" and insert "eleven hundred," so as to make the appropriation $1,100,000.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is in order. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALLACE. Now, will the Secretary read the bill as it will stand if the amendments of the committee be adopted.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That the sum of $1,100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to meet the expenses of inland mail transportation on star routes for the remainder of the current fiscal year. During the remainder of the current fiscal year no further expediting of service or increase of trips on any postal star route shall be made.

SEC. 2. That the further sum of $100,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated as aforesaid to enable the Postmaster-General to place new service as authorized by law: Provided, That the Postmaster-General shall not hereafter have the power to expedite any contract either now existing or hereafter given to a rate of pay exceeding 50 per cent. upon the contract as originally let.

Mr. WALLACE. The Senate will see that this bill relates, as it now stands, entirely to the transportation of the mails on star routes. Star routes, as I suppose the Senate understands, include all other modes of transportation of the mails than those by steamboat and railway. This service includes two hundred and fifteen thousand miles of the transportation of the mails in every section of the country, while transportation by steamboat and railroad includes about one hundred thousand; so that there are about twice as many routes paid for under the head of star service as there are under that of railroad and steamboat service.

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator be good enough to repeat the miles?

Mr. WALLACE. Two hundred and fifteen thousand by starservice, twenty-one thousand by steamboat, and seventy-nine thousand by railroad. The amount appropriated for the present fiscal year for star service was $5,900,000; the amount appropriated for all other means of transportation, $11,300,000.

Now, whence comes the deficiency, for this is a bill providing for a deficiency, in the transportation of the mails in this particular way? The actual cost of the transportation of the mails by this mode of service for this fiscal year under contracts as they now exist as shown by the report of the Sixth Auditor of the Treasury is $7,055,000. The amount appropriated for this fiscal year is $5,900,000, showing a deficiency of $1,155,000 to complete the service on its existing basis. The Senate will understand this is not on the basis of the contracts as originally let, but on the basis of the contracts as they exist at this day. Who is to blame for this deficiency? Why does it exist? Why did Congress not appropriate the amount necessary to conduct this service to the end of the fiscal year, the 30th of June, 1880? Congress did appropriate all the money the Post-Office Department asked for this form of service, $5,900,000. The deficiency exists because additional speed and added trips and new routes have been put by the Department to the service as it existed a year ago.

From the Department the answer that comes to Congress is that there are two thousand new routes created, for the inauguration of service on a portion of which $434,000 have been used during the current fiscal year; and it is also answered that the increase in public business, the increase in the demand for mail transportation, the large increase in the general business of the country have called for an addition to the mail service by giving more trips and by the expediting of speed on old routes, and that these were not calculated for when the estimates for this fiscal year were made.

What is the demand? The Postmaster-General on the 8th December, 1879, sent to Congress a letter asking that $2,000,000 be appropriated for the purpose of meeting this deficiency to cover "the necessities of the service of the country during the current fiscal year." With that he also sent to Congress a letter from the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, which I will read to the Senate:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF SECOND ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., December 6, 1879.

SIR: I have the honor to state that the appropriation for inland mail transportation on star routes for the current fiscal year has proved insufficient to meet the wants of the rapidly growing service.

The annual cost of the service now in operation is $7,630,004, while the appropriation is but $5,900,000. Not only will the present appropriation allow no increase of mail facilities during the year, but it will be necessary to curtail the existing service in order to bring its cost within the appropriation.

Believing that this cannot be done without great injury to many deserving communities, and further that pressing necessity exists for increased service in many places, I venture to suggest a method of relief.

During the four fiscal years last past, namely, 1876 to 1879, there has been covered back into the Treasury of unexpended balances of appropriations for inland mail transportation $3,965,468.27.

I view of this fact, I have the honor to request your recommendation to Congress that about one-half this amount, say $2,000,000, be reappropriated for mail transportation on star routes.

This will enable the Department to maintain the present service, and besides afford a margin for reasonable and necessary increase during the remaining half of the fiscal year.

Very respectfully, &c.,

THOS. J. BRADY,
Second Assistant Postmaster-General.

Hon. D. M. KEY,
Postmaster-General.

Here it will be noticed that the amount stated by the Post-Office Department is $7,630,000 or $1,720,000, instead of $1,155,000 stated by the Sixth Auditor as necessary to complete the service for the current fiscal year. These are very strange figures. They demonstrate very clearly that either the Post-Office Department did not know its own needs or that the Sixth Auditor of the Treasury does not know what the service requires to complete it to the end of the fiscal year, for while the Postmaster-General says two millions are necessary and the Second Assistant Postmaster-General says that $1,720,000 are indispensable to carry through the service, the Sixth Auditor says that $1,155,000 are all that is needed, a difference of $565,000 between the Second Assistant Postmaster-General and the Sixth Auditor.

The conclusion is forced upon us either that they did not know their own needs or that they had some other purpose to serve, either in the increase of trips or in the increase of speed upon these routes, or that they proposed to have enough of money to do all that the Post-Office Department saw fit to do during the current fiscal year. It is our duty, of course, to take the charitable view of the subject, but I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the discrepancy in these figures. The Post-Office Department ask for $1,720,000 as a deficiency for this year, while the Sixth Auditor of the Treasury demonstrates that it takes but at the outside $1,155,000, making a difference of $565,000 between the Auditor and the Post-Office Department.

From this stand-point it is certain that the House of Representatives was justified in initiating a careful inquiry into the subject-matter of appropriations for this Department and probing it to the bottom. The House bill appropriated but $970,000. The demand of the Department was $2,000,000. Your committee have adopted what is substantially the amount fixed by the Sixth Auditor of the Treasury, as necessary to conduct this service to the end of the fiscal year upon the basis of contracts as they exist at this hour, expedited and increased trips, and altogether the sum of $1,100,000.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator if $1,100,000 is what he reported?

Mr. WALLACE. I will give the Senator the figures in a moment. The figures are as follows; I read now from the report of the Auditor:

Summary statement showing the amounts, by quarters, paid and yet to be paid, according to the records of this office, out of the appropriation for star transportation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880.

Amount paid on account of quarter ended September 30, 1879.....	$1,677,355 96
Amount unpaid on account of quarter ended September 30, 1879.....	12,718 00
Total for said quarter.....	$1,690,074 39
Amount paid on account of quarter ended December 31, 1879.....	1,602,577 24
Amount unpaid on account of quarter ended December 31, 1879.....	160,119 77
Total for said quarter.....	1,762,697 01
Amount unpaid on account of quarter ending March 31, 1880.....	1,803,171 49
Amount unpaid on account of quarter ending June 30, 1880.....	1,799,595 71
Total.....	7,055,538 60

F. B. LILLEY,
Acting Auditor.

OFFICE OF THE AUDITOR OF THE TREASURY
FOR THE POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
March 2, 1880.

If we deduct from this the $5,900,000 which have been appropriated for this service for the current fiscal year, and then deduct what is the probable amount of fines upon contractors, which will accrue in the remaining quarters of the year, which we estimate at $55,000—during the past two quarters it was $101,000—we have the amount actually necessary to continue the service to the end of the fiscal year on the basis of existing contracts, $1,100,000, which sum I am directed by the committee to move to insert as a part of this bill as the amount necessary to conduct the service to the 30th of June, 1880.

The amount in the House bill was too small by $130,000, but the Department asked $900,000 more than was needed on the basis of the contracts as they now exist. The Committee on Appropriations of the Senate have taken this view of it, that it is our duty to vote the money needed to carry on the service on its existing basis to the end of the current fiscal year, but no more. We are unwilling to put under the control of the Post-Office Department so large a surplus as either $565,000 or $900,000, but we were willing to treat it as a valid existing service in its present condition until the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. CONKLING. What is to happen then, on the 1st of July?

Mr. WALLACE. The regular Post-Office appropriation bill will be passed before the 1st of July for the succeeding fiscal year, which will make the necessary appropriation of what Congress judges is required to conduct the service for that year. The purpose of the committee is simply to provide that the Post-Office Department should be recognized as our agent in creating the service under the law as it now exists, that we would vote the money needed to carry it on for the present, but that we would examine the subject closely and be governed as to the succeeding year by the facts developed.

The proviso in the House bill suspends or destroys all expedition above $2,500 over the amount of the original contract; that is, whenever the Postmaster-General, under authority of law, had increased the rapidity with which the mail was carried, and agreed to pay an amount exceeding $2,500 therefor, the House proviso cut down that expedition or increased rapidity of transportation absolutely and without discrimination. There were one hundred and seven of these routes, all of them west of the Mississippi River, and the contracts upon all of them would be changed in terms and amounts. Many of them were largely increased by reason of expedited time—indeed, I may say enormously increased. For instance, take the Fort Worth and Yuma route, expedited in 1878. The time that was required for the transportation of the mail from Fort Worth to Fort Yuma was shortened some three days, and the amount allowed by the original contract—$134,000 per year—for carrying the mail thereon was increased in amount for the added speed to $299,000, an increase of $165,000. The route from Rock Creek to Fort Custer was expedited from $10,507.25 to $88,768.12. The route from Bismarck to Fort Keogh was expedited from $2,350 to $70,000.

The total increase on existing contracts for expedition on these one hundred and seven routes made in the last fiscal year, not in the current fiscal year, was $536,819. The total amount made in this fiscal year was $308,946, making a total increase of $1,145,765 for expedition or increased speed alone. Here is a tremendous increase in the cost of the transportation of the mail by star service, $1,145,000, when the whole cost per annum is about $7,000,000. Whence comes the power to do this? Where is the authority under which the Post-Office Department can do this and be within the law? I have the sections of the Revised Statutes and I will read them:

SEC. 3960. Compensation for additional service in carrying the mail shall not be in excess of the exact proportion which the original compensation bears to the original service; and when any such additional service is ordered, the sum to be allowed therefor shall be expressed in the order, and entered upon the books of the Department; and no compensation shall be paid for any additional regular service rendered before the issuing of such order.

SEC. 3961. No extra allowance shall be made for any increase of expedition in carrying the mail unless thereby the employment of additional stock and carriers is made necessary, and in such case the additional compensation shall bear no greater proportion to the additional stock and carriers necessarily employed than the compensation in the original contract bears to the stock and carriers necessarily employed in its execution.

These are the sections under which this power is now claimed and has long been exercised.

Mr. McDONALD. I wish to ask the Senator a question. The Senate Committee on Appropriations have increased the amount of the appropriation in the House bill?

Mr. WALLACE. The Senate committee have increased the appropriation in the House bill from $970,000 to $1,100,000—

Mr. McDONALD. Where is that increase found? I have a copy of the bill.

Mr. WALLACE. An amendment proposed by myself to be inserted now by direction of the committee.

Mr. McDONALD. It does not appear in the printed bill.

Mr. WALLACE. It does not.

Mr. McDONALD. The increase is from $970,000 to $1,100,000?

Mr. WALLACE. Yes, sir.

Mr. McDONALD. Is that understood to be a sum sufficient to carry on the present service?

Mr. WALLACE. Yes, sir; we based our estimate on the report of the Sixth Auditor of the Treasury, which I have just read to the Senate.

It will be seen that an exercise of such discretion as is vested in this Department by the statutes I have read has in this instance been such as to strike the ordinary mind with force as almost an unlimited discretion. Here is an increase of more than a thousand per cent. on the original bid. Take the case of the mail from Bismarck to Fort Keogh; the increase is from $2,350 to $70,000; from Rock Creek to Fort Custer $10,507 to $88,768; yet the power to do this plainly exists under the statute.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator a question. Take the route from Bismarck to Fort Keogh; is there any evidence that there has been any violation of the statute in the additional money allowed them?

Mr. WALLACE. Certainly not, I am not attempting to argue that there has been; I know of none; but I am commenting upon the provisions of these statutes and the practice under them in order to demonstrate that the discretion given is enormous; whether that discretion has been exercised wisely or unwisely is for Congress to determine.

The Department has too much discretion on this subject. Such is the conclusion that all of your committee come to. No Senator can take these statutes and read them and see the practice under them without coming to the same conclusion. This is too much discretion to vest in any executive officer. No executive officer who desires to perform his duty with exactness and without reproach but would shudder at such a responsibility being vested in him.

Mr. TELLER. Does the committee propose any change in the statutes?

Mr. WALLACE. They do, and this bill contains it. The excuse given for this discretion, and it may be a valid one, is that the bids originally put in for the carrying of the mail in this character of service are too low for their performance, and as the Department is compelled to accept the lowest bidder it does so with a full knowledge and understanding that the service is to be expedited or the number of trips increased, or both, and then the Postmaster-General can give the contractor what he thinks will pay him for carrying the mails and what such service is justly worth.

The Department is compelled to take the lowest bid and then may increase the pay, both by authority of law; the whole thing simply results in this: that the Post-Office Department can make just what contracts they please, for they may mold every contract by the expedition of service or the increase of trips on any given route. This practice ought to be ended. The policy of these statutes is a most unsafe and unwise policy, and the practice under them opens the door for favoritism of the grossest character, and if corruption has not already entered there it certainly cannot fail to enter at some not distant day.

Recognizing this as a plain result I also quote what the Postmaster-General, in his last annual report, said upon the subject of these laws:

The operation of the present laws regulating the increase of compensation for increased speed and increased frequency of service upon star routes results in great loss to the Government. These laws (sections 3960 and 3961 of the Revised Statutes) have been in force for many years, and are the source of nearly all the deficiencies in the appropriations for star service which have ever been created. It frequently happens, especially in the mining regions of the West, that, at the time of advertising, service is not required upon new routes more frequently than once or twice a week; but after the contracts have been made and service begun, population increases along the line, and an increase of speed and more frequent service become necessary. Under such circumstances it is clear that the rate that was reasonable for service once or twice a week, through a sparsely settled region, becomes exorbitant when multiplied by three or six to cover daily service. I would therefore recommend that section 3960 be so amended as to permit the Postmaster-General to advertise for new proposals for the increased service, the contract to be awarded to the lowest responsible bidder, as usual. Section 3961 should be so amended that when the cost of increased speed would amount to more than 50 per cent. of the cost of the original service the Postmaster-General should readvertise for service at the increased speed.

Thus it will be seen that the Postmaster-General himself recognizes the fact that too much discretion is bestowed on his Department and recommends a change of the law. Your committee have added to the second section of this bill the following proviso:

Provided, That the Postmaster-General shall not hereafter have the power to expedite any contract either now existing or hereafter given to a rate of pay exceeding 50 per cent. upon the contract as originally let.

If that proviso had been in force before 1879 we should have had no complaint on this subject of increased expedition. The large increase could not have been made; the contracts could not have been changed so enormously; they would have had to be surrendered and new ones made.

Another objection to this practice is that, under the law as it now stands, there is no competition for the increased expedition or for the increased number of trips. The Post-Office Department is compelled to give the increased expedition and the increased number of trips to the contractor who has the route. The Department has no discretion unless it forfeits the contract and relets the whole.

The House bill strikes at all of these routes, one hundred and seven in number, without discrimination, and does not conduct the service to the end of the fiscal year upon its existing basis. The bill, as amended by your committee, conducts the service now in existence to the end of the fiscal year, but allows these questions of wrong or fraud or increase to be settled and adjusted in the bill for the coming fiscal year, when we shall have carefully examined all the facts and are able dispassionately and judicially to apply the knife if it be the remedy. Contractors and officials are equally within our reach, but we must act on facts and not upon suspicion.

The evil effect of the House proviso which strikes without discrimination would be found in the case of the routes to Deadwood or to Leadville, where within the last eighteen months has grown up enormous communities, which required more rapid transportation of the mails, and an increased number of trips per week. The power to do what has been done existed, and in those cases the Postmaster-General exercised a proper and wise discretion; and no Senator surely will say that because the increase is over $2,500 upon these routes we should strike down the service from the railway to Deadwood from a fast mail to a slow one and give them a freight wagon in room of a passenger coach. The effect of that would be felt at once in the East as well as in the West, and so it would be with the route to Leadville. Your committee have differed with the House upon this subject and have eliminated from the bill the proviso which struck down all these routes, because there was no discrimination among them. It is a sweep at the whole and has cut them all up by the root. The effect would be to change the fast routes to slow ones. It would have deprived whole communities of the rapid interchange of business intercourse between them, so much a characteristic of our people. It would, as I have already said, prevent the rapid transportation of mail matter from New York, the heart now of the mining interest, to Leadville or Deadwood and to all the mining camps in the West.

Besides that, it would have given to the express companies the opportunity for carrying that is now possessed by the Government, and where a fast team is given by us a slow one would have been put in its place, while the express companies would have reaped the profit. We had serious complaints before the committee from contractors who alleged that they had taken their contracts in good faith, had their allowance for increased speed made in good faith, put upon their contract routes large expenditures of money in good faith, and that the effect of the House bill was to financially ruin them. Before the sub-committee one of these contractors presented a memorial which I will ask the Clerk to read as showing the effect of the House proviso upon existing contracts. This complaint has reference to one of the routes I have already named.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 1, 1880.

To the chairman of the sub-committee of the Senate Committee on Appropriations having in charge House bill making an appropriation for the postal star service:

I respectfully submit the following facts in regard to star route No. 37110, Wyoming, on which I am contractor:

This route runs from Rock Creek on the Union Pacific Railroad by Fort Fetterman and Fort McKinney to Fort Custer, Montana—three hundred and fifty-eight miles. It was advertised by the Post-Office Department, May 10, 1878, service to commence October 1, 1878, for three trips per week. I had that part of it between Rock Creek and Fort Fetterman stocked, and carried the mail during the summer of 1878. I was a bidder for the through service at $18,770 per annum. It was awarded to George L. McDonough (lowest bidder) for $11,777 per annum; was afterward curtailed forty miles, and $1,269.75 deducted, leaving $10,507.25. I sold my stock to McDonough. He was declared failing contractor by the Post-Office Department about April 1, 1879, and the sureties on his contract were offered the service.

I being aware that a good and fast service would be needed, and had already been asked for by the military of Forts Fetterman, McKinney, and Custer, also by the large cattle and mining interests of that country, took this route from the sureties and went immediately to work to stock the route and build stations. I commenced the service April 14, 1879, tri-weekly, with eight days' time each way, pay, $10,507.25. The long time was objectionable. I was, however, compelled to use it in order to keep within the mail pay.

Petitions and requests from all parties interested were sent to the Department praying for daily service and a shorter time. June 11, 1879, the Department ordered four additional trips per week at a cost of $14,009.66, and an expedition of time from eight days to three days and three hours, at a cost of $64,251.21 per annum.

While I only required eight stations for eight days' time tri-weekly, twenty-four stations were required for three days' time daily. I built fifteen of the twenty-four stations at my own cost, and assisted in building the others. They were stocked with hay and grain to last to June 1, 1880.

Corn is all shipped from Omaha seven hundred miles by railroad, and then hauled the length of the route, three hundred and fifty-eight miles. It averages me $2.80 per bushel, delivered along the route. Hay is cut on the line, and costs from $15 to $50 per ton; having often to haul it fifty miles.

I have two hundred horses and mules, with an entire outfit of hacks, buckboards, harness, &c., now in use on this three hundred and fifty-eight miles of road, put there at great expense to meet the service ordered by the Post-Office Department.

In order to stock this road in the short time given me, I was forced to borrow $30,000 in money. To take off the expedition and return to eight days' time, which I will be compelled to do, would not only deprive a deserving people of the best mail facilities, but would throw a surplus of stock and grain, unpaid for, on my hands, which would seriously cripple me financially.

Fort Fetterman is a five-company post; Fort McKinney is a seven-company post; Fort Custer is an eleven-company post, and headquarters of the regiment, &c. You can readily see that half-daily or three trips per week, with three-days schedule, would be far preferable to daily service with eight-days schedule.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

M. T. PATRICK,
Contractor.

Mr. WALLACE. To that is appended a certificate by the United States district judge of Nebraska, with whom I am well acquainted, as to the character of Mr. Patrick as an honorable and upright man. That route was expedited from one hundred and eighty hours to seventy-five hours. I also have a statement furnished me by Vaile, Miner & Co., of the route from Bismarck to Fort Keogh, which I ask the clerk to read. This route was expedited from eighty-four hours to sixty-five hours.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

We now call attention to the route from Bismarck to Fort Keogh. Saint Paul is the military headquarters for all those Northwestern forts. Prior to our taking the above route all mail matter for Fort Keogh and the other forts in that region went down to Omaha; thence to Franklin by railroad; thence north about four hundred and twenty miles to Helena; then east to Bozeman and Fort Keogh, making a circuit of near two thousand four hundred miles, one thousand miles of it by stage when its destination could be reached, and is now reached in about seven hundred miles—only three hundred miles of it by stage. There was a weekly mail from Bismarck to Fort Keogh via Fort Buford, four hundred and fifty miles—one hundred and fifty longer than our present route. Through the intercession of General Miles, Congress established this route on a straight line, and, except at the ends, not a person lived on the line or within fifty miles of it; not one person had ever been over the line; there was no track or trail even. We surveyed the road; built mounds in sight of each other so that we could keep the road across the prairie; made approaches to streams; built bridges and ferries, houses and stables, seventeen in number; dug wells and built a road through the bad-lands, which was considered quite impassable.

This road cost us near $40,000 before we received one cent; and would have cost the Government more than $300,000 to have done the same work. The building of three hundred miles of road, through a perfect wilderness, and the worst Indian country at that time in the United States, was a task which has never been attempted before in this country by private parties. The result is, that each one of our stations is a fort, as we must keep men enough to guard our stock, for if they are stolen by Indians the mail would stop, and the Government does not pay us for stolen stock, and we cannot afford to suffer the loss. They do not even bury our men who are killed. We must protect three hundred miles of mail communication, which the Government was not able fully to do before our day, thereby saving more than $500,000 per year. Again, the Government pays for transportation of soldiers and supplies on the straight line over which we have built a road, and on which we travel more than one hundred miles a day, thereby saving the cost of one hundred and fifty miles of transportation, which amounts to a very large sum.

On the slow time and the small mail we could get along with thirteen animals and twelve men, as we could travel, like the Arab, with our tents and provisions, making twenty-five in all. By expedition to fast time and six trips per week, we estimated it would take one hundred and fifty men and one hundred and fifty animals; but to-day we have two hundred men on the line shoveling snow, and two hundred animals. We make every trip, although the railroad cannot make one trip in two weeks. Our animals' legs are skinned by the frozen snow from their heels to their gambrels. We incase them with sacks, wet, which quickly freeze, and in this way only can we travel. At the ratio of 25 to 300 we were entitled to more than $160,000 under the law; but we offered to accept $67,650 for five additional trips and expedition. But in this offer we made a great mistake. We did not know that it snowed nearly every day for four months in that country, and the thermometer for weeks at 30° to 58° below zero, as has been the case this winter. We did not know of the blizzards that would cut the flesh off men and beasts like fire, or we would not have made it. The current quarter will not cost us less than $30,000, leaving only $40,000 for the remaining three-quarters, less deductions, which may be one-half, for not running on time.

Mr. WALLACE. There has also been furnished the sub-committee an expense account of several routes by one of the largest firms carrying mails west of the Mississippi River, Gilmer, Salisbury & Co., from which I read an extract as to but one.

THE BLACK HILLS ROUTES.

Mail pay:
34156, Sidney to Deadwood, per annum.....	$29,325 00
Cheyenne to Deadwood, per annum.....	16,800 00
Total pay per annum.....	$46,125 00
Expense account from June 1, 1879, to November 30, 1879:
Employes account.....	$16,098 55
Expense account.....	9,602 42
Grain account.....	22,010 11
Hay account.....	6,734 03
Board account.....	7,363 36
Toll account.....	350 00
Damage account.....	169 80
Wear and tear account.....	12,500 00
Six months.....	74,818 27
Double for the year.....	149,636 54
Interest on investment $100,000 at 10 per cent. per annum....	10,000 00
Total for the year.....	159,636 54
Excess of expenses over receipts.....	113,511 54

Showing that the business they had built up requires a largely increased amount to conduct it over the mail pay, and that the compensation from the mails is but a trifle as compared to the whole compensation they receive for the passenger and other work done on those routes. They carry now about fifteen hundred pounds freight daily, and the rate they receive is about six cents per pound.

I have referred to these specific cases of complaint in order to justify the action of the committee as to the House proviso. There is another point of view in which the action of the Senate committee will be seen to be better for the Government than the House bill. It is that this bill is cheaper than the forfeiture of all these routes under the proviso in the House bill. The amount of one month's pay, which would have to be paid if the contracts were all forfeited on one hundred and seven routes, would be $267,113. The amount appropriated by the House bill for the present service is $970,000, making a total of $1,237,113. The amount required to continue the service on the present basis, as shown by the figures of the Sixth Auditor of the Treasury, is $1,100,000, the amount of this bill as we propose to amend it. The difference and saving to the Government by this bill, therefore, is $137,000 over the House bill, so that from any stand-point this is better than the adoption of the House bill.

We were asked to do two things: to stop fast mails on all the routes west of the Mississippi and to ruin contractors who on the faith of our law administered by our agents had spent large sums of money.

Right here, Mr. President, it is wise to distinguish between the action of the Post-Office Department and the rights of these contractors and the interests of the people. On the one hand our people want rapid transportation of the mail; they do not want the mail carried on a rude wagon, but on the contrary they want it carried just as rapidly as it can be transported in every locality.

So, too, in regard to contractors, no man who has entered into a contract with the Government on the faith of its laws, under power given by the laws to agents of the Government, in the absence of positive proof of corruption, of fraud, of wrong, on the part of the man thus contracting, should be stricken down. It is infinitely better for us to suffer for a time, to bear these wrongs temporarily until we can put our hand upon the wrong, until we can discover where the corruption is, if it exists, and then at once forfeit his contract, make the contractor pay for debauching our officials, and punish the official who is guilty of corrupt conduct in reference to their contracts.

This is the view the committee took of the subject-matter, and in the absence of proof of corrupt conduct on the part of any contractor we did not feel warranted in striking down all these contracts; but we believed that it was wise and just and proper to conduct the service upon the basis on which we find it to the end of this fiscal year, and at the same time await the action of the House in its search for the thieves, and if they find them the Committee on Appropriations will be among the first, without distinction of party, to aid in punishing them, whether they be found in the Department or among the contractors; but we did not feel warranted or justified in striking down the public service on suspicion, in lessening the mail service to the people in the absence of positive proof, or of any proof, nor did we feel justified in ruining men financially who are not found to have been guilty of complicity with fraud or tainted with corruption. We have guarded this subject in regard to the future by adding the proviso I have already read. When wrong is found the Senate, acting in its judicial capacity, will be ready to try and to punish, I have no doubt; but to strike men before wrong is found is to punish with passion and repent when cool.

I make no defense of the Post-Office Department for its unreliable figures. I have no defense of it for the initiation of the expenditure of more money in the fiscal year than the law authorized it to expend, but we have acted upon what we regarded as a requirement that the service should go on upon its existing basis for this year, and that there is not yet sufficient ground either in law or in fact for stopping that service. This we thought warranted us in reporting the bill in the form before the Senate. The fact that there was no wrong yet found as connected with any of these contractors warranted us in sustaining the contracts to the end of the fiscal year; and when we find, if we can, before the bill for the next fiscal year is completed that fraud, corruption, or wrong do exist, that any of these contractors are connected with them, I shall be among the first to aid in forfeiting any contract that exists in the hands of any of them and in punishing them in any mode within our power.

But, sir, as I have already said, it is better for us to suffer for a time than to lessen the means of business intercourse. This bill contains these two ideas, that we wish to continue this service to the end of the fiscal year upon its existing basis, and that we will not punish any man for corrupt practices until they are shown. We also desire to bring to the notice of the Senate the fact that these statutes are full of opportunity for favoritism and corruption, and that they ought to be corrected and amended.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, I was forcibly impressed with the fair and candid statement in explanation made by the Senator from Pennsylvania who has charge of this bill, and I approve heartily and cordially his last remarks, that if there be anywhere in the Post-Office Department, by complicity between any of its officers and contractors, or crookedness anywhere in its business, any fraud, complicity, conspiracy, or corruption, turn the lights on and let us have the whole truth; let it be investigated to the very bottom, and if there be fraud let it be brought to light and exposed; but let it be done as all things else should be done, "decently and in order." And when that investigation is had, if it results in articles of impeachment by "the grand inquest of the nation," and those articles are sent here for trial, then the accused would be confronted with the witnesses against him, would appear in person or by counsel, would have process for his witnesses, and we would know how to proceed decently and in order, in the manner the Constitution prescribes, and would know what disposition to make of the case. But, sir, there is a maxim of law as old as the law itself which says that all things must be presumed rightfully done until the contrary is shown. It is a principle that every man must be presumed honest until the contrary is established, and he who seeks to establish corruption or dishonesty takes upon himself the burden of proof. It is further a maxim of the law that the official acts of public officers within the scope and purview of their authority are presumed to be rightly done, and he who seeks to show the contrary takes upon himself the burden of proof. Therefore the Post-Office Department stands, so far as the Senate is concerned, with every presumption of law in its favor, and not only every presumption of law in its favor, but the statement made in the Senate by the Senator from Pennsylvania that upon investigation nothing wrong had been discovered so far as the transactions of the Post-Office Department and these contractors were concerned, is before us.

Mr. President, it will be a sad day in the history of this country when public sentiment shall reach that point where every man is presumed corrupt until his innocence and virtue are established. It will be a sad day for this country when for any purpose those intrusted with high positions are to be presumed, without evidence, to be guilty of fraud and corruption and complicity with crooked actions. It is not my province to defend the Post-Office Department, but it is my duty and my pleasure to deal justly by all men.

It has been said, and properly, that this bill as it came from the House in its practical consequences strikes down and destroys absolutely one hundred and seven star routes main trunk and important lines, west of the Mississippi River. That is true. I admit that the aggregate political power east of the Mississippi River is ample to strike down all these routes, to crush the mail facilities of the far West and Southwest. But I aver my belief that the Senate of the United States is just, and if we can show that this would be an act of injustice I have no fear that any Senator on this floor will vote against his conscience and vote for striking these great star routes down when justice shows that we are entitled to have them maintained.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I wish to ask my friend if he says this bill strikes any down? Does the bill as it now is strike any down? It was stated by the Senator from Pennsylvania that it maintains the service as it now stands.

Mr. MAXEY. I have already, I think, complimented the Senator from Pennsylvania for the fair and candid manner in which he has presented the case. The bill under discussion is House bill No. 4736. The Senate Committee on Appropriations have recommended that certain parts of this bill shall be amended. I was speaking of the House bill No. 4736 as it reached this body, and I was endeavoring to give a reason why the distinguished committee of which the Senator from West Virginia is chairman acted wisely and well in striking out the provisions of the House bill so objectionable to many of us west of the Mississippi River, and in increasing the amount to what will probably carry the service through.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Then I understand the honorable Senator is speaking of the House bill, and not of the bill as amended by committee.

Mr. MAXEY. I was speaking of the House bill because I want to show the Senate that we have the benefit of the recommendations of the Appropriations Committee; but those recommendations are not yet acted on by the Senate. I was endeavoring to show that the amendments, so far at least as the striking out of provisions by that committee go, were wise, and that it ought to be sustained.

The effect, however, as I stated, of adopting the bill—I mean the bill as it came to us from the House—the effect of that will be to crush down one hundred and seven of those great trunk lines west of the Mississippi River which carry the mails to the frontiersman who has the courage to leave home and friends and native State behind him and go out into that distant region there to carve out States from the wilderness and present them as a gift to the American Union. The effect of this bill as it came to us from the House is to destroy the privileges (so freely awarded to the people of the old States) of those men who are out there building up States. It is going backward from the settled and accepted policy of this country for thirty years, for, sir, the policy of giving the benefit of the mail system and mail facilities to the people of the far West and Southwest was adopted in 1850 and has been kept up continuously from that time to the present.

In 1850 a contract was let from Independence, Missouri, to Salt Lake, eleven hundred miles long. In 1854 a contract of the same route was let; in 1858 the same; in 1860 from Independence, Missouri, to Santa Fé, in New Mexico. In 1854 a contract was let on the same route. In 1854 to 1858 from Salt Lake to Placerville, California. From 1854 to 1858 from Santa Fé to San Antonio, Texas. From 1857 to 1858 from San Antonio, Texas, to San Diego, California; from 1858 to 1861 from San Antonio to Los Angeles, California; from 1858 to 1861 from Saint Louis to San Francisco, and the establishment of this great route was the beginning of a new era in American history which, in the fullness of time, blazed the way for the Union and Central Pacific Railway, whereby there is all rail connection across the continent from New York to San Francisco, while the Northern Pacific is being built to its destination by way of Portland, Oregon, to Puget Sound, and the great southern connection is being pushed rapidly eight hundred miles across Texas to San Diego and San Francisco.

The act under which that grand overland mail-coach route connecting the city of Saint Louis and the city of San Francisco was established was upon an amendment offered to the Post-Office appropriation bill on the 27th of February, 1857, by the then chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, Thomas J. Rusk, Senator from Texas, and the Senate I trust will pardon me for a moment for giving a brief sketch of the circumstances which made this great route a necessity.

On the 21st of April, 1836, the independence of those struggling for freedom in Texas was won, and the Lone Star Republic was established as an independent nation of the earth. Thomas J. Rusk was at that time the secretary of war of Texas and participated actively in that battle in which Texas troops were commanded by General Sam. Houston. In the process of time the Republic of Texas was by final act, on the 29th December, 1845, added to the American Union. A grateful State sent Thomas J. Rusk and Sam. Houston as its Representatives upon this floor. General Rusk was put upon the Post-Office Committee in 1847. On the 18th of December, 1849, he was made the chairman of the Post-Office Committee, and every great measure emanating from that committee, so far as I have examined, connected with the postal department was in his charge as the chairman of that committee. His hand is found in all that legislation—a man bold, honest, fearless, always daring to do the right. It was he, more than any other one man, who established those routes. He died July 29, 1857, at his home in Nacogdoches. General Houston on this floor, commemorating his memory, said of him that "he inherited a holy love of liberty from his ancestry, which matured into patriotism for the good of his country."

Texas was annexed to the Union, as I have said, on the 29th of December, 1845. Then came the Mexican War. Growing out of that came the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, of February 2, 1848, whereby New Mexico, Arizona, north of the Gila, California, Colorado, Utah, and Nevada, were all added to the territory of the American Union. There came, therefore, a necessity for furnishing the bold, hardy men who left their homes behind them, and went out to settle that distant country, with postal facilities. Hence from points on the extreme western frontier of Missouri routes were established penetrating out into that then wilderness, and so it went on up to 1857, when that great route was established from Saint Louis to San Francisco.

The debate in the Senate on the bill, which became law just as it passed the Senate, was participated in by some of the ablest and most distinguished men then in the Senate, Mr. Bell, Mr. Crittenden, Mr. Collamer, Mr. Weller, General Rusk, Mr. Seward, and others; and I desire now to read just a few words in the course of that debate, uttered by Mr. Seward, on the question of the establishment of this great line from Saint Louis to San Francisco. It was in the progress of that debate said that it was an unnecessary expense, a useless expense. It was said also that it was impracticable to establish a route across the wilderness, across the Sierras and the Rocky Mountains, to San Francisco. All that was stated. Mr. Seward said:

Now as to the manner and the terms. The question is whether we shall, if we can, use it [a wagon-road built by act of Congress] for carrying a mail twice a week. The more often it is used the safer the transit will be; and the more profitable and beneficial it will be to the Pacific settlements which we desire to improve, the safer and the surer shall we make that possession itself. But we are told that this scheme departs from the theory upon which the postal system of the United States was founded in bygone and better days—and that our fathers were wiser and more honest men than we are. I have no doubt that our fathers were as wise, according to their light, as their sons; but I shall be slow to believe that the world is degenerating so, and we are more corrupt even than our virtuous ancestors of the revolutionary period. But however that may be, and whatever may have been the postal theories of our fathers, they adapted their system to the condition of the country as it then was. It had no distant possessions, no Pacific coast, but all its possessions were upon the Atlantic coast, and were principally compact; and they framed their postal system for the accommodation of the dense community which then constituted the American people. That community swelled out westward across the Alleghany Mountains, and as fast and as far as they spread out westward the mails of the United States followed and kept up a connection between them and the original stock on the Atlantic shore.

We hear that every day now—

It has been the policy of the Government—perhaps it was compulsory on the people of the United States—to extend their sway to the Pacific Ocean, and so across deserts and mountains considered impassable. Consequently our postal system, however wisely organized in the first place, must be changed and adapted to the changed condition of the country. If it is desirable to have California at all, it is equally desirable that we shall have the customary mail communications with that country. When I shall be found unwilling to extend those facilities to that portion of the American people residing there, I shall then be willing, for one, to release that portion of the American people from their obligation to remain in this Union, and allow them the revenues which will arise from their commerce to establish the communications they will require with all the nations of the world.

That was the utterance of one of the greatest minds of that day and time in the Senate of the United States; and notwithstanding that debate was long and close, when the vote came the bill passed by a vote of 24 yeas against 10 nays. What has been the result? Every single prediction made by the friends of the bill on that occasion in 1857 have been followed out with splendid consequences, and every reason given by Mr. Seward applies with equal force to-day. Mr. Rusk said of the measure that it—

Will be not only an entering wedge—

The establishment of this route—

but contribute in a very great degree to settle up the line of travel between the Atlantic and Pacific States, an object that should command the attention of Congress, and I cannot well see why there should be opposition to it.

That was in 1857 when Nevada, Colorado, and all that country between the Sierras and along the line of the Rocky Mountains was a wilderness. It was the opinion of that sagacious man, Thomas J. Rusk, that the effect of this would be to open up settlements all along the line of that route. What has been the effect? You see here from what was then a wilderness Senators from Nevada, Senators from Colorado, and other of those Territories rapidly preparing to come in as additions to the sisterhood of the Union, and all in that country which only twenty-three years ago was declared to be a wilderness impassable even by an ordinary wagon-road. The policy now proposed is simply the pursuit of the policy which was then inaugurated and wisely so.

Why, Mr. President, in the progress of that debate to which I have referred allusion was made deprecatingly to the policy of reducing the postage to three cents per letter under three thousand miles, adopted in 1851; and that measure, I am rejoiced to say, so beneficial, filled with so many blessings to the American people, was carried through this body by General Thomas J. Rusk, who at that time occupied the same position on the Post-Office Committee that I do to-day. It was through his management that the bill reducing postage to three cents was adopted, which has shed so many blessings over this great people of ours; and the only remaining Senator who was in the Senate at that time and who is here now, standing at this moment by the presiding officer, the Senator from Maine, [Mr. HAMLIN,] has his vote recorded to his honor in favor of a reduction of postage to three cents below three thousand miles; yet that was derided and abused as ruinous to the revenues of the Government, and still it is a fact that the letters and postal cards not only pay their own way but add from three to four millions of dollars of revenue over and above all expenses to the postal revenues of the country, and which are absorbed in transportation of second, third, and fourth class mail matter.

Sir, if it be true, as this preamble says—and that is one portion of the Appropriation Committee's report that I do not agree to—that the Post-Office Department has produced a deficiency by disregarding the law which prohibits the expenditure of money in excess of appropriations, and the making of contracts which involve the Government in the payment of money in excess of appropriations, then what course should be pursued toward the Post-Office Department if it has corruptly and willfully violated the laws? And what can be said of those who as accessories before the fact went to the Postmaster-General and urged him to it? What is here charged as a violation of law, before I get through, I will show so conclusively that I believe no lawyer will gainsay the proposition, was not a violation of any law.

The Senator in charge of the bill referred to the route from Fort Worth to Fort Yuma, and I learn from many papers that that has been one of the grand objective points of the attack which has been made upon the star service west of the Mississippi River. Mr. President, if there be a man living who ought to be held responsible perhaps more than any one man for the original establishment of that route and for the expedition of service on that route, I am the man. I did it because I knew that the good of the country and the good of the State which I in part represent needed the establishment of that route. You will find on page 22 of the book from which I read a letter from Austin, Texas, dated July 14, 1878, addressed to the Postmaster-General, asking the expedition of time on that route, the increase of speed between the terminal points, Fort Worth and Fort Yuma, and that is signed by J. W. Throckmorton, then a Representative in Congress from Texas; D. C. Giddings, likewise a Representative from that State; JOHN H. REAGAN, then and now a member from that State; R. B. Hubbard, governor of that State at that time; H. H. Boone, its attorney-general; J. G. Searcy, secretary of state, and J. D. Stephens, State senator from one of the districts, upon which I placed an indorsement urging what was recommended in that letter.

These are the documents:

AUSTIN, TEXAS, July 14, 1878.

SIR: We, the undersigned, citizens and members of the Texas delegation in Congress, most respectfully and urgently request that service on route No. 31454, from Fort Worth, Texas, to Yuma, Arizona, be improved by increasing the rate of speed thereon, so as to insure the through trip being made in thirteen days instead of seventeen days, the present schedule time, and, as some of our reasons therefor, we respectfully submit the following for your consideration, namely:

1. The unprecedented and marvelous rapidity with which that section of the country is settling up. 2. The commercial importance of the large and growing towns, particularly the county-seats, on the route, and the disadvantages they labor under by reason of the distance they are from the railroad and telegraph. 3. The fact that communities with less claims are favored with equal, if not superior, mail facilities than are herein asked for. 4. And finally, we submit that it is in furtherance of a wise and beneficent policy to lend encouragement and aid, as far as possible, especially with regard to mail facilities, to the brave and enterprising people who are settling in and building up our frontier country.

We have the honor to be, very respectfully,

J. W. THROCKMORTON.
D. C. GIDDINGS.

Hon. D. M. KEY,

Postmaster-General, Washington, D. C.:

I join in the recommendation for increased speed in the service on this mail route.

JOHN H. REAGAN,
R. B. HUBBARD, Governor.
H. H. BOONE, Attorney-General.
J. G. SEARCY, Secretary of State.
J. D. STEPHENS,
State Senator Twenty-Fourth District.

I hereby concur in the foregoing recommendation. My reasons are stated in a separate communication addressed to the Postmaster-General. Fort Worth, from which I write this, is the present western terminus of the Texas and Pacific Railway, and the eastern terminus of the stage line on route 31454. Within the last few years it has increased in population from a small town to a growing young city of several thousand. The number I do not know, but it does a large wholesale and retail business. The country between it and Concho is rapidly increasing in population and wealth. I do not believe there is a route of more importance in the United States, or one more deserving the fostering care of the Government. I urge its establishment, and results have proved the fitness of the claim.

S. B. MAXEY.

FORT WORTH, TEXAS, July 29, 1878.

In that indorsement I referred to a letter which I had written, and that letter is as follows. It appears to have been written from Washington, and that resulted from the fact that it was written on ordinary note-paper like that used here, headed as it is, and I neglected to rub out the word "Washington" and put in my own post-office. It is printed here 1879, but it was written in 1878, in my library at home:

JULY 22, 1878.

Hon. D. M. KEY,

Postmaster-General, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I beg to call your attention to the important stage route from Fort Worth to Fort Yuma.

I presume no country ever settled up with greater rapidity than the country west of Fort Worth, and the stream of immigration is still flowing in. New settlements of course require additional postal facilities. An additional post, I am informed, is to be established on the old post remanent at El Paso.

That was in 1878, just after the diabolical murder by Mexicans of Judge Charles Howard, of Texas, at San Elisario, and troops moved down there into what was formerly occupied as a fort, old Fort Bliss, as it was temporarily remanent; but knowing the importance of a post at that very point along the line of this road, I introduced a bill making an appropriation of $40,000 for the establishment of a post there permanently, which bill is to-day a law and they are building that post. It is the act of the 4th of February, 1879, volume 20, Statutes at Large.

In the unsettled condition of our frontier problem, this is a point to be looked to, and speedy connection with the distant El Paso country important. I was an early and have been a consistent advocate of this great line. I do not believe and at the time the contract was let out did not believe it could be maintained at the ruinously low figures at which it was let out. I am informed that the route has been well stocked, and, from my knowledge of Major Adams, I am fully satisfied that an honest effort will be made to comply with the contract; yet it cannot be wise policy to secure valuable service at unreasonably low rates. I believe the time should be expedited for two reasons: First, I think it necessary to maintain service on this great and important line, which, if not broken down at present rates, will be apt to materially damage the contractors; second, I believe the increasing needs of this rapidly developing country not only justify, but, in my judgment, make it the duty of the Department to put this great line on a solid basis at reasonably remunerative rates to the contractors.

Most respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. B. MAXEY.

That is what I said then. That is what I to-day think. A recommendation was made for the same route by Major Stevens, Delegate from Arizona; J. K. Luttrell, member of Congress from California; Nathan Cole, Representative from one of the Saint Louis districts; L. S. Metcalfe, from the same State; numerous officers of the Army; O. B. Wilcox, general commanding the Department of Arizona; John Wasson, surveyor-general of that Territory; James H. Toole, mayor of Tucson; A. P. K. Sefford, the governor of Arizona Territory; numerous postmasters; Levi Ruggles, receiver, and Charles D. Poston, register, of the land office of Arizona at Florence; S. C. Slade, collector of customs at El Paso; H. F. PAGE, Representative from California; George C. Gorham, formerly Secretary of the Senate, and a memorial was signed by G. W. Gentry and 67 others of Stephenville, Texas; William S. Vutt and 61 citizens of Tom Green County, in which Fort Concho is situated; C. C. Cummings, county judge, and other county officers, and 500 citizens of Fort Worth, Tarrant County; T. F. Rawlins, postmaster, and 57 others, citizens of Throp Springs, Hood County, Texas; Charles E. Williamson, county judge of Comanche County, Texas, and 83 others; and so it goes along through till we come to the indorsement of the Saint Louis Board of Trade. Here it may be asked, why should the Saint Louis Board of Trade care anything in regard to the postal facilities of Northern Texas and Northwestern Texas. Sir, Saint Louis gathers into her storehouses a large amount, say 250,000 bales, of cotton from that region of country. Kansas City and Saint Louis get thousands of dollars' worth of our cattle and they sell millions of dollars of goods to that people, and therefore Saint Louis is deeply interested in the success of that country. Another is from Brown County, Texas, with over 100 signatures, and T. Romero, Delegate from New Mexico, also indorses the application.

Now, what has been the result of that? When the route was established it was fifteen hundred and sixty miles long. It was originally established in 1876. During the panic the work on the Texas Pacific road had ceased. It had gone no further than Fort Worth. Work upon the California Southern road was not an assured success so far as moving east was concerned. What is the case now? That route has already been reduced to fourteen hundred and twenty-six miles by the extension eastward of the California Southern Railroad, and now a contract has been let out whereby in a very short time the railroad will be completed from Fort Worth to Wetherford, Texas, thirty-five miles further on; and for one hundred miles further west of that a contract for the grading, &c., of the railroad has been let out. As these two railroads, the Texas Pacific and the California Southern, approach each other, the necessities of the filling up of that link between the two railroads become greater and greater every day, because the effect of the building of these railroads is to carry immigration along with them, and the more immigration that is carried out and dropped along the line of the roads as they advance, the greater the necessity for postal facilities.

Hence that route to-day is more important than it was when it was established in 1876. The route every day is growing more and more important, because every day the space between the eastern terminus of the California Southern and the western terminus of the Texas Pacific is growing less and less, and the population increasing all the time. West of Fort Worth, along the line of this road, is a magnificent country, filling up more rapidly than any country that I have ever known in the same length of time. Why, sir, when Concho, in Tom Green County, was made a point on this route there was scarcely anything there but a little fort. Not four years have gone by, and to-day alongside of that fort is a village of some five hundred inhabitants, and Tom Green County is settling up rapidly; and it was but the other day that the General of the Army told me that he was going to move the post at Concho still further out west and northwest, so as to protect the people who are spreading out beyond Fort Concho.

That is one of the routes which are attacked, and I have shown who indorsed that. There is another route from Vinita in the Indian Territory, in the Cherokee Nation, to Las Vegas in New Mexico, across the pan-handle of Texas, traversing that one hundred and sixty-seven and a half miles. I indorsed that. I believed it a wise thing to do. I believed it would aid in settling this terrible Indian problem in that country. It will help to bring peace and the road will carry with it population, and thus as the country settles up the necessity for troops in that region will decrease. That precise effect has been had so far as the building up of that stage route is concerned, and already there is a fine town, Mobertie, near Fort Elliot, in the pan-handle of Texas, along which that stage line runs, and it has several hundred inhabitants. The county of Wheeler has been organized in that pan-handle which but a few years ago was a wilderness, and some ten post-offices have already been established on the line of that stage route, and they are constantly increasing.

I find that that route is indorsed by J. J. INGALLS, Senator from Kansas; T. Romero, Delegate from New Mexico; by myself; by John D. Miles, United States Indian agent for the Cheyennes and Arapahoes; by my distinguished friend to my left, A. H. GARLAND; by my colleague, RICHARD COKE; by numerous and sundry others, Messrs. Cole, Metcalfe, Anthony Itner, and ERASTUS WELLS, Representatives from Missouri; William A. Phillips, member of Congress from Kansas; J. W. Throckmorton, D. B. CULBERSON, JOHN H. REAGAN, and OLIN WELLBORN, Representatives from Texas; L. C. Gause, Representative from Arkansas; S. W. Dorsey, D. C. HASKELL, THOMAS RYAN, Senator F. M. COCKRELL, Senator J. D. WALKER; T. M. GUNTER, Representative of Arkansas; GEORGE W. JONES, present Representative of the Austin district of Texas; by General J. W. Davidson, commanding at Fort Elliott; by General W. T. Sherman; and in General Sherman's letter, dated January 16, 1879, in referring to this he says:

The establishment of these transcontinental roads, such as the Yellowstone, Platte, Arkansas, and El Paso, has done more to settle the everlasting Indian question than all the laws of Congress.

I have not a doubt of the absolute correctness of this statement and opinion. I believe that literally true, and having in view the establishment of that route I believed that it would aid very greatly in solving this Indian problem. Why? The men who establish these great routes like the Fort Worth and the Yuma route and the Vinita and Las Vegas route have to establish their stations; they have to do their own cooking, their own washing, dig their own wells, haul their provisions and their corn and forage sometimes for more than one hundred miles. They have to be organized into something like a military organization for the purpose of defense; they are fearless, and the best shots to-day in America are the stagemen along the line of these great trunk routes which are now attempted to be struck down, and their courageous acts when occasion demand prove their value.

On the route from Santa Fé to San Antonio, in 1857 I believe it was, old Big-foot Wallace, now living, drove a stage. He was attacked by Indians, and managed to get his stage into the station, where he was joined by his men. The Indians overcame them, but in the mean time he had taken the mail, and he carried that mail upon his back some thirty or forty miles into Fort Davis and thus saved it. A similar deed was done by Jim Spear, another of these men, in I believe the year 1857. They are men of daring, men of courage. These stage contractors are bound to get such men, or they lose their stock and their whole contract is broken up. Thus the Government of the United States gets the benefit of that class of men without its costing them anything to aid the troops in protecting the frontier and the settlements, which always grow up around these stations.

So much for that. The establishment of these two routes, I believed then and I yet believe, was right and proper. They are building a railroad now from Corpus Christi to Laredo, in Texas, and that road has gone as far as Collins westward toward the Rio Grande. A contract has been made from Collins, the western terminus of that road, to Laredo. That is one which goes down among these one hundred and seven routes doomed by the House bill. Upon the application for that General Ord, the commander of the Department of Texas, a clear-headed man of sagacity, says in approving it:

Besides the increase here proposed, there is great need of increased and better mail facilities between Laredo and Rio Grande City, the post-office for Fort Ringgold; at which post there is a large garrison, and from which quite frequent complaints have come of inadequate mail facilities.

That I approved, calling special attention to his indorsement. Petition after petition came up of like character. Here is one indorsement by Captain Kauffman, commanding the post at San Diego. Speaking of this he says:

Had such means of communication existed last April, many valuable lives might have been saved by timely notice. The fact that the country is now quiet is no security, but is due to the present strength of the Diaz government, a factor that cannot be relied on in Mexican politics.

After receiving many letters on this subject and indorsing petitions to the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, urging him to establish this line, I wrote this letter of April 16, 1879, and it was indorsed with approval by Mr. H. D. MONEY, chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads of the House of Representatives, to whom a like communication had been transmitted:

I am impressed with the belief, and shall, when I can secure time, make it appear in a communication to you on that point, that increased mail facilities around the entire Rio Grande front would be a splendid cordon of pickets in many ways and do much toward establishing peace on the border, and thus a measure of wise economy.

I believed that then; I believe it now; I believe that all these great trunk lines, these star routes, are civilizers. They carry population along with them, they aid in the building up of settlements, and from these trunk lines spring out, as from a railroad, lateral lines, and thus the whole country, all these frontier settlements, ultimately get the benefit of the routes.

But it has been said that the expense of this is enormous—we had better go back to the earlier and better days. We always hear about these earlier and better days. Mr. President, I have made a comparative calculation of the expenses of the great routes which I mentioned a while ago, established from 1850 to 1864, with the Fort Worth route expedited to $299,000 a year. I find that the route from Independence to Salt Lake was eleven hundred miles long, one trip per month, one and a half miles per hour, and the pay was $19,500. The rate per mile, on the basis of once-a-week service, was $77,000. If one trip a week cost $77,000 for one mile, how much would one trip a week cost for fifteen hundred and sixty miles, the length of the route from Fort Worth to Fort Yuma? And if one trip cost that much, how much would seven trips per week cost? You will find upon the same ratio precisely of the contract from Independence to Salt Lake the Fort Worth and Fort Yuma route would to-day cost the Government $758,361. It does, in fact, cost $299,000. It is cheaper than that route was by $459,361 per annum.

Take the next term, 1854 to 1858; the pay was $36,000 per annum, for one trip per month; and at the same ratio the Fort Worth to Fort Yuma route would cost $1,400,061. So comparing it all the way down, even to the last route which was established, from 1861 to 1864, the difference will be found immensely in favor of the Fort Worth and Yuma route. The great route, Saint Louis to San Francisco, was two trips per week, the contract price $600,000, and that by special act of Congress. The Fort Worth route upon the same basis would be $1,038,098 instead of $299,000, which it is; and at the rate of the route from Omaha to Sacramento would be $1,148,757, instead of $299,000, as it is.

So I begin away back in the good old democratic days in 1850, and I trace it down into the republican days from 1861 to 1864, and I show that this route is immeasurably less expensive than either of those grand routes which were established for the purpose of giving the people of the frontier the benefit of mail facilities.

Mr. President, I have shown that these routes were established at the instance and request of both the Senators from Texas, the Representatives from that State, the governor of that State, the two Senators from Arkansas, the Senator from Missouri now upon the floor, [Mr. COCKRELL,] and I should have added his late colleague, Senator Armstrong, and a number of Representatives from that State, the governor of Arizona, the governor of New Mexico, and all the officers of the Army along the lines of these routes up to and including the General of the Army. All concur in the wisdom and sound policy of this, and Army men take the ground that it is of advantage in solving and settling the Indian question, and therefore it is a measure of wise economy.

Now, Mr. President, let us look and see whether the Senate of the United States in fair dealing and justice between man and man—and that is what we all want—can say that the Postmaster-General should be brought here in the manner in which he has been brought here. I agree with the Senator from Pennsylvania that whenever fraud, corruption, complicity, crookedness, is brought home to these men in the mode and manner known to the Constitution of our country, no man living will do more than myself toward bringing them to that punishment they would in that case so justly merit. But it will not do in this country to be making wholesale, sweeping allegations without a scintilla or shadow of proof, and the Senator in charge of the bill says the committee had none against anybody. Sir, we have in that grand Sermon on the Mount for its conclusion, "Therefore, all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them; for this is the law and the prophets." Would we want charges, suspicions, innuendoes brought in against any one of us without a scintilla or shadow of proof, and that, too, in a place where your mouth is gagged, where you cannot open your mouth to say one word? That is not fair dealing; that is not just. The Postmaster-General himself, in his annual report, called attention to these two laws, and said that:

The operation of the present laws regulating the increase of compensation for increased speed, and increased frequency of service upon star routes results in great loss to the Government.

That is like the utterance of an honest and upright man who calls attention to these laws. He is not responsible for these laws. The Second Assistant Postmaster-General in his report, which will be found on pages 54 and 55, for the same year does the same thing. He calls attention to these laws, declares that under them the Government may be injured, and asks that the laws be amended. What else? A bill was introduced in the House of Representatives on the 2d of June, 1879, to provide for regulating the manner of expediting schedules on mail-routes, and it was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads of the House of Representatives, and ordered to be printed, and on the 16th of December, 1879, Mr. MONEY, the chairman of that committee, reported back from the committee the bill now before me as a substitute for House bill No. 3013, laid upon our tables, which does provide for the modification of those laws in such a manner as to save the Government; and yet that bill has lain from that day to this and not one step has been taken in the House, so far as the RECORD shows, toward getting the country rid of these very laws which the Postmaster-General and the Second Assistant Postmaster-General have called the attention of Congress to, and yet they are blamed because there are such laws.

I am no special defender of any man in any of the Departments. I have never been in love with the present administration. I think I have given evidence of that fact, but I believe in doing right, I believe in doing to others as I would have them do unto me. I believe in that great principle laid down in the golden rule in the Sermon on the Mount, and until I see some evidence, until some evidences are brought here of foul dealings, I am not prepared for one to make grave charges against officers, the effect of which will be to destroy their reputation.

Now, Mr. President, let us look at this preamble. In the first place there is no necessity for this preamble, because it does not aid the bill at all. It is not necessary to explain the bill. The bill is to provide for a contemplated deficiency, not a deficiency now existing, for there is none, and the Postmaster-General tells you distinctly that there will not be any, but it provides for a contemplated deficiency in the event that the postal service is conducted on the same scale on which it is conducted now. The preamble charges that—

Whereas there is a deficiency in the appropriations made by Congress for the star postal service of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, caused by the Post-Office Department disregarding the law which prohibits the expenditure of money in excess of appropriations, or the making of contracts which involve the Government for the payment of money in excess of appropriations.

What law? What law has been disregarded? We are told this is the law:

SEC. 3679. No Department of the Government shall expend, in any one fiscal year, any sum in excess of appropriations made by Congress for that fiscal year, or involve the Government in any contract for the future payment of money in excess of such appropriations.

If the Postmaster-General had already expended $5,900,000 which have been given to him by Congress for this purpose, then there would be some reason for that charge; but of that amount he had on the 31st day of December at the close of the first two quarters of the fiscal year expended $3,452,771.40, which taken from the appropriation of $5,900,000, left in his hands a balance at that date, the 31st of December last, of $2,447,228.60.

Then the estimates are made for the next two quarters: the first quarter of the current year $1,800,000 in round numbers, and for the second quarter $1,799,000, total $3,600,000. With the balance on hand December 31, only $2,447,000, there is a contemplated deficiency, provided the business is conducted on the same scale on which it is conducted now, of $1,155,538.60. To that must be added $40,000 for service for the special post-offices, raising it to $1,199,000, and from this should be deducted fines amounting to $101,659.80. I would say at least in the item of fines the Postmaster-General has been reasonably prompt.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Will my friend allow me a word on that point? He argues that the Postmaster-General has judiciously and properly expended this money. If so, why are we considering an $1,100,000 deficiency now? Why is that? If the Senator's position is right we ought to pass no bill. I will not ask the Senator why the order was given to stop the mails.

Mr. MAXEY. If the Senator from West Virginia had watched the legal argument which I have made he would have understood that his question has no application whatever. It does not turn upon the question, should the Postmaster-General have exercised his discretion, but was he justified in its exercise? He is charged in the preamble with violating the law, and I say he has not done it. That is the point, and I propose to prove it.

As I have stated, at the time he made this communication to Congress on the 6th of December, 1879, there were then, and up to the 31st day of that month, twenty-five days after that, $2,447,228.60 in his hands. He then notified Congress that this amount would not conduct the business for the next two quarters of the fiscal year as he had done it the previous two quarters, and for that reason he asked Congress to give him an additional amount in order that the business might be conducted on the same basis. He gave his reasons why he made that request, for he said, what we know to be true, that since business had revived after the disappearance of the panic last fall the postal business had revived amazingly. And let me give an evidence of it; for I say to you the Post-Office Department, as a close inspection will show, is as good an indication of business as the barometer is of the weather. If you will compare the postage receipts for the year 1879 with the year 1880 you will find that there were collected from postage-stamps, stamped envelopes, and postal cards for the month of February, 1879, $1,948,104, and for the corresponding month of 1880, last month, $2,241,978.22, or an increase in the revenues of the Post-Office Department from the items of postage-stamps, stamped envelopes, and postal cards alone, in one single month, of $293,874.22, which for twelve months would amount to $3,326,490.04 increase of postal revenues this present year over last year. As an evidence, in the country where I live the people have, last fall and winter, received large amounts of money from their crops of cotton; the great West have their millions of money circulating that they received from their magnificent crop of wheat; and the whole country to-day is on the up-grade; business prospers everywhere, and as that business prospers the revenues of the Post-Office increase correspondingly.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. My friend gives facts as to the increase of the Post-Office business and the increase of revenue—but let me ask him what becomes of it? Does it go into the Treasury? That very fact shows that there ought not to be a deficiency if the Post-Office revenue is increasing as largely as the Senator says, and I admit it. But what becomes of it? It is used by the Post-Office; and there should be no deficiency; and that is one of the reasons why we think there has been improper use of the amounts heretofore appropriated. We think so from the fact that there is a large increase of revenue, and that increase has been used by the Department. Every dollar of it is already appropriated for the use of the Postmaster-General. The more stamps are sold and the more general the increase of the Post-Office revenues, the less excuse is there for a deficiency; but instead of preventing a deficiency the deficiency is growing larger. The Senator says himself that the Postmaster-General has told us that he wanted two millions instead of one.

Mr. MAXEY. I gave way for a question, not for a speech. Now, Mr. President, I shall reply as best I know how. The Senator wants to know if these three or four million go into the postal revenues over and above that which is necessary to carry the letters written by the great mass of the people, what becomes of that three or four million dollars? I would ask if the Postmaster-General has spent one solitary dollar except what he is authorized to spend by law. If he has, then come forward with your charges. If you cannot establish that, then blame your laws for wasting, as you call it, that three or four million. Where does it go? You carry your newspapers, and we all know how that was done, through the mails at a rate which does not pay back into the postal revenues what has to be paid out of those revenues for carrying them. You carry your periodicals and all that at a cheap rate, and then you carry four-pound packages of merchandise at an expense of one cent an ounce. You carry four pounds of merchandise for sixty-four cents when you charge three cents for a half ounce of letter. If half an ounce of letter cost three cents what ought sixty-four ounces of this mail-matter to cost at the same ratio? The postal revenues are expended because your second, third, and fourth-class mail matter does not pay its way. We make the laws. I am not saying that those laws are unwise, because I am not one of those who care so much whether the Post-Office Department pays its way or not, so the people get the benefit and want the facilities.

I believe that the postal service is nearer to the people than any other service in this entire Government. The letters are carried and spread all over this great land by this system, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from the shores of Florida up into the ice-bound regions of Alaska. The mails go everywhere. Under our Constitution the United States has a monopoly of the mails; and having made it a penal offense for private carriers to carry the mails the United States, which has exercised this monopoly, ought to do it so that the people all over this great land of ours may have their mails and have them at reasonable prices. That is my belief about it; and whether to comply with that requires more than those revenues is not the primary question. The primary question is to see that everybody gets his mail.

I have shown that so far as section 3679 is concerned it is not violated, because the fiscal year is not out, and for the last two quarters, this being the third quarter of that year, there are nearly two millions and a half of dollars left over December 31, 1879, to go on these quarters. The Postmaster-General in reply to the Appropriations Committee distinctly told them that he not only had now no deficiency whatever, but that he would not have any, for if Congress neglected to make the necessary appropriations for the public business as it is now carried on, he would simply cut down the service so as to fall inside the law, inside of the revenue allowed him, and create no deficiency.

I come then to these sections 3960 and 3961. They have been read over and over again, and I shall not read them now. It is perfectly clear that by law Congress has authorized the Postmaster-General to give compensation for additional service on established routes, and has authorized the Postmaster-General to expedite service or increase the speed with which the service is carried between the terminal points of a particular line. The law is upon the statute-book. It is within his discretion to determine when he shall put that increased service on. It is for him to determine when he shall expedite the service, and he must do it like any other man, according to the best evidence before him. I have shown that the Board of Trade of Saint Louis, the Merchants' Exchange, the Cotton Exchange, the Senators from Missouri, the Senators from Arkansas, the Senators from Kansas, the Senators from Texas, a host of Representatives, and merchants everywhere, county organizations, and people all along the line—that he had all this evidence before him, and upon that evidence he exercised the discretion. In my judgment he would not have done his duty had he not exercised this discretion as he did. If the law did not intend to give him discretion, why was it framed so as to give it unmistakably? Its exercise, of course, must be within the law, but if such overwhelming testimony as I have shown did not only justify but demand the exercise of that discretion, then the law does not mean what it plainly says, which is absurd.

That is the law. I did not make it, nor did the Postmaster-General. That law does not permit him to throw up that contract and readvertise, but the expedition or increased service, as the case may be, must be given according to the law to the man who holds the contract. Therefore in putting on additional service or in expediting the time he unquestionably has not violated the law if he has not allowed more for the increase or for the expedition than the law allows, and that is not claimed.

It is said he has made contracts which involve the Government more than the revenues derived from the postal service. Is that true? Here is the law in full force:

SEC. 3958. Whenever it becomes necessary to change the terms of an existing contract for carrying the mail otherwise than as provided in the preceding section—notice thereof shall be given and proceedings had thereon the same as at the letting of original contracts.

Which has no application here—

Therefore, when a necessity exists for setting aside these contracts what does he have to do? Nothing in the world but to give the notice which he gives for thirty days and readvertise and let out these contracts. The rule which has been adopted is that before he can do that, as the assessed damages shown upon the face of the contract itself, one month's extra pay must be given. The contract can be terminated by giving the notice and one month's extra pay. It is a rule of law, I believe, that as a man binds himself so shall he stand bound. I have read what that is. These contractors promised and bound themselves in the following obligations:

1. To carry said mail with certainty, celerity, and security, using therefor such means as may be necessary to transport the whole of said mail, whatever may be its size, weight, or increase, during the term of this contract, and within the time fixed in the annexed schedule of departures and arrivals; and so to carry until said schedule is altered by the authority of the Postmaster-General of the United States, as hereinafter provided, and then to carry according to such altered schedule; and in all cases to carry said mail in preference to passengers and freight and to their entire exclusion if its weight, bulk, or safety shall so require. And that they will carry the mail, upon demand, by any conveyance which said contractor regularly runs, or is concerned in running, on the route, beyond the number of trips above specified, in the same manner and subject to the same regulations as are herein provided touching regular trips.

2. To carry the mail in a safe and secure manner, free from wet or other injury, under a sufficient oilcloth or bearskin, if carried on a horse, and in a boot under the driver's seat if carried in a coach or other vehicle.

3. To take the mail and every part thereof from, and deliver it and every part thereof at, each post-office on the route, or that may hereafter be established on the route, (or on any route that may hereafter be established and to which this contract may be extended as hereinafter provided,) and into the post-office at each end of the route, and into the post-office, if one is there kept, at the place at which the carrier stops for the night, and if no post-office is there kept to lock it up in some secure place at the risk of the contractor.

They also undertake, covenant, and agree with the United States of America, and do bind themselves, jointly and severally, as aforesaid, to be accountable and answerable in damages for the person to whom the said contractor shall commit the care and transportation of the mail, and his careful and faithful performance of the obligations assumed herein and those imposed by law, not to commit the care or transportation of the mail to any person under sixteen years of age; to discharge any carrier of said mail whenever required so to do by the Postmaster-General; not to transmit, by themselves or either of them, or either of their agents, or be concerned in transmitting, commercial intelligence more rapidly than by mail; not to carry, otherwise than in the mail, letters, packets, or newspapers which should go by mail, or convey or transport any person engaged in carrying letters, packets, or newspapers which should go by mail; to carry post-office blanks, mail-boxes and bags, and other postal supplies, and also the special agents of the Department on the exhibition of their credentials, if a coach or other suitable conveyance is used, without additional charge; to collect quarterly, if required by the Postmaster-General, of postmasters on the route, the balances due from them to the United States on their quarterly returns, and faithfully to render an account thereof to the Postmaster-General in the settlement of the quarterly accounts of said contractor, and to pay over to the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department, on the order of the Postmaster-General, all balances remaining in his hands.

It is hereby stipulated and agreed by the said contractor and his sureties that the Postmaster-General may discontinue or extend this contract, change the schedule and termini of the route, and alter, increase, decrease, or extend the service, in accordance with law, he allowing a pro rata increase of compensation for any additional service thereby required, or for increased speed, if the employment of additional stock or carriers is rendered necessary; and, in case of decrease, curtailment, or discontinuance of service, as a full indemnity to said contractor, one month's extra pay on the amount of service dispensed with and a pro rata compensation for the service retained: Provided, however, That, in case of increased expedition, the contractor may, upon timely notice, relinquish the contract.

And it is hereby further stipulated and agreed by the said contractor and his sureties that the Postmaster-General may annul the contract for repeated failures; for violating the postal laws; for disobeying the instructions of the Post-Office Department; for refusing to discharge a carrier when required by the Department; for transmitting commercial intelligence or matter which should go by mail, contrary to the stipulations herein; for transporting persons so engaged as aforesaid; whenever the contractor shall become a postmaster, assistant postmaster, or member of Congress; and whenever, in the opinion of the Postmaster-General, the service cannot be safely continued, the revenues collected, or the laws maintained on the road or roads herein.

I say that this contract is one of the most rigid and exacting of all the contracts that I have ever seen entered into between man and man. In strict compliance with the law the Postmaster-General has kept inside the $5,900,000, having at the beginning of the present quarter, which is the third quarter of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, nearly two millions and a half in his hands. He tells the committees, "I do not intend to transcend that sum. If Congress allows this money I will go on as I have done, giving the benefit of the star service to the poor man, because it is the poor man's mail." It is the poor man's mail. I can understand why a capitalist living in the city of New York or elsewhere, who has his mail laid down on his table three, four, five, or six times a day, may not feel any very great amount of interest in this star service. I can understand how the people of the frontier; how the army, stationed out there to protect the frontier; how the men who have gone out there to build up their fortunes, and are separated from the old land and from their friends—I can understand how this is to them a blessing and only a blessing. I can understand that the striking down of the star service would be the greatest grievance that could be inflicted upon the poor men of this country.

The Postmaster-General says that if Congress will not make the appropriation then he will give the month's notice; he will reduce all these contracts, pay the month's extra pay, and he will, as he answered the Senator from Kentucky, stop that banking man of North Middletown from carrying on the national bank any more, because that man says, as is in the evidence here, that if the mail is reduced down to once a week he will have to stop his national bank. I have been trying to find a patent-right for stopping these national banks for a good long while. If the Postmaster-General has fallen upon a good and efficient plan to get rid of national banks I would vote for the extension of the patent to him for his life. I think it would be the most laudable thing ever done for the people of this country. But in regard to this North Middletown banking man the Senator from Kentucky said to the Postmaster-General:

I think I will put this case to you: I wrote to the Department yesterday—I think I have the letter here now in my desk—that in the county of Bourbon, one of my own counties, in the State of Kentucky, there is a place called North Middletown, twelve miles from Mount Sterling and ten miles from Paris, on a turnpike road where there has been mail service every day, where a contract is now existing for mail service every day up to the end of next year, which has not been changed as I am advised by your department; and you claim that you have a right on the 1st of March, notwithstanding that existing contract, and notwithstanding the good of the service and the wants of the people may require daily service to be continued, for there is a national bank there which says it will have to close if your order is enforced, as I advised you—that you have a right to cut it down to weekly service to compensate for money that you have expended elsewhere? Do you claim that right?

Mr. KEY. I claim this: I claim that every part of the country is entitled to the same sort of postal service, if we can afford it, and where new communities spring up requiring mail service, they must have as good service in proportion to their condition as the older sections of the country, even if it requires the reduction of service in the old sections to do it.

My judgment is that that is exactly right. That is equal and exact justice to all and exclusive privileges to none. There is a bank at North Middletown and there are banks all over this country, but they are no more entitled to postal privileges than the poorest man upon the extreme frontier of this great country. All that we of the frontier ask is equal and exact privileges with those who live east of the river. We believe it to be just. We believe it to be fair and honest between man and man.

Mr. President, I have detained the Senate much longer than I intended. The theory upon which I am acting to-day is the theory which was inaugurated, as I said in the outset, by my distinguished predecessor long years ago, the lamented Thomas J. Rusk. He occupied in this body the position of chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, as I do to-day. I believe in the theory of extending to that great new West the same postal facilities that are extended to the people in other portions of the Union. I believe it just; I believe it right. I have advocated the increased service upon every one of the great routes in the State of Texas. Governor Throckmorton, late a Representative from that State, and myself, perhaps had more to do with the original establishment of that great route from Fort Worth to Fort Yuma than any other two men. I have been the persistent and the consistent advocate of the increase of mail facilities in my State. I have worked for it in season and out of season. I have gone to the Post-Office Department time and again and asked for it, and I have been treated with kindness and courtesy; my reasonable requests have been granted; and I am the last man to turn my back upon a man who has acted as my friend. My judgment is, and I state it here to-day in the presence of the Senate, that in my State the postal facilities are better than they ever have been since Texas was admitted into the Union. I have aided to the full extent of my ability in producing that result. I propose as the State advances, as it increases in wealth, in population, in prosperity, in business wants, to continue to secure to the people all the needed mail facilities that that great empire demands to the full extent of my ability, reinforced by untiring effort.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY] has made a very good speech in the interest of the people of Texas. Much of it needs no answer, because the amendments of the committee and the action of the committee show that we were not endeavoring to curtail or cripple any of the routes in his State or elsewhere. Three-fourths of the Senator's speech was in advocacy of his people at home. That is all right.

Mr. MAXEY. It is very kind of the Senator to say that!

Mr. BECK. It is all right. I believe in that. I stand up for my people, and when I think their interests require it I will be heard in their behalf always. I think the Senator from Texas is right in standing up for his own people.

Mr. MAXEY. As the Senator has referred to me, he will allow me a word. I did state, I believe, that in regard to the House bill, which I was discussing, I agreed with the Senate Committee on Appropriations in striking out that proviso, but the House bill as it came to us did strike down every important star route in the State of Texas. I stated that in reply to the Senator from West Virginia, and so it did.

Mr. BECK. The Senator referred to the fact that I was endeavoring to maintain a route in the county of Bourbon, through North Middletown, insisting that they should have a daily service, which had been established for years, and suggested that was in the interest of bankers and rich men against the poor men of the West, and the Postmaster-General had a right to strike that route down! That is what I object to.

I do, however, deny in the most emphatic manner possible the soundness of what the Senator from Texas terms his legal propositions, which are substantially that the Postmaster-General has a right to expend the money given to his Department by Congress for a specific purpose as he sees fit, thereby creating a deficiency in the star service, and maintaining that he may make contracts exceeding the appropriations given him, and then place Congress in duress and coerce out of us, whether we are willing or not, all the money he may say is necessary to conclude the service for the year, and in the event of our failure to comply with his demands close the mails of the country. That is what the Postmaster-General proposes to do; that is what the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads declares he has the right to do under the law. The Senator from Texas insists that the Postmaster-General has the right to strike down as many routes as he sees fit in order to keep his expenditures during the year within the appropriations that we make, although he may have expended the money in ways unknown to and not contemplated by Congress.

There is no denying the fact that the Postmaster-General has done so. There is no denying the fact that he has done so willfully, with full knowledge of the fact that he was disobeying the law. His conduct was not the result of accident or mistake. If it had been, if he had unintentionally, in consequence of the growth of the country, gone a little beyond the appropriations made by law, we would have said, "All right," and would have relieved him; but when he comes and tells us, and when the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads tells us, that the Postmaster-General has the legal right to spend in six months the money we give him for the service of a year, and close all the mails in the country for the remaining six months, unless Congress will give him as much more or double as much more as was originally asked for and given him, I deny that he has any such right or authority. Whenever he does it he is guilty of a wrong. He is forcing a deficiency upon us by reason of his having violated the law. That is what we say and all we say in the preamble to the bill, the truth of which I propose to maintain.

What are the facts? The Postmaster-General is required by law to furnish his estimates of what is necessary for the existing star service and its probable increase. He did furnish the estimates to maintain for the whole year all the routes in the country then existing, and for what he supposed was the necessary increase of the service. He said $5,900,000 was a sum sufficient for that purpose, and Congress gave him every dollar that he asked. What did we give it to him for? Read the law. The title of it will show it all:

An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated for the service of the Post-Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1880, out of any money in the Treasury arising from the revenues of said Department, in conformity to the act of July 2, 1836, as follows:

We gave it for the service of the year, not for the service during six or nine months. We gave it to maintain existing routes in the condition in which they were then existing, unless some good cause intervened whereby he could, without detriment to the public service, cut them down. What does he do? What does he tell us on the 8th of December last? Remember, when he sent his annual report to us the 1st day of last December he never intimated that there was a deficiency for this year, but on the 8th of December he sends to the President of the Senate this communication:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., December 8, 1879.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a communication from the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, calling attention to the insufficiency of the appropriation for inland mail transportation for the present fiscal year, and asking that the sum of $2,000,000 be appropriated out of the unexpended balances of former appropriations for that purpose during the past four years, which have been covered into the Treasury, and be made available to meet the necessities of the service and of the country during the current fiscal year.

What does the Second Assistant Postmaster-General say on the 6th day of December? He said to the Postmaster-General:

I have the honor to state that the appropriation for inland mail transportation on star routes, for the current fiscal year, has proved insufficient to meet the wants of the rapidly growing service.

The annual cost of the service now in operation is $7,620,004, while the appropriation is but $5,900,000.

He professed to know the amount required for existing service so accurately that he had an odd four dollars at the end of the large sum demanded.

He had expended, according to his own sworn statement, during the first half of the fiscal year $3,800,000, and claimed that he had but $2,100,000 left. The Senator from Texas endeavors to show that he was mistaken in that, by reading the statement of the Acting Sixth Auditor. How was that paper obtained? We drew it out two months afterward. When the Postmaster-General demanded from us a deficiency of $1,720,004, going into the minutiae, as the actual cost for service now in operation we did not believe that the Department had told us the truth. We did not believe that they needed that much money. The sub-committee of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate sent to the Sixth Auditor, who had all the data before him, by a resolution passed by the Senate on my motion, and instead of an appropriation of $1,720,004 being required to carry on the service as the Second Assistant Postmaster-General certified to Congress and demanded an appropriation for, the Sixth Auditor showed that all of the present service with its increase of trips, with its expedition, with everything that is now in existence, could be carried on for about $1,155,000, even if there was not a dollar of fines collected during the current six months, and the resolution and the facts it developed saved the country $400,000 at least; but for it we would have been forced to pay the $1,500,000 demanded by General Brady as the minimum amount possible to maintain the service with.

The Sixth Auditor showed from books, with which those of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General were bound to correspond, that that officer was seeking to require us to furnish him with $564,466 as the actual requirements of the existing service more than were in fact needed for the service at the time, and if the fines collected for the current six months are as great as they were for the first six months he was demanding $666,126 as the actual needs of the service more than the Sixth Auditor shows the wants of the service require. Was not that enough to put us upon our guard? There were two officers, each of them knowing what the facts were, the Sixth Auditor and the Second Assistant Postmaster-General; and the Sixth Auditor contradicts the truth of the statement of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, and proves it to be excessive by over half a million dollars. All admit now that the statement of the Sixth Auditor is true, and the Senator from Texas has to argue upon the basis that it is true all through his speech. We looked carefully, of course, to see what that meant. It was apparent that the Second Assistant Postmaster-General knew what the truth was. It was apparent that $1,155,000 was all that the Department could possibly use under existing contracts. Yet they were demanding $1,720,004 (so accurate, I repeat, as to come down to $4) as the actual annual cost of the service now in operation, when the books in their own office showed that $1,155,000 was all that the wants of the service required, and, if the fines for the present six months were equal to those of the past, that $1,053,000 was all that they would require. The Sixth Auditor, in the statement I hold in my hand, gives all the figures in detail by States and routes, so there is no mistake about it; there cannot be. Of course we looked with suspicion to see what this meant. We turned to the Blue Book, the official register of the Government; and I desire the attention of the Senate to this Blue Book. I hold it in my hand. It was issued two months ago. Section 510 of the Revised Statutes is incorporated in it on the first page of it. What does it say?

SECTION 510. As soon as practicable after the last day of September in each year in which a new Congress is to assemble, a register shall be compiled and printed under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, of which 750 copies shall be published, and which shall contain the following lists, made up to such last day of September:

4. A statement of all allowances made by the Postmaster-General, within the same period of two years, to each contractor on contracts for carrying the mail, discriminating the sum paid as stipulated by the original contract and the sums paid as additional allowance.

That is the statute law to-day. It required a Blue Book to be issued giving us that information in the month of September last or as soon thereafter as possible. If we had had that we could have verified all conflicting statements and found out whether the Post-Office officials were telling the truth or not; whether they needed $1,720,004 or whether they in fact needed only $1,155,000. It did not come. Why? I read the note on the opposite page of the Register:

It has been found impossible on the part of those having the matter in charge, to supply the statistics relating to the postal service of the United States in time to admit of the publication of the Official Register, in its usual form, earlier than March or April, 1880.

It is therefore deemed expedient to issue the work in two volumes, in order that such portion of it as could be prepared might be available for the use of Congress at its convening in December.

It is believed that the public convenience will in this way be best subserved, and that the division of the work into two volumes will be acceptable to those who have occasion to consult it.

The second volume will embrace only such statistics as relate to the Post-Office Department and the postal service, and will be issued as soon as practicable.

For the first time since the Official Register was ordered it is now divided into two volumes for the purpose of holding back the information that we were compelled to have in order to know what had been done in regard to these postal routes. I have the Register of 1877 in my hand; I have gone back to 1875, to 1873, to all of them, and all the requisite information with respect to increase of routes, expedition, everything, is embraced in every one of the others, and always has been laid before Congress when it met in December without a solitary exception until this year. Now, for the first time, the material facts that we need and without which we cannot legislate intelligently have been withheld and the book is divided into two volumes. That portion of it, and the only portion which is of any value for the information of Congress, to aid in the saving of money is to be withheld until March or April, 1880, and we are treated to this little first part which merely contains the names of the clerks and other things about the Departments for which we have very little use. That, too, looked suspicious when we came to examine it in connection with all the other facts. Why was it done? I have before me the statement of Mr. Brady himself, in which he had to admit that he knew of no good reason:

Question. Is there any reason why this work should now, for the first time, be published in two volumes, and that the issue of the second volume should be delayed until March or April next, except the failure on the part of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General's bureau to furnish this information about the allowances made on original contracts and extra compensation made?

Answer. I should be compelled to investigate the matter before I can answer that question.

Q. Do you know of any other reason now?

A. I know of no other reason now.

"I know of no other reason now," says Mr. Brady. Mr. Cranston Laurie, who was in charge of the Statistical Bureau, and whose business it was to make it up, said under oath that he made all those statements every week, and that they were always ready, that there was no reason for the delay, that he could have them within a week at any time. They were held back not because they were not accessible, for they were ready, and the man who made them swears it, and furnished the necessary facts weekly to the Second Assistant Postmaster-General and to the Sixth Auditor. What followed the peremptory demand for $2,000,000 made in December? When the Department officials found that they could not coerce Congress into immediate action without investigation, what did they do? The fact is apparent that they knew that they were demanding $660,000 more than they needed, the fact stood that they were willfully withholding information from Congress that the statutes required them to give. What was the next step toward coercion? Let the Postmaster-General answer. Finding that they could not drag Congress into action as rapidly as they desired, on the 20th day of February last the Postmaster-General issued this order:

To the Second Assistant Postmaster-General:

That there may be no deficiency created to maintain the star mail service for the present fiscal year, I direct that on and after the 1st of March proximo the service on all star routes be reduced to one trip per week, allowing one month's extra pay as provided by law on service dispensed with.

I also direct that the service placed on new routes since and including July 1, 1879, be discontinued if the foregoing reduction is not sufficient for the purpose indicated.

I think the rapid growth of population and business in the Territories and in the new States, and the restoration and improvement of the service in the Southern States, demand the existing service, and in many instances additional service on old, and new service on recently established routes.

I also believe the public service will suffer by the reduction; but the law requires that I shall not exceed the appropriation, and I am determined to conform to the law.

D. M. KEY,
Postmaster-General.

Admitting that the public service would suffer by his arbitrary act, still on the 20th day of February he issued that order to take effect on the 1st day of March, which he knew Congress could not submit to. On the 28th of February we summoned him before the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate to know by what authority he was stopping or curtailing all the mail-routes of the country; to know by what authority he had expended the $5,900,000 appropriated for the year so as to close or cripple all the routes in the country on the 1st day of March instead of maintaining them till the 1st day of July. On that morning, the very day that he testified before us, he issued this order:

To the Second Assistant Postmaster-General:

In consideration of the action of the House of Representatives in appropriating $1,070,000 for continuance of the star service, and pending the action of the Senate, suspend further action under my order of February 20 until further advised.

D. M. KEY,
Postmaster-General.

We stand to-day with an order merely suspended to stop 10,400 mail-routes and to pay to mail contractors for a month's extra pay $600,000 for nothing, rather (as the Postmaster-General says) than that he shall violate the law. The very moment that he made it necessary to stop these 10,400 mail-routes, or to reduce them from a daily service down to a weekly service, and made it necessary to pay $600,000 out of the Treasury of the United States to contractors for nothing—the moment he put himself voluntarily in that attitude, that moment he was a violator of the law. It is the merest child's play for the Postmaster-General or the Senator from Texas or anybody else to seek to avoid responsibility on the pretexts now set up, when the Congress of the United States had on the estimates of the Department given $5,900,000 for that purpose, which the Postmaster-General said was ample to maintain the service until the 1st day of July, 1880. It is absurd to say that the Postmaster-General may divert that money from the established routes and pile it up wherever he sees fit upon routes not then established, and for contracts not then made, and create such a condition of things by these acts as to stop all the mails of the country on the 1st day of March, or reduce them from daily to weekly service, and pay $600,000 out of the Treasury to do it. He admits he has done all these things. Yet he says he has not violated the law! The legal argument which the Senator from Texas said he was making in his behalf has this significance, no more, no less: if the Postmaster-General can spend all the annual appropriation in six months he can spend it in a month. The Postmaster-General asserts the right to do that. Let me read his testimony. I examined him myself. The Senator from Texas seemed to think I was making a very poor point when I was calling attention to a case in my own State because I referred to the fact that I had received a letter the day before in regard to cutting down the mail from a daily to weekly service. Here it is:

Senator BECK. Unless this increase is granted, then, you propose to enforce the order of February 20?

Mr. KEY. Yes. I do that, Senator, purely to fall within my appropriations. I might state, for we have nothing to conceal about it, that if I put that order into effect, if I reduce the service in other words, I shall have to pay every contractor a month's extra pay. There will be one month's service that we shall have to pay for that we do not get. It will take, according to our calculations, about $600,000 for the extra pay consequent on such a suspension. Of course we must have margin enough in our appropriation to allow us to pay this $600,000 as well as provide for the regular service. When we made our calculation, we thought that to fall within the present appropriation, and to allow this extra pay, would about absorb the amount allowed.

Senator BECK. You have now existing contracts which, if they are not annulled, will require Congress to give you $1,700,000, more than has already been given you for the star service?

Mr. KEY. No, not for existing contracts.

Recollect that on the 6th day of December, the Second Assistant Postmaster-General had said to us that the annual cost of service now in operation is $7,620,004 while the appropriation is but $5,900,000, being a deficiency of $1,720,004. Therefore I put the question to him in that form.

Mr. KEY. No, not for existing contracts.

Senator BECK. For what, then?

Mr. KEY. Something I supposed would be allowed for increase of the service as well.

Senator BECK. About how much is necessary now to make up the deficiency that will exist at the end of the year, if existing contracts are maintained until the end of the year?

Mr. KEY. I suppose $1,500,000 will do it; I am guessing.

Senator BECK. So that you have made contracts already up to the close of the next fiscal year, which if not annulled will require a million and a half more than Congress has appropriated for the present fiscal year.

Mr. KEY. If fines and forfeitures are enforced, that will operate largely to reduce it; but it will be about that, I presume.

Senator BECK. I desire to ask you how you construe section 3679 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which I think while on the Appropriations Committee of the House I either wrote myself or Mr. Dawes, my chairman, did, and by which we thought we had done some good, but that seems now to be doubtful:

"Sec. 3679. No Department of the Government shall expend, in any one fiscal year, any sum in excess of appropriations made by Congress for that fiscal year, or involve the Government in any contract for the future payment of money in excess of such appropriations."

The question I desire to ask in view of that law, in view of the fact that Congress gave you all the money that you estimated would be needed, in view of the fact that you knew precisely what amount of money you had and what you could do with it, is, by what authority you have made contracts which, if not annulled, exceed the appropriations made by Congress one million and a half? I want that question fairly brought before Congress.

Mr. KEY. Those contracts were made because I believed the wants of the country required them, and I trusted that Congress might take the same view that I did. I believed they would. But there is a discretion in the Department that enables it to annul these contracts. I always intended to keep myself strictly within the provision of that statute and to expend no more money than was appropriated, so that if Congress does not see proper to give me any deficiency I shall simply reduce the star service to such a state as will enable me to keep within the appropriation.

Senator BECK. And do I understand you to say that you consider that a compliance with your obligation and with this law?

Mr. KEY. I think it is, to the very letter.

There can be no mistake as to his assertion of executive power and authority. The distinguished chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, the Senator from Texas, who has just addressed the Senate, and the committee of which he is chairman, I presume, would feel that it was their duty, if they had the appropriations to make as the Committee on Appropriations have, to give the Postmaster-General every three months $5,900,000 if he saw fit to expend it in that time, and come here as his apologists and say that that is the law.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The Senator from Kentucky will allow me to say that he should direct his remarks to the chairman of that committee instead of including the whole committee.

Mr. BECK. I beg pardon; that is true. The argument of the chairman of the committee was that acts of the Postmaster-General are within the law and that he has the right to expend the money as he likes, when he tells us to give him what he demands or he will close all the mail-routes in the country. I assert that a more preposterous proposition never was submitted. I insist that Congress will not do justice to the people if we do not insert in the very face of this bill that the deficiency the Postmaster-General is now demanding from us is caused by the Post-Office Department disregarding the law which prohibits the expenditure of money in excess of appropriation and the making of contracts which involve the Government in the payment of money in excess thereof.

I will continue to read what occurred between myself and the Postmaster-General before the Committee on Appropriations.

Senator BECK. I think I will put this case to you—

And this is the case which the Senator from Texas seemed to think such a remarkable one—

Senator BECK. I think I will put this case to you: I wrote to the Department yesterday—I think I have the letter here now in my desk—that in the county of Bourbon, one of my own counties, in the State of Kentucky, there is a place called North Middletown, twelve miles from Mount Sterling and ten miles from Paris, on a turnpike road where there has been mail service every day, where a contract is now existing for mail service every day up to the end of next year, which has not been changed as I am advised by your Department; and you claim that you have a right on the 1st of March, notwithstanding that existing contract and notwithstanding the good of the service and the wants of the people may require daily service to be continued, for there is a national bank there which says it will have to close if your order is enforced, as I advised you—that you have a right to cut down to weekly service to compensate for money that you have expended elsewhere? Do you claim that right?

Mr. KEY. I claim this: I claim that every part of the country is entitled to the same sort of postal service, if we can afford it, and where new communities spring up requiring mail service, they must have as good service in proportion to their condition as the older sections of the country, even if it requires the reduction of service in the old sections to do it.

Then I put to him another question. He had given a table showing twelve routes—I will speak of them more fully to-morrow—in which he had by increase of service added to the original contract price $934,990, of which about $750,000 was for expedition and say $175,000 was for increase of trips, and this, among other things, had caused this deficiency, as he said. When I come to speak of the routes from Vinita and from Fort Worth I think I will show some remarkable facts. I then examined him thus:

Mr. KEY. I suppose the table is correct.

Senator BECK. Now, Mr. Postmaster-General, I wish to say to you just here that the object I have in this investigation is to make the question distinctly—I tried to make it with the Secretary of the Interior the other day when the pension bill was up—that all Departments of the Government in all their discretionary acts must be subject to this law.

And I read him again the law that—

No Department of the Government shall expend, in any one fiscal year, any sum in excess of appropriations made by Congress for that fiscal year, or involve the Government in any contract for the future payment of money in excess of such appropriations.

Do you think you have any discretion which overrules and repeals that law?

Mr. KEY. No, sir; I expect to comply with that law religiously.

Senator BECK. And you claim, notwithstanding that law, that you can make contracts and dispose of the money given to you by Congress in such a way as to create deficiencies during the fiscal year, and close the service or diminish it unless Congress gives you money enough to make up those deficiencies?

Mr. KEY. I suppose the Department cannot be carried on upon any other ground. I suppose there is hardly any year the Post-Office Department has been administered but what, at some period in the year, if the contracts had been carried through as then existing, a deficiency would have been created; but then they regulate it always with regard, if possible, to the wants of the service, or would do so, so as in the end to bring it, as the means will allow, within the amount appropriated.

Senator BECK. And that you can expend as much of the money appropriated for the whole year in a given portion of the year as you think is necessary, even if the closing of the mails at the latter part of the year is the consequence?

Mr. KEY. I cannot do that wantonly or recklessly; but if I do it with good reason, yes.

Senator BECK. You claim the right to do it?

Mr. KEY. Yes, if I do it with good reason.

Senator BECK. Then will you tell this committee what power Congress has over the appropriations, and what limitations put upon them for any service in your Department you may not set aside by that very course of conduct?

Mr. KEY. Well, I do not know. Repeat the question, please. I do not know that I exactly comprehend it.

Senator BECK. I desire you to tell us whether or not, if your construction is right, you cannot so expend the money given to you by Congress for the service of any branch of your Department for a given year as to force deficiencies or cut off the service.

Mr. KEY. Oh, yes; it might be done, I think.

Senator BECK. You claim the right to do it?

Mr. KEY. It has always been done, and I suppose always must be done to some extent.

Senator BECK. Do you assert that that is your right?

Mr. KEY. I have no right to violate the law, but I have a right to some discretion and to some reliance upon what I may think is the will of Congress in the matter. But I have no right to exceed the appropriation already given me.

Senator BECK. Do you think that where star routes exist, as in the case I have put to you in my own neighborhood, which is one of ten thousand, where you admit the good of the service requires a daily mail shall be kept up, you can so manage the funds which are given to you by Congress to carry on the Department (that being one of the then established routes) by increasing service on other routes at your discretion as to make deficiencies which will compel you to close that route?

Mr. KEY. Not to close the route, but—

Senator BECK. But to cut down the service from daily to weekly?

Mr. KEY. That would be wretched administration. I do not know whether I should have the right to do it; but I think that would be a very unwise exercise of discretion.

Senator BECK. Has not your order of February 20, unless annulled, the effect of cutting down the regular service from a daily to a weekly mail in thousands of routes where you believe the good of the service requires that they should continue to have a daily mail?

Mr. KEY. Yes.
